SEC. 4117. EFFECTIVE DATE.—Except as otherwise provided, all provisions of this subtitle shall take effect on the day following the end of the first full fiscal year quarter following the enactment of this act; Provided, however, That the Administrator or Acting Administrator of the United States Enrichment Corporation may immediately exercise the management responsibilities and powers of subsection 1501 (a) of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended by this Act and previous Acts.

Subtitle C

CHAPTER 1—SHORT TITLE, FINDINGS AND PURPOSE, DEFINITIONS

SEC. 4201. TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the "Uranium Security and Tailings Reclamation Act of 1989".

SEC. 4202. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds for purposes of this subtitle that—

(1) the United States uranium industry has long been recognized as vital to United States energy independence and as essential to United States national security, but has suffered a drastic economic setback, including a 90 per centum reduction in employment, closure of almost all mines and mills, more than a 75 percent drop in production, and a permanent loss of uranium reserves;

(2) during the remainder of this century approximately 20 per centum of United States electricity is expected to be produced from uranium fueled powerplants owned by domestic electric utilities;

(3) the United States has been the leading uranium producing nation and holds extensive proven reserves of natural uranium that offer the potential for secure sources of future supply;

(4) a variety of economic factors, policies of foreign governments, foreign export practices, the discovery and development of low cost foreign reserves, new Federal regulatory requirements, and cancellation of nuclear powerplants have caused most United States producers to close or suspend operations over the past six years and have resulted in the domestic uranium industry being found "not viable" by the Secretary under provisions of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended;

(5) providing assistance to the domestic uranium industry is essential to—

(A) preclude an undue threat from foreign supply disruptions that could hinder the Nation's common defense and security,

(B) assure an adequate long-term supply of domestic uranium for the Nation's nuclear power program to preclude an undue threat from foreign supply disruptions or price controls, and

(C) aid in the Nation's balance-of-trade payments through foreign sales;

(6) the Uranium Mill Tailings Radiation Control Act of 1978 (42 U.S.C. 7901-7942);

(A) was enacted to provide for the reclamation and regulation of uranium and thorium mill tailings; and

(B) did not provide for a Federal contribution for the reclamation of tailings at uranium and thorium processing sites which were generated pursuant to Federal defense contracts;

(7) the owners of licensees of active uranium and thorium sites and the Federal Government have each benefited from uranium and thorium produced at the active sites, and it is equitable that they share in the costs of reclamation, decommissioning and other remedial actions at the commingled sites; and

(B) the creation of an assured system of financing will greatly facilitate and expedite reclamation and remedial actions at active uranium and thorium processing sites.

(b) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of Chapters 2 and 3 of this subtitle to—

(1) ensure an adequate long-term supply of domestic uranium for the Nation's common defense and security and for the Nation's nuclear power program;

(2) provide assistance to the domestic uranium industry; and

(3) establish, facilitate, and expedite a comprehensive system for financing reclamation and other remedial action at active uranium and thorium processing sites.

SEC. 4203. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this subtitle—

(1) the term "active site" means—

(A) any uranium or thorium processing site, including the mill, containing by-product material for which a license (issued by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission or its predecessor agency under the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended, or by a State as permitted under section 274 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 2021)) for the production at such site of any uranium or thorium derived from ore—

(i) was in effect on January 1, 1978;

(ii) was issued or renewed after January 1, 1978; or

(iii) for which an application for renewal or issuance was pending on, or after January 1, 1978; and

(B) any other real property or improvement on such real property that is determined by the Commission to be—

(i) in the vicinity of such site; and

(ii) contaminated with residual byproduct material;

(2) the term "byproduct material" has the meaning given such term in section 11 e. (2) of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended (42 U.S.C. 2014(e)(2));

(3) the term "civilian nuclear power reactor" means any civilian nuclear powerplant required to be licensed under section 103 or section 104 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended (42 U.S.C. 2133);

(4) the term "Corporation" means the United States Enrichment Corporation established under section 1202 of title II of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended;

(5) the term "Department" means the Department of Energy;

(6) the term "domestic uranium" means any uranium that has been mined in the United States including uranium recovered from uranium deposits in the United States by underground mining, open-pit mining, strip mining, in situ recovery, leaching, and ion recovery, or recovered from phosphoric acid manufactured in the United States;

(7) the term "domestic uranium producer" means a person or entity who produces domestic uranium and who has, to the extent required by State and Federal agencies having jurisdiction, licenses and permits for the operation, decontamination, decommissioning, and reclamation of sites, structures and equipment;

(8) the term "enrichment tails" means uranium in which the quantity of the U-235 isotope has been depleted in the enrichment process;

(9) the term "reclamation, decommissioning, and other remedial action" includes work, including but not limited to disposal work, accomplished in order to comply with all applicable requirements, including but not limited to those established pursuant to the Uranium Mill Tailings Radiation Control Act of 1978, as amended, or where appropriate, with requirements established by a State that is a party to a discontinuance agreement under section 274 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended (42 U.S.C. 2021). The term shall also include work at an active site prior to the date of enactment of this act accomplished in order to comply with the foregoing requirements;

(10) the term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Energy;

(11) the terms "source material" and "special nuclear material" have the meaning given such terms in section 11 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, as amended (42 U.S.C. 2014); and

(12) the term "tailings" means the wastes produced by the extraction or concentration of uranium or thorium from any ore processed primarily for its source material content.

CHAPTER 2—URANIUM REVITALIZATION

SEC. 4210. VOLUNTARY OVERFEED PROGRAM.

(a) The Corporation shall establish, for a period of not less than five years commencing at the beginning of fiscal year 1992, a voluntary overfeeding program which shall be made available to the Corporation's enrichment services customers. The term "overfeeding" means the use of uranium in the enrichment process in excess of the amount required at the transactional tails assay.

(b) The Corporation shall encourage its enrichment services customers to participate in the voluntary overfeeding program as provided in this section. Uranium supplied by the enrichment customer shall be used by the Corporation for voluntary overfeeding in the enrichment process to reduce the amount of power required to produce the enriched uranium ordered by the enrichment services customer. The dollar savings resulting from the reduced power requirements shall be credited to the enrichment services customer.

(c) In the event an enrichment services customer does not elect to provide uranium for voluntary overfeeding to be used to process its enrichment order, the Corporation shall establish a method for such uranium to be voluntarily supplied by other enrichment services customer(s) which have expressed to the Corporation an interest in participating in such a program and the Corporation shall credit the resulting dollar savings realized from the reduced power requirements to the enrichment services customer(s) providing the uranium.

(d) An enrichment services customer providing uranium for voluntary overfeeding shall certify to the Corporation that such uranium is domestic uranium which has been actually produced by a domestic uranium producer after the enactment of this Act or domestic uranium actually produced by a domestic uranium producer before the enactment of this Act and held by it without sale, transfer or redesignation of the origin of such uranium on a DOE/NRC form 741.

(e) Within ninety days of the date of enactment of this Act, the Corporation shall establish procedures to implement this program. Such procedures shall include, but not be limited to, delivery reporting and certification requirements, and provisions for failure to comply with the requirements of the voluntary overfeeding program. The determination of the voluntary overfeeding credit and sufficient data to support such determination shall be available to the Corporation's enrichment services customers and to qualified domestic producers.

SEC. 4211. NATIONAL STRATEGIC URANIUM RESERVE.

There is hereby established the National Strategic Uranium Reserve under the direction and control of the Secretary. The Reserve shall consist of 50,000,000 pounds of natural uranium contained in stockpiles or inventories currently held by the United States for defense purposes. Effective on the date of enactment of this Act, use of the Reserve shall be retricted to military purposes and Government research. Use of the Department's stockpile of enrichment tails existing on the date of enactment of this Act shall be restricted to military purposes.

SEC. 4212. RESPONSIBILITY FOR THE INDUSTRY.

(a) The Secretary shall have a continuing responsibility for the domestic uranium industry, and shall take any action, which he determines to be appropriate under existing law, to encourage the use of domestic uranium; Provided, however, That the Secretary, in fulfilling this responsibility, shall not use any supervisory authority over the Corporation. The Secretary shall report annually to the appropriate committees of Congress on action taken with respect to the domestic uranium industry, including action to promote the export of domestic uranium pursuant to paragraph (b) of this section.

(b) ENCOURAGE EXPORT.—The Department, with the cooperation of the Department of Commerce, the United States Trade Representative and other governmental organizations, shall encourage the export of domestic uranium. Within one hundred and eighty days of the date of enactment of this Act the Secretary shall develop recommendations and implement government programs to promote the export of domestic uranium.

SEC. 4213. GOVERNMENT URANIUM PURCHASES.

(a) After the date of enactment of this Act, the United States of America, its agencies and instrumentalities, shall only have the authority to enter into contracts or orders for the purchase of uranium which is (1) of domestic origin and (2) is purchased from domestic uranium producers: Provided, That this section shall not affect purchases under a contract for delivery of a fixed amount of uranium entered into before the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) Subsection (a) shall not apply to the Tennessee Valley Authority.

SEC. 4214. SECRETARY'S AUTHORITY TO MAKE REGULATIONS.

The Secretary shall issue appropriate regulations to implement the purposes of this subtitle.

CHAPTER 3—REMEDIAL ACTION FOR ACTIVE PROCESSING SITES

SEC. 4220. REMEDIAL ACTION PROGRAM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subsection (b), the costs of decontamination, decommissioning, reclamation, and other remedial action at an active uranium or thorium processing site shall be borne by persons licensed under section 62 or 81 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 (42 U.S.C. 2091, 2111) for any activity at such site which results or has resulted in the production of byproduct material.

(b) REIMBURSEMENT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall, subject to paragraph (2), reimburse at least annually a licensee described in subsection (a) for such portion of the reclamation, decommissioning and other remedial action costs described in such subsection as are—

(A) determined by the Secretary to be attributable to tailings generated as an incident of sales to the United States; and

(B) incurred by such licensee not later than December 31, 2002.

(2) AMOUNT.—

(A) TO INDIVIDUAL ACTIVE SITE URANIUM LICENSEES.—The amount of reimbursement paid to any licensee under paragraph (1) shall be determined by the Secretary in accordance with regulations issued pursuant to section 221 and shall not exceed an amount equal to $4.50 multiplied by the dry short tons of tailings located at the site as of the effective date of this subtitle and generated as an incident of sales to the United States.

(B) TO ALL ACTIVE SITE URANIUM LICENSEES.—Payments made under paragraph (1) to active site uranium licensees shall not in the aggregate exceed $270,000,000.

(C) TO THORIUM LICENSEES.—Payments made under paragraph (1) to the licensee of the active thorium site shall not exceed $30,000,000.

(D) INFLATION ESCALATION INDEX.—The amounts in subsections (A), (B), and (C) of this section shall be increased annually based upon an inflation index. The Secretary shall determine the appropriate index to apply.

(E) ADDITIONAL REIMBURSEMENT.—Provided however, (i) the Secretary shall determine as of July 31, 2005, whether the amount authorized to be appropriated in section 4222, when considered with the $4.50 per dry short ton limit on reimbursement, exceeds the total cost reimbursable to the licensees of active sites for reclamation, decommissioning and other remedial action; and (ii) if the Secretary determines there is an excess, the Secretary may allow reimbursement in excess of $4.50 per dry short ton on a prorated basis at such sites that reclamation, decommissioning and other remedial action costs for tailings generated as an incident of sales to the United States exceed the $4.50 per dry short ton limitation.

SEC. 4221. REGULATIONS.

The Secretary shall issue regulations governing reimbursement under section 4220. An active uranium or thorium processing site owner shall apply for reimbursement hereunder by submitting a statement for the amount of reimbursement, together with reasonable documentation in support thereof, to the Secretary. Any such statement for reimbursement, supported by reasonable documentation, shall be approved by the Secretary and reimbursement therefor shall be made in a timely manner subject only to the limitations of section 4220.

SEC. 4222. AUTHORIZATION.

There is authorized to be appropriated for purposes of this chapter not more than $300,000,000 increased annually as provided in section 4220 based upon an inflation index as determined by the Secretary.

(A) by inserting "(1)" after "(a)";

(B) in the fifth sentence, by striking "Whenever" and inserting "Except as provided in paragraph (2)(A), whenever"; and

(C) by striking the sixth sentence and all that follows through "Any person who" in the seventh sentence and inserting the following:

"(2)(A) In the case of a claim of entitlement to past-due benefits under this title, if—

"(i) an agreement between the claimant and another person regarding any fee to be recovered by such person to compensate such person for services with respect to the claim is presented in writing to the Secretary prior to the time of the Secretary's determination regarding the claim,

"(ii) the fee specified in the agreement does not exceed the lesser of—

"(I) 25 percent of the total amount of such past-due benefits (as determined before any applicable reduction under section 1127(a)), or

"(II) $4,000, and

"(iii) the determination is favorable to the claimant,

then the Secretary shall approve that agreement at the time of the favorable determination, and (subject to paragraph (3)) the fee specified in the agreement shall be the maximum fee. The Secretary may from time to time increase the dollar amount under clause (ii)(II) to the extent that the rate of increase in such amount, as determined over the period since January 1, 1991, does not at any time exceed the rate of increase in primary insurance amounts under section 215(i) since such date. The Secretary shall publish any such increased amount in the Federal Register.

"(B) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'past-due benefits' excludes any benefits with respect to which payment has been continued pursuant to section 223(g).

"(C) In the case of a claim with respect to which the Secretary has approved an agreement pursuant to subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall provide the claimant and the person representing the claimant a written notice of—

"(iii) a description of the procedures for review under paragraph (3).

"(i) the claimant, or the administrative law judge or other adjudicator who made the favorable determination, submits a written request to the Secretary to reduce the maximum fee, or

"(ii) the person representing the claimant submits a written request to the Secretary to increase the maximum fee.

Any such review shall be conducted after providing the claimant, the person representing the claimant, and the adjudicator with reasonable notice of such request and an opportunity to submit written information in favor of or in opposition to such request. The adjudicator may request the Secretary to reduce the maximum fee only on the basis of evidence of the failure of the person representing the claimant to represent adequately the claimant's interest or on the basis of evidence that the fee is clearly excessive for services rendered.

"(B)(i) In the case of a request for review under subparagraph (A) by the claimant or by the person representing the claimant, such review shall be conducted by the administrative law judge who made the favorable determination or, if the Secretary determines that such administrative law judge is unavailable or if the determination was not made by an administrative law judge, such review shall be conducted by another person designated by the Secretary for such purpose.

"(C) Upon completion of the review, the administrative law judge or other person conducting the review shall affirm or modify the amount which would otherwise be the maximum fee. Any such amount so affirmed or modified shall be considered the amount of the maximum fee which may be recovered under paragraph (2). The decision of the administrative law judge or other person conducting the review shall not be subject to further review.

"(4)(A) Subject to subparagraph (B), if the claimant is determined to be entitled to past-due benefits under this title and the person representing the claimant is an attorney, the Secretary shall, notwithstanding section 205(i), certify for payment out of such past-due benefits (as determined before any applicable reduction under section 1127(a)) to such attorney an amount equal to the maximum fee, but not in excess of 25 percent of such past-due benefits (as determined before any applicable reduction under section 1127(a)).

"(B) The Secretary shall not in any case certify any amount for payment to the attorney pursuant to this paragraph before the expiration of the 15-day period referred to in paragraph (3)(A) or, in the case of any review conducted under paragraph (3), before the completion of such review.

"(5) Any person who".

"(B) If a medicare supplemental policy or certificate replaces another such policy or certificate, any period under the policy or certificate being replaced during which claims were denied by reason of a preexisting condition, exclusion period, rating period, elimination period, or probationary period shall be credited toward any such period under the new policy or certificate.

"(B) If the Association does not promulgate NAIC simplification standards within the 9-month period specified in paragraph (1), the Secretary shall promulgate, not later than 9 months after the end of such period, revised Federal model standards to incorporate all the requirements and standards of subsections (o), (p), (q), and (r), and other changes in law made by the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990, and subsection (g)(2)(A) shall be applied in each State, effective for policies issued to policyholders on and after the date specified in subparagraph (C), as if the reference to the Model Regulation adopted on June 6, 1979, included a reference to the revised Federal model standards.

"(C)(i) Subject to clause (ii), the date specified in this paragraph for a State is the date the State adopts the NAIC simplification standards or the Federal simplification standards or 1 year after the date the Association or the Secretary first adopts such standards, whichever is earlier.

"(ii) In the case of a State which the Secretary identifies, in consultation with the Association, as—

"(I) requiring State legislation (other than legislation appropriating funds) in order for medicare supplemental policies to meet the NAIC or Federal simplification standards, but

"(II) having a legislature which is not scheduled to meet in 1991 in a legislative session in which such legislation may be considered, the date specified in this subparagraph is the first day of the first calendar quarter beginning after the close of the first legislative session of the State legislature that begins on or after January 1, 1991. For purposes of the previous sentence, in the case of a State that has a 2-year legislative session, each year of such session shall be deemed to be a separate regular session of the State legislature.

"(2) By not later than 2 years after the date of enactment of this subsection, the Secretary shall report to the Congress on the adoption of the standards and requirements of this section, including the identification of those States which do and do not have regulatory programs that meet the requirements of this section, and the reasons for the failure of any States to adopt some or all of the standards and requirements of this section.

"(3) In promulgating simplification standards under subsection (p)(1), the Association or Secretary shall consult with a working group composed of representatives of issuers of medicare supplemental policies, consumer groups, medicare beneficiaries, and other qualified individuals. Such representatives shall be selected in a manner so as to assure balanced representation among the interested groups.

"(4)(A) Every 3 years the Secretary shall, in consultation with the NAIC, evaluate the appropriateness of new or innovative benefits offered pursuant to subsection (p)(5)(B), and determine whether the incorporation of such new or innovative benefits into the simplification standards would further the purposes of such standards. If within 90 days after a request from the Secretary, the Association—

"(i) makes a determination that modification of the NAIC or Federal simplification standards is appropriate; and

"(ii) modifies the NAIC or Federal simplification standards to include such additional group of benefits (including accompanying language and format with respect to such benefits), subsection (g)(2)(A) shall be applied in each State, effective for policies issued to policyholders on or after the date specified in subparagraph (B), as if the reference to the Model Regulation adopted on June 6, 1979 included a reference to the NAIC or Federal simplification standards as modified. If the Association fails to make a determination with respect to appropriateness of modifying the NAIC or Federal simplification standards, then the Secretary may make such determination and may modify the NAIC or Federal simplification standards to include such additional benefits (including accompanying language and format with respect to such benefits) as may be appropriate. In such a case, subsection (g)(2)(A) shall be applied in each State, effective for policies issued to policyholders on or after the date specified in subparagraph (B), as if the reference to the Model Regulation adopted on June 6, 1979 included a reference to the NAIC or Federal simplification standards as modified.

"(B) The date specified in this subparagraph for a State is the earlier of the date the State adopts the modifications to the NAIC or Federal simplification standards or 1 year after the date the Association or the Secretary first adopts the modifications to such standards, except that, in the case of a State that the Secretary identifies, in consultation with the Association, as—

"(i) requiring State legislation (other than appropriating funds) in order for medicare supplemental policies to meet the modified NAIC or Federal simplification standards, but

"(ii) having a legislature which is not scheduled to meet within the 1-year period after the date the Association or Secretary first adopts the modifications to such standards, the date specified in this subparagraph is the first day of the first calendar year after the close of the first legislative session of the State legislature that begins after the date the Association or the Secretary first adopts such modifications. For the purposes of the previous sentence, in the case of a State that has a 2-year legislative session, each year of the legislative session shall be deemed to be a separate regular session of the State legislature.

"(5) If benefits under this title are changed and the Secretary determines, in consultation with the Association, that changes in the simplification standards are needed to reflect such changes in benefits, the provisions for the modification of simplification standards outlined in paragraph (4)(A) will be applied.".

Subject to subparagraph (B), such costs shall be allowable to a hospital on a reasonable cost basis and shall be considered to be pass-through costs under title XVIII of such Act. An education program shall be deemed to be hospital supported if the program is—

(i) an approved nursing or allied health education program;

(ii) is not a hospital operated program; and

(iii) the hospital participates in the program in conjunction with an educational institution.

(B) For purposes of subparagraph (A), section 1886(a)(4) of the Social Security Act, and section 1861(v) of such Act, costs relating to a hospital supported education program shall be deemed to be reimbursable—

(i) only to the extent that the proportion of costs claimed by a hospital for a hospital supported education program (which proportion shall be expressed as a ratio, the numerator of which is the dollar amount of support given by the hospital to the school in the specific 12-month period covered by the hospital's cost report and the denominator of which is the total allowable costs for inpatients hospital services irrespective of how such costs are paid under this title) are not greater than such proportion of costs claimed by such hospital (subject to the review described in paragraph (2)), in the cost reporting period prior to the cost reporting period beginning on or after October 1, 1990;

(ii) only if the hospital is receiving a benefit for the support it furnishes to such program through the provision of clinical services by nursing or allied health students incidental to their training, or the hospital hires graduates from the hospital supported education program; and

(iii) only to the extent that the cost is less than the cost the hospital would be expected to incur were such a hospital to operate its own similar program.

(2) SPECIAL AUDIT RULE.—For purposes of paragraph (1)(B)(i), the Secretary's determination of the initial proportion of costs (that is, those costs claimed in the cost reporting period prior to the cost reporting period beginning on or after October 1, 1990) shall be accomplished by a special audit (or other appropriate mechanism), which audit (or mechanism) shall ensure that each hospital has appropriately reported its level of support during such period.

(3) PROHIBITION ON RECOUPMENT OF CERTAIN NURSING AND ALLIED EDUCATIONAL COSTS.—(A) The Secretary of Health and Human Services (hereinafter referred to as the "Secretary") shall not disallow, recoup from, or otherwise reduce or adjust payments under title XVIII of the Social Security Act to hospitals with respect to claims by a hospital on its medicare costs reports for cost reporting periods beginning on or after October 1, 1983, and before October 1, 1990, relating to hospital supported education programs on the grounds that the costs of such programs were not allowable costs or were included in the definition of "operating costs of inpatient services" pursuant to section 1886(a)(4) of such Act, so that no passthrough of such costs was permitted under that section.

(B) The Secretary shall provide that if any disallowance, recoupment, adjustment, or reduction in payments described in subparagraph (A) has occurred prior to the date of enactment of this Act, such actions shall be reversed and any necessary refunds or administrative adjustments shall be promptly made.

(3) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—(A) Section 6205(a) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989 is amended by striking "(a)" and the subsection heading.

(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of Health and Human Services (in this section referred to as the "Secretary") shall resume the 3 case management demonstration projects described in paragraph (2) and approved under section 425 of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 (in this subsection referred to as "MCCA").

(3) TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—The demonstration projects resumed pursuant to paragraph (1) shall be subject to the same terms and conditions established under section 425 of MCCA. In determining the 2-year duration period of a project resumed pursuant to paragraph (1), the Secretary may not take into account any period of time for which the project was in effect under section 425 of MCCA.

(e) TREATMENT OF CERTAIN HOSPITALS WITH RESPECT TO PAYMENTS FOR GRADUATE MEDICAL EDUCATION COSTS.—Section 1886(h)(2) (42 U.S.C. 1395ww(h)(2)) is amended—

"(ii) In the case of a hospital which did have an approved medical residency training program for a cost reporting period beginning during fiscal year 1984, but which made a commitment to substantially expand its program that was not fully reflected in costs incurred during cost reporting periods beginning in such fiscal year, such hospital may request the use of an alternative cost reporting period other than that which began during fiscal year 1984 for purposes of determining the average amount recognized as reasonable medical education costs of the hospital for each full-time equivalent resident. The Secretary shall review each such request and determine whether it would be appropriate to provide for an FTE resident amount based on an alternative cost reporting period, based on approved FTE resident amounts for comparable programs. If the Secretary approves a request under this clause, payments based on alternative cost reporting periods for a hospital described under this clause, shall begin for the first cost reporting period for which the Secretary determines the hospital has substantially implemented its program expansion.".

"(B) In this subsection, the term 'best price' means, with respect to a single source drug or innovator multiple source drug of a manufacturer, the lowest price available from the manufacturer to any wholesaler, retailer, nonprofit entity, or governmental entity within the United States (excluding depot prices of any agency of the Federal Government). The Secretary shall specify criteria, as to when and how this remedy is to be applied and the amounts of any penalties. SEC. 7208. REDUCE POLLUTION AND DEPENDENCE ON FOREIGN OIL

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) in order to have a comprehensive program to reduce pollution and reduce our dependence on foreign oil, it is important to coordinate programs relating to the production of automobiles and the production of fuels;

(2) the achievement of long-term energy security for the United States is essential to the health of the national economy, the well-being of our citizens, and the maintenance of national security;

(3) the displacement of energy derived from imported oil with alternative fuels will help to achieve energy security and improve air quality;

(4) transportation uses account for more than 60 percent of the oil consumption of the Nation; and

(5) the Nation's security, economic, and environmental interests require that the Federal Government should assist clean-burning, nonpetroleum transportation fuels to reach a threshold level of commercial application and consumer acceptability at which they can successfully compete with petroleum based fuels.

SEC. 7208A. RESOLUTION.

It is the sense of the Senate that it is in the national interest to enhance energy security and promote environmental protection through the gradual replacement of gasoline with cleaner, domestic nonpetroleum energy sources, and

The Secretary of Energy should analyze the potential of, and report to Congress on, the technical feasibility of replacing, by 1998 and 2005, ten per cent and thirty per cent respectively, of our national transportation fuel with alternative and other domestic sources of energy.

If the reporting corporation fails to maintain (or cause another to maintain) records as required by subsection (a), and by reason of that failure, the summons is quashed in a proceeding described in subparagraph (B) or the reporting corporation is not able to provide the records requested in the summons, the Secretary may apply the rules of paragraph (3) with respect to any transaction or item to which the records relate.

"(3) APPLICABLE RULES.—If the rules of this paragraph apply to any transaction or item, the treatment of such transaction (or the amount and treatment of any such item) shall be determined by the Secretary in the Secretary's sole discretion from the Secretary's own knowledge or from such information as the Secretary may obtain through testimony or otherwise.

Section 4980(a) (relating to tax on reversion of qualified plan assets to employer) is amended by striking "15 percent" and inserting "20 percent".

SEC. 7432. ADDITIONAL TAX IF NO REPLACEMENT PLAN.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 4980 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) INCREASE IN TAX FOR FAILURE TO ESTABLISH REPLACEMENT PLAN OR INCREASE BENEFITS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (a) shall be applied by substituting '40 percent' for '20 percent' with respect to any employer reversion from a qualified plan unless—

"(A) the employer establishes or maintains a qualified replacement plan, or

"(B) the plan provides benefit increases meeting the requirements of paragraph (3).

"(2) QUALIFIED REPLACEMENT PLAN.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'qualified replacement plan' means a qualified plan established or maintained by the employer in connection with a qualified plan termination (hereinafter referred to as the 'replacement plan') with respect to which the following requirements are met:

"(A) PARTICIPATION REQUIREMENT.—Substantially all of the active participants in the terminated plan who remain as employees of the employer after the termination are active participants in the replacement plan.

"(B) ASSET TRANSFER REQUIREMENT.—

"(i) 20 PERCENT CUSHION.—A direct transfer from the terminated plan to the replacement plan is made before any employer reversion, and the transfer is in an amount equal to the excess (if any) of—

"(I) 20 percent of the maximum amount which the employer could receive as an employer reversion without regard to this subsection, over

"(II) the amount determined under clause (ii).

"(ii) REDUCTION FOR INCREASE IN BENEFITS.—The amount determined under this clause is an amount equal to the present value of the aggregate increases in the nonforfeitable accrued benefits under the terminated plan of any participants (including nonactive participants) pursuant to a plan amendment which—

"(I) is adopted during the 60-day period ending on the date of termination of the qualified plan, and

"(II) takes effect immediately on the termination date.

"(iii) TREATMENT OF AMOUNT TRANSFERRED.—In the case of the transfer of any amount under clause (i)—

"(I) such amount shall not be includable in the gross income of the employer,

"(II) no deduction shall be allowable with respect to such transfer, and

"(III) such transfer shall not be treated as an employer reversion for purposes of this section.

"(C) ALLOCATION REQUIREMENTS.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any defined contribution plan, the portion of the amount transferred to the replacement plan under subparagraph (B)(i) is—

"(I) allocated under the plan to the accounts of participants in the plan year in which the transfer occurs, or

"(II) credited to a suspense account and allocated from such account to accounts of participants no less rapidly than ratably over the 7-plan-year period beginning with the year of the transfer.

"(ii) COORDINATION WITH SECTION 415 LIMITATION.—If, by reason of any limitation under section 415, any amount credited to a suspense account under clause (i)(II) may not be allocated to a participant before the close of the 7-year period under such clause—

"(I) such amount shall be allocated to the accounts of other participants, and

"(II) if any portion of such amount may not be allocated to other participants by reason of any such limitation, shall be allocated to the participant as provided in section 415.

"(iii) TREATMENT OF INCOME.—Any income on any amount credited to a suspense account under clause (i)(II) shall be allocated to accounts of participants no less rapidly than ratably over the remainder of the period determined under such clause (after application of clause (ii)).

"(iv) UNALLOCATED AMOUNTS AT TERMINATION.—If any amount credited to a suspense account under clause (i)(II) is not allocated as of the termination date of the plan—

"(I) such amount shall be allocated to the accounts of participants as of such date, except that any amount which may not be allocated by reason of any limitation under section 415 shall be allocated to the accounts of other participants, and

"(II) if any portion of such amount may not be allocated to other participants under subclause (I) by reason of such limitation, such portion shall be treated as an employer reversion to which this section applies.

"(3) PRO RATA BENEFIT INCREASES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The requirements of this paragraph are met if a plan amendment to the terminated plan is adopted in connection with the termination of the plan which provides pro rata increases in the nonforfeitable accrued benefits of all participants (including nonactive participants) which—

"(i) have an aggregate present value not less than 15 percent of the maximum amount which the employer could receive as an employer reversion without regard to this subsection, and

"(ii) take effect immediately on the termination date.

"(B) PRO RATA INCREASE.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), a pro rata increase is an increase in the present value of the nonforfeitable accrued benefit of each participant (including nonactive participants) in an amount which bears the same ratio to the aggregate amount determined under subparagraph (A)(i) as—

"(i) the present value of such participant's nonforfeitable accrued benefit (determined without regard to this subsection), bears to

"(ii) the aggregate present value of nonforfeitable accrued benefits of the terminated plan (as so determined).

Notwithstanding the preceding sentence, the aggregate increases in the nonforfeitable accrued benefits of nonactive participants shall not exceed 40 percent of the aggregate amount determined under subparagraph (A)(i) by substituting 'equal to' for 'not less than'.

"(4) COORDINATION WITH OTHER PROVISIONS.—

"(A) LIMITATIONS.—A benefit may not be increased under paragraph (2)(B)(ii) or (3)(A), and an amount may not be allocated to a participant under paragraph (2)(C), if such increase or allocation would result in a failure to meet any requirement under section 401(a)(4) or 415.

"(B) TREATMENT AS EMPLOYER CONTRIBUTIONS.—Any increase in benefits under paragraph (2)(B)(ii) or (3)(A), or any allocation of any amount (or income allocable thereto) to any account under paragraph (2)(C), shall be treated as an annual benefit or annual addition for purposes of section 415.

"(C) 10-YEAR PARTICIPATION REQUIREMENT.—Except as provided by the Secretary, section 415(b)(5)(D) shall not apply to any increase in benefits by reason of this subsection to the extent that the application of this subparagraph does not discriminate in favor of highly compensated employees (as defined in section 414(q)).

"(5) DEFINITIONS AND SPECIAL RULES.—For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) NONACTIVE PARTICIPANT.—The term 'nonactive participant' means an individual who—

"(i) is a participant in pay status as of the termination date,

"(ii) is a beneficiary who has a nonforfeitable right to an accrued benefit under the terminated plan as of the termination date, or

"(iii) is a participant not described in clause (i) or (ii)—

"(I) who has a nonforfeitable right to an accrued benefit under the terminated plan as of the termination date, and

"(II) whose service, which was creditable under the terminated plan, terminated during the period beginning 3 years before the termination date and ending with the date on which the final distribution of assets occurs.

"(B) PRESENT VALUE.—Present value shall be determined as of the termination date and on the same basis as liabilities of the plan are determined on termination.

"(C) REALLOCATION OF INCREASE.—Except as provided in paragraph (2)(C), if any benefit increase is reduced by reason of the last sentence of paragraph (3)(A)(ii) or paragraph (4), the amount of such reduction shall be allocated to the remaining participants on the same basis as other increases (and shall be treated as meeting any allocation requirement of this subsection).

"(D) AGGREGATION OF PLANS.—The Secretary may provide that 2 or more plans may be treated as 1 plan for purposes of determining whether there is a qualified replacement plan under paragraph (2).

"(6) SUBSECTION NOT TO APPLY TO EMPLOYER IN BANKRUPTCY.—This subsection shall not apply to an employer who, as of the termination date of the qualified plan, is in bankruptcy liquidation under chapter 7 of title 11 of the United States Code or in similar proceedings under State law."

"(iii) under section 4980(d)(2)(C) of such Code with respect to the allocation of assets to participants of the qualified replacement plan.

"(2) For purposes of this subsection—

"(4) SPECIAL RULE FOR 1990.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to the provisions of subsection (c), a transfer shall be treated as a qualified transfer if such transfer—

"(i) is made after the close of the taxable year preceding the employer's first taxable year beginning after December 31, 1990, and before the earlier of—

"(I) the due date (including extensions) for the filing of the return of tax for such preceding taxable year, or

"(II) the date such return is filed, and

"(ii) does not exceed the expenditures of the employer for qualified current retiree health liabilities for such preceding taxable year.

"(B) REDUCTION IN DEDUCTION.—The amount of the deductions otherwise allowable under this chapter to an employer for the taxable year preceding the employer's

"(B) SPECIAL RULE FOR 1990.—In the case of a qualified transfer described in subsection (b)(4), the requirements of this paragraph are met with respect to any participant who separated from service during the taxable year to which such transfer relates by recomputing such participant's benefits as if subparagraph (A) had applied immediately before such separation.

SEC. 10302. REQUIREMENT OF REPLACEMENT PLAN FOR PORTION OF EXCESS ASSETS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 4980 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(d) INCREASE IN TAX FOR FAILURE TO ESTABLISH REPLACEMENT PLAN OR INCREASE BENEFITS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (a) shall be applied by substituting '40 percent' for '20 percent' with respect to any employer reversion from a qualified plan unless—

"(A) the employer establishes or maintains a qualified replacement plan, or

"(B) the plan provides benefit increases meeting the requirements of paragraph (3).

"(2) QUALIFIED REPLACEMENT PLAN.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'qualified replacement plan' means a qualified plan established or maintained by the employer in connection with a qualified plan termination (hereinafter referred to as the 'replacement plan') with respect to which the following requirements are met:

"(A) PARTICIPATION REQUIREMENT.—Substantially all of the active participants in the terminated plan are active participants in the replacement plan.

"(B) ASSET TRANSFER REQUIREMENT.—

"(i) 20 PERCENT CUSHION.—A direct transfer from the terminated plan to the replacement plan is made before any employer reversion in an amount equal to the excess (if any) of—

"(I) 20 percent of the maximum amount which the employer could receive as an employer reversion without regard to this subsection, over

"(II) the amount determined under clause (ii).

"(ii) REDUCTION FOR INCREASE IN BENEFITS.—The amount determined under this clause is an amount equal to the present value of the aggregate increases in the nonforfeitable accrued benefits under the terminated plan of any participants (including nonactive participants) pursuant to a plan amendment which—

"(I) is adopted during the 60-day period ending on the date of termination of the qualified plan, and

"(II) takes effect immediately on the termination date.

"(iii) TREATMENT OF AMOUNT TRANSFERRED.—In the case of the transfer of any amount under clause (i)—

"(I) such amount shall not be includible in the gross income of the employer,

"(II) no deduction shall be allowable with respect to such transfer, and

"(III) such transfer shall not be treated as an employer reversion for purposes of this section.

"(C) ALLOCATION REQUIREMENTS.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any defined contribution plan, the portion of the amount transferred to the replacement plan under subparagraph (B)(i) is—

"(I) allocated under the plan to the accounts of participants in the plan year in which the transfer occurs, or

"(II) credited to a suspense account and allocated from such account to accounts of participants no less rapidly than ratably over the 7-plan-year period beginning with the year of the transfer (or, if any limitation under section 415 applies, the period allowable under such section).

"(ii) TREATMENT OF INCOME.—Any income on any amount credited to a suspense account under clause (i)(II) shall be allocated to accounts of participants no less rapidly than ratably over the remainder of the period determined under such clause.

"(iii) UNALLOCATED AMOUNTS AT TERMINATION.—If any amount credited to a suspense account under clause (i)(II) is not allocated as of the termination date of the plan—

"(I) such amount shall be allocated to the accounts of participants as of such date, except that any amount which may not be allocated by reason of any limitation under section 415 shall be allocated to the accounts of other participants, and

"(II) if any portion of such amount may not be allocated to other participants under subclause (I) by reason of such limitation, such portion shall be treated as an employer reversion to which this section applies.

"(3) BENEFIT INCREASES.—The requirements of this paragraph are met if either of the following requirements are met:

"(A) PRO RATA INCREASE IN BENEFITS.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—A plan amendment to the terminated plan is adopted in connection with the termination of the plan which provides pro rata increases in the nonforfeitable accrued benefits of all participants (including nonactive participants) which—

"(I) have an aggregate present value not less than 15 percent of the maximum amount which the employer could receive as an employer reversion without regard to this subsection, and

"(II) take effect immediately on the termination date.

"(ii) PRO RATA INCREASE.—For purposes of clause (i), a pro rata increase is an increase in the nonforfeitable accrued benefit of each participant (including nonactive participants) in an amount which bears the same ratio to the aggregate amount determined under clause (i)(I) as—

"(I) the present value of such participant's nonforfeitable accrued benefit (determined without regard to this subsection), bears to

"(II) the aggregate present value of nonforfeitable accrued benefits of the terminated plan (as so determined).

Notwithstanding the preceding sentence, the aggregate increases in the nonforfeitable accrued benefits of nonactive participants shall not exceed 40 percent of the aggregate amount determined under clause (i)(I).

"(B) BENEFIT INCREASE OF 20 PERCENT OR GREATER.—The aggregate present value of the increases in nonforfeitable accrued benefits described in paragraph (2)(B)(ii) is 20 percent or more of the maximum amount which the employer could receive as an employer reversion without regard to this subsection.

"(4) COORDINATION WITH OTHER PROVISIONS.—

"(A) LIMITATIONS.—A benefit may not be increased under paragraph (2)(B)(ii) or (3)(A), and an amount may not be allocated to a participant under paragraph (2)(C), if such increase or allocation would result in a failure to meet any requirement under section 401(a)(4) or 415.

"(B) TREATMENT AS EMPLOYER CONTRIBUTIONS.—Any increase in benefits under paragraph (2)(B)(ii) or (3)(A), or any allocation of any amount (or income allocable thereto) to any account under paragraph (2)(C), shall be treated as an employer contribution for purposes of section 415.

"(C) 10-YEAR PARTICIPATION REQUIREMENT.—Except as provided by the Secretary, section 415(b)(5)(D) shall not apply to any increase in benefits by reason of this subsection to the extent that the application of this subparagraph does not discriminate in favor of highly compensated employees (as defined in section 414(q)).

"(A) NONACTIVE PARTICIPANT.—The term 'nonactive participant' means an individual who—

"(i) is a participant in pay status as of the termination date,

"(ii) is a beneficiary who has a nonforfeitable right to an accrued benefit under the terminated plan as of the termination date, or

"(iii) is a participant not described in clause (i) or (ii)—

"(I) who has a nonforfeitable right to an accrued benefit under the terminated plan as of the termination date, and

"(II) whose service, which was creditable under the terminated plan, terminated during the period beginning 3 years before the termination date and ending with the date on which the final distribution of assets occurs.

"(B) PRESENT VALUE.—Present value shall be determined as of the termination date and on the same basis as liabilities of the plan are determined on termination.

"(C) REALLOCATION OF INCREASE.—Except as provided in paragraph (2)(C), if any benefit increase is reduced by reason of the last sentence of paragraph (3)(A)(ii) or paragraph (4), the amount of such reduction shall be allocated to the remaining participants on the same basis as other increases (and shall be treated as meeting any allocation requirement of this subsection).

"(D) AGGREGATION OF PLANS.—The Secretary may provide that 2 or more plans may be treated as 1 plan for purposes of determining whether there is a qualified replacement plan under paragraph (2).

"(6) SUBSECTION NOT TO APPLY TO EMPLOYER IN BANKRUPTCY.—This subsection shall not apply to an employer who, as of the termination date of the qualified plan, is in bankruptcy liquidation under chapter 7 of title 11 of the United States Code."

"(iii) under section 4980(d)(2)(C) of such Code with respect to the allocation of assets to participants of the qualified replacement plan.

"(2) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) any term used in this subsection which is also used in section 4980(d) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 shall have the same meaning as when used in such section, and

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—If there is a qualified transfer of any excess pension assets of a defined benefit plan (other than a multiemployer plan) to a health benefits account which is part of such plan—

"(1) a trust which is part of such plan shall not be treated as failing to meet the requirements of subsection (a) or (h) of section 401 solely by reason of such transfer (or any other action authorized under this section),

"(2) no amount shall be includible in the gross income of the employer maintaining the plan solely by reason of such transfer,

"(A) as an employer reversion for purposes of section 4980, or

"(b) QUALIFIED TRANSFER.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The term 'qualified transfer' means a transfer—

"(B) which does not contravene any other provision of law, and

"(iii) the minimum benefit requirements of subsection (c)(3).

"(2) ONLY 1 TRANSFER PER YEAR.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—No more than 1 transfer with respect to any plan during a taxable year may be treated as a qualified transfer for purposes of this section.

"(4) SPECIAL RULE FOR 1990.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to the provisions of subsection (c), a transfer shall be treated as a qualified transfer if such transfer—

"(i) is made after the close of the taxable year preceding the employer's first taxable year beginning after December 31, 1990, and before the earlier of—

"(I) the due date (including extensions) for the filing of the return of tax for such preceding taxable year, or

"(2) REQUIREMENTS RELATING TO PENSION BENEFITS ACCRUING BEFORE TRANSFER.—

"(B) SPECIAL RULE FOR 1990.—In the case of a qualified transfer described in subsection (b)(4), the requirements of this paragraph are met with respect to any participant who separated from service during the taxable year to which such transfer relates by recomputing such participant's benefits as if subparagraph (A) had applied immediately before such separation.

"(B) the plan shall be treated as having a net experience loss under section 412(b)(2)(B)(iv) for the plan year in which such transfer occurs in an amount equal to the amount of such transfer, except that such section shall be applied to such amount by substituting '10 plan years' for '5 plan years'."

"(12) BUDGET AUTHORITY.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'budget authority' means the authority provided by Federal law to incur financial obligations, including the following:

"(i) provisions of law that make funds available for obligation and expenditure, including the authority to obligate and expend the proceeds of offsetting receipts or offsetting collections from the public;

"(ii) borrowing authority, which means authority granted to a Federal entity to borrow and obligate and expend the borrowed funds, including through the issuance of promissory notes or other monetary credits;

"(iii) contract authority, which means the making of funds available for obligation but not for expenditure; and

"(iv) offsetting collections as negative budget authority, and the reduction thereof as positive budget authority.

Such term includes transactions classified as means of financing the deficit.

"(B) ESTIMATES OF BUDGET AUTHORITY.—Budget authority may be definite (in which statute specifies the numerical amount) or indefinite (and, therefore, subject to estimate), and includes contingent budget authority determined to exist.

"(C) LIMITATIONS ON BUDGET AUTHORITY.—Any amount that is precluded from obligation in a fiscal year by a provision of law (such as a limitation or a benefit formula) shall not be budget authority in that year.

"(D) NEW BUDGET AUTHORITY.—The term 'new budget authority' means, with respect to a fiscal year—

"(i) budget authority that first becomes available for obligation in that year, including budget authority that becomes available in that year as a result of a reappropriation; or

"(ii) a change in any account in the availability of unobligated balances of budget authority carried over from a prior year, resulting from a provision of law first effective in that year;

"(A) The term 'entitlement authority' means any provision of law that has the effect of requiring the Government to make payments (including payments to any Government account) regardless of the amount of budget authority that may be available to make those payments, including any entitlement authority estimated to exist.

"(B) Except as provided in subparagraph (C), if a provision of law that requires the Government to make payments is limited by any other provision of law to the amount available budget authority (by providing pro rata reductions in payments, changes in eligibility, changes in employment, or through other means), then entitlement authority does not exist.

"(C) For purposes of paragraph (B), subchapter II of chapter 13 of title 31 of the United States Code shall not be considered a provision of law that limits entitlement authority to the amount of available budget authority.

"(D) The term 'new entitlement authority' means any legislation creating entitlement authority (or altering existing entitlement authority that was enacted before the date of adoption of the most recently agreed-to budget resolution, and includes legislation that has the effect of changing the estimated level of entitlement authority created in indefinite amounts of existing law.".

(c) GERMANENESS.—Section 305(b)(2) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 is amended by inserting after the second sentence the following: "An amendment shall not be germane unless it complies with the precedents of the Senate, deals with the same subject matter as the matter to which it is germane, and is within the same committee jurisdiction as the matter to which it is germane".

GREAT LAKES WATER QUALITY IMPROVEMENT ACT

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I join my colleagues in support of this important bill to enhance efforts to protect our valuable national water resources. In particular, I am pleased that provisions of a bill I had introduced along with Senators LEAHY, MOYNIHAN and D'AMATO, S. 2074, has been included in the final package.

S. 2074, the Lake Champlain Special Designation Act, is an important bill that will be a valuable tool in bringing together the various State, Federal and private interests to strengthen and consolidate efforts to protect Lake Champlain. Situated at the border of Vermont, New York and Canada, this international jewel is the sixth largest freshwater lake in the United States, and is sometimes thought of as the "west coast of New England."

Lake Champlain is a beautiful and picturesque water body lying in the fertile Champlain Valley. It sits in the shadow of the Green Mountains to the east and the Adirondack Mountains to the west. Beneath its beauty, however, lie signs of environmental stress that threaten its environmental integrity. Given the lake's regional and national significance, it is incumbent upon the various Federal agencies to coordinate activities, in harmony with State and local interests, to preserve Lake Champlain's splendor.

The significance of the Champlain basin region is underscored by its recent designation as an International Biosphere Reserve by the United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization—the fourth largest reserve of its kind in the world and unique in that it includes densely populated areas in addition to its natural beauty.

This lake is not only invaluable to the people of Vermont and New York, but also to the people of Quebec and millions of others who come to the Lake Champlain region to enjoy this beautiful resource. In the past, the lake has been a prominent commercial transportation corridor, and more recently it has served as host to increasing recreational uses. Much of the drinking water supply for the people in the Champlain region comes from the lake. Most important, it is an integral and irreplaceable part of the New England lifestyle enjoyed by many people and envied by many more.

To investigate the status of the water quality in Lake Champlain, the Senate Environment and Public Works Subcommittee on Water Resources, Transportation, and Infrastructure held a hearing in Burlington, VT and Plattsburgh, NY on June 28, 1989. Chairman MOYNIHAN and I heard testimony from Federal, State and local officials, scientists and individuals representing groups involved in lake protection efforts.

Witnesses from the State of Vermont included the commissioner of environmental conservation, the commissioner of agriculture and the chairman of the senate natural resources committee. Witnesses from the State of New York included the regional director of the Department of Environmental Conservation, the executive director of the Adirondack Park Agency and the executive director of the Governor's Commission on the Adirondacks in the 21st century.

Federal representatives included the District Director of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service and the State Conservationist of the Soil Conservation Service. Additional witnesses included the cochair of the Governors' Bistate Citizen Advisory Committee on Lake Champlain, the executive director of the Lake Champlain Committee, a park specialist from the Adirondack Council and the mayor of Plattsburgh.

Two primary points were raised repeatedly at these hearings. First, there is a lack of historical and contemporary data on the lake. Second, a greater coordination between the State and Federal agencies and the Canadian Government is necessary.

But it is also worth noting State, Federal, and international initiatives that reinforce this consensus, including its recent recognition as an international biosphere reserve by UNESCO. Public Law 83-566 established the LaPlatte River Watershed project, a Federal, State, local cooperative effort to address and monitor source pollution sources.

In 1988, Vermont, New York, and Quebec signed a memorandum of understanding on environmental cooperation for Lake Champlain. Vermont was among the first States to have its Nonpoint Source Management Program approved by the EPA, and Vermont and New York are currently conducting a basin-wide phosphorus management program with assistance from EPA.

On February 6, 1990, in an effort to consolidate and build upon existing programs, and to create new methods to address sources affecting water quality within the Lake Champlain basin, I was joined by Senators LEAHY, MOYNIHAN, and D'AMATO in introducing S. 2074, the Lake Champlain Special Designation Act.

This bill proposed to establish an EPA program office within the Lake Champlain basin, convene a management conference to develop a plan for the basin, establish new EPA authorities and expand activities of the Departments of Agriculture and Interior within the basin.

The provisions of title III incorporate much of the body of S. 2074. The EPA Administrator is to convene a management conference within 90 days of enactment, with members of the conference representing various Federal, State, local, and private interests. The management conference is charged with developing a pollution prevention, control and restoration plan.

TItle III envisions that the EPA Administrator will make staff available to the Lake Champlain management conference. At a minimum, one full-time professional staff person from EPA region I and one full-time staff person from region II should be detailed to implement the Lake Champlain Designation Act and its coordinating mechanisms. It is my hope that these staff persons will be located within the Lake Champlain basin to aid in the implementation of this act and to conduct regular and periodic meetings with other members of the management conference and to interact with other interested parties.

Title III recognizes that research on Lake Champlain has already begun. In formulating a comprehensive research program, the management conference is encouraged to identify and use existing Lake Champlain research projects and data bases; identify research needs; and establish a comprehensive data base to meet the objectives of the Act.

In addition to the activities outlined in the development of a pollution prevention, control, and restoration plan under section 120(e), the management conference should, at a minimum, make recommendations concerning any commission relating to Lake Champlain; examine the impact of growth and development on water quality in the basin; and examine the impact of water quality degradation on cultural resources that are an important part of the region's history.

Some components of the plan already exist or will be completed soon. As with the research program, these existing efforts should be used in the management conference's deliberations and incorporated into the final plan to avoid duplication of efforts and unnecessary expenditures.

The Administrator will make grants to public and private agencies and organizations for the purpose of supporting work necessary for the development of the plan, and to maintain long-term research efforts necessary to establish a comprehensive data base for the Lake Champlain basin. The Administrator is to consult with the Technical Advisory Committee and the Lake Champlain Research Consortium in developing and multidiscplinary environmental research program for the basin, giving priority to funding recommended these groups.

In issuing grants pursuant to paragraph (f) of this section, the Administrator may fund demonstration and pilot projects for purposes to assessing the feasibility of such projects as mitigation techniques. The Administrator may also fund joint requests by the States of Vermont and New York.

In general, it is my desire that funds appropriated to the EPA should be evenly distributed on an annual basis between the management conference, Grant Program, and Research Program. However, I recognize that appropriations distributions will, and in some cases should, vary to meet annual priorities within the three program areas.

The importance of the lake to both the United States and Canada was recognized by the signing of the memorandum of understanding by Governors Kunin and Cuomo and Quebec's Premier Bourassa. While this is a significant step toward correcting the environmental problems of the lake, much more is needed to preserve this valuable resource. That is why I am pleased that the Senate is moving quickly to pass this important legislation.

The overall water quality of the lake remains good, but this will not continue to be the case if we simply retain our present practices. With luck, we will not see catastrophic events poison Lake Champlain, but without incorporating prudent measures, we may see a gradual demise of equally devastating consequences.

Finally, understanding its problems and effectively implementing a pollution reduction program at Lake Champlain could serve as an example for cleaning other lakes throughout the country. I urge my colleagues to support this bill to further the protection and preservation one of America's finest resources.

EMERGENCY SERVICES AND TRAUMA CARE IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 1990

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I am pleased that the Senate is considering S. 15, "The Emergency Services and Trauma Care Improvement Act of 1990." The author, Senator CRANSTON, has been seeking passage of this legislation for several years and should be commended for his determination and persistence.

As a cosponsor of S. 15, I recognize the need for Federal assistance to the States to develop statewide trauma systems to provide a continuum of care from initial injury detection through treatment in a designated hospital appropriately equipped to treat a particular patient injury.

Like many other States, Mississippi currently lacks a statewide trauma system, and most ambulance services take all emergency patients to the closest hospital, regardless of its adequacy to provide care for those patients. Mississippi health care providers, however, recently agreed to develop a statewide trauma system upon designation of specific hospitals to care for trauma victims, and timely passage of S. 15 this year would assist their efforts.

Senator CRANSTON has agreed to accept an amendment I have proposed which I believe improves one section of the bill. The formula for distributing funds in this bill is based 80 percent on a State's population and 20 percent on its geographic area. Aside from the amount distributed through the formula, 15-percent of the yearly appropriation is set aside for competitive grants for special projects for rural communities to enable them to participate in a trauma network with adequate basic emergency medical services, such as transportation and communication services. States must apply on behalf of individual communities for this set-aside money.

It would be preferable to set up this set-aside money in a manner which allows States with large rural populations to receive more of the money in the initial grant received by each State, rather than rely on a set-aside benefiting only those States awarded through the competitive process. As currently written, the set-aside simply creates another grant process a rural State must go through in order to get additional dollars with no guarantee of getting that money through a competitive process.

In lieu of the two step, competitive process incorporated in the current rural set-aside language, my amendment would require that the 15 percent set-aside money be disbursed to the States through a formula based on the State's share of the total U.S. rural population. A State wishing to receive a grant under this section will merely include its request for assistance in its application for the basic trauma grant moneys, thereby avoiding having to go through an additional application process.

The implementation of a statewide trauma system is just as expensive in rural States as in urban States, and the formula modification I have suggested would better address the special needs of rural communities.

I thank the distinguished Senator from California and his staff for working with me to make this change in the bill.

EMERGENCY MEDICAL SERVICES AND TRAUMA CARE IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 1990

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I rise in support of S. 15, the Emergency Medical Services and Trauma Care Improvement Act.

S. 15, of which I am an original cosponsor, will help to remove the barriers and overcome the problems that, in many parts of the country, prevent the delivery of quick and efficient emergency medical services and it will provide incentives for States and localities to establish well-coordinated regionalized trauma care systems that would enable severely injured individuals to receive highly specialized trauma care as rapidly as possible following their injury.

Most importantly, Mr. President, S. 15, unlike its House companion bill, H.R. 1602, seeks to defray a portion of uncompensated trauma care costs of certain financially stressed hospitals.

S. 15 goes a long way to increase and improve trauma care delivery by providing funds and services to encourage States and localities to increase and/or expand much needed trauma care facilities and programs.

I would note, though, Mr. President, that there are some trauma care facilities that are so financially stressed that they may not survive to be in the regional integrated trauma networks S. 15 will create. These are the trauma care centers along our southern border.

Border area facilities—already struggling with uncompensated care losses associated with uninsured patients, inadequate reimbursement, and drug- and crime-related injuries—face the additional financial challenge of caring for large numbers of undocumented trauma victims.

A number of trauma centers in the border counties of Texas, Arizona, New Mexico, Florida, and California are at the financial breaking point.

The situation in the southern part of my State of California is troubling. In Los Angeles—which has the Nation's biggest undocumented alien population—10 of the county's 23 trauma centers originally in the county network when it was established in 1983 have shut their doors. In San Diego, the six county trauma centers are threatened by losses of over $9 million a year.

Similar situations exist in Texas, Arizona, and New Mexico, as well as Florida. It may well be that any State which has trauma centers serving a significant number of undocumented persons have, or shortly will have, the same problem.

These truma centers are struggling through no fault of their own but through the fault of the Federal Government's inability to control the Nation's borders.

Mr. President, if our Nation's trauma centers along the border are to survive, they need direct, immediate financial relief. I have offered legislation—the Trauma Care Alien Compensation Act of 1990—to provide critically needed financial assistance to truma centers treating a disproportionate number of undocumented aliens.

The special circumstances of border trauma care facilities are acknowledged by the Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources in its report on S. 15. I would like to quote for the RECORD the relevant committee report language:

> The committee recognizes that many trauma centers located in counties that border Mexico face and additional financial challenged—caring for undocumented trauma victims. Many trauma centers in the border counties of Texas, Arizona, New Mexico and California, as well as Florida, are experiencing serious financial losses because of large numbers of undocumented persons needing trauma care. The burden of such uncompensated losses poses a threat to the economic viability of border area trauma centers. Therefore, to help ensure that the critical care provided by border area trauma care centers continues, the committee recommends that the States involved give full consideration to these unique problems in making determinations for reimbursement for uncompensated trauma care under section 5(a) of the bill.

While S. 15 cannot solve the problem of controlling our borders and it cannot solve trauma care centers' uncompensated care problems, Mr. President, it can try to keep open the doors of some of the trauma facilities hit hardest by uncompensated care until Congress comes up with a more long-term approach to the problem.

Mr. President, trauma care centers take their responsibility to save lives and provide the best care possible to their communities very seriously.

With S. 15, Congress can take an important step in helping to support trauma facilities in their effort to provide the critical, life and death care upon which we all—insured and uninsured, rich and poor, U.S. citizen and undocumented worker—rely.

I hope Members will join me in supporting this measure.

RETIREMENT OF DOUGLAS B. HESTER

Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, Douglas B. Hester, the legislative counsel of the Senate, plans to retire at the end of the 101st Congress.

Mr. Hester has spent his entire professional career as a lawyer in the office of the legislative counsel, having been appointed as an attorney in that office on February 19, 1952. With almost 39 years of service, he has served substantially longer in the office than any other individual who ever worked in that office. Upon his appointment as legislative counsel of the Senate on March 1, 1980, Mr. Hester became the 11th individual ever to hold that position.

A native of my State of Alabama, Mr. Hester attended the University of Alabama where he received his B.S. degree in 1950 and his law degree in 1952. While at the University of Alabama Law School, he was elected to membership in the Farah Order of Jurisprudence, and served on the Alabama law review as board member, case note editor, and business manager; he was a member of Phi Alpha Delta Legal Fraternity and Omicron Delta Kappa.

Mr. Hester joined the U.S. Army on December 15, 1945, and was honorably discharged with the rank of sergeant on June 7, 1947; he subsequently served as a reservist in the U.S. Navy from October 1947 to October 1952.

Although for most of his Senate career Mr. Hester specialized in Social Security, Medicare, Medicaid, social welfare, and public health laws, he worked for a number of years in the fields of labor law and veterans' laws. In addition, he was involved for lesser periods in a number of other fields, including immigration law, civil rights, education, and taxation.

Mr. Hester is married to the former Melissa Hood Fuller, of Athens, GA, whom he met while she was employed by the late Senator Richard B. Russell. They have two children, Carlotta Marie Hester and Benjamin Alexander Hester.

While Mr. Hester has not disclosed specific plans as to what he will do after leaving Senate service, it is to be anticipated that he will remain active in his profession. He is a member of the bar in Alabama and in the District of Columbia and, in addition to his membership in the integrated bar associations of these jurisdictions, he is a member of the Bar Association of the District of Columbia and the Federal Bar Association.

I want to express my personal appreciation and that of my colleagues for Mr. Hester's dedicated service to the U.S. Senate. His departure will leave a large void in the office of legislative counsel; however, we wish him well in his future endeavors and hope that he takes time to enjoy his retirement with his family.

AMBASSADOR ARMITAGE ADDRESSES UNITED STATES-PHILIPPINES RELATIONS

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, my good friend Ambassador Richard L. Armitage, special negotiator for the Philippine Bases Negotiations, recently addressed the special relationship between the Philippines and the United States. I believe that the negotiations on the fate of our bases in the Philippines are integral to the future of United States military power in the Pacific region, and it is important that all of us have an understanding of the issues involved. Ambassador Armitage's statement is one of the finest summaries of the history of our relations with the Philippines.

Mr. President, I commend this speech to my colleagues and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the remarks were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SPEECH OF AMBASSADOR ARMITAGE

Mr. Foreign Secretary, distinguished members of the Philippine delegation, colleagues and friends, citizens of the Philippines:

On behalf of the American delegation I thank you for the warmth of your welcome. It is indeed a pleasure to resume our deliberations with Filipino colleagues whose patriotism, professionalism and good will lend a great sense of dignity and a sound seriousness of purpose to these proceedings. As representatives of the democratic government of President Aquino, you represent the Filipino people. And, needless to say, this democratic government enjoys the full support of the United States.

Much has been said and written about the hard choices faced by the Philippines concerning the future of United States facilities on Philippine military bases. My own reading of history, particularly the complex history of Philippine-American relations, reinforces in my own mind the difficulties faced by Filipinos as they try to sort this out and do what is right for their country. I believe that most Filipinos, notwithstanding the ups and downs of our 92-year relationship, like Americans and respect the United States. By the same token, American friendship and respect for the Philippines run deep. We share a democratic heritage, and America's support for democratic government in the Philippines will not waver. Yet these sentiments do not necessarily answer or remove the question of whether a continued United States military presence is good for the Philippines.

It is obvious that this question will not and cannot be decided by the U.S. Special Negotiator. All I can do is acknowledge, out of respect for the complex history that binds our two peoples, that the question is indeed a fair one. I can only suggest that the answer will, in the end, be dictated in the main by the issue of sovereignty. I do not believe any citizen of this country could accept a Philippine-United States military relationship inconsistent with the sovereignty of the Philippines.

Sovereignty, in my view, is as much an attitude, a state of mind, as it is an empirical fact. Although one dictionary defines the word as "enjoying autonomy, independent, self-governing," no nation is literally sovereign in the sense that it can act, even within its own borders, without any reference or regard whatsoever to other nations. International linkages of communications and commerce make national boundaries less impenetrable than they might have been a century ago. In this century America's relative isolation from the outside world has been transformed to an inundation of ideas, goods, services and social developments that we Americans hardly even think to label as foreign. Yet these ties that bind the United States across the seas, ties we would loosen only at our peril, in no way undermine our bedrock belief that we are masters in our own house.

For all countries the principle is exactly the same. To the extent that Filipinos do not believe themselves to be masters in their own house, and to the extent a U.S. military presence accounts for that belief, it would seem to be incumbent on the leaders of this country to do something about it. I know this is a matter of serious debate within the Philippines, and I will not presume to suggest how it should be resolved. What is crystal clear to me is that if we agree upon a relationship providing for some measure of United States military presence on Philippine bases, the new relationship will, by definition, explicitly acknowledge the Filipinos as masters in their own house. A lesser result is not even open for discussion. The very fact that your democratically elected government will choose whether or not U.S forces will remain is, in and of itself, a celebration of independence and sovereignty. The very fact that you can choose whether or not to remain an ally of the United States and an equal partner in maintaining regional peace and security should be evidence enough of autonomy, independence and self-government. That which is chosen is but a detail—albeit an important one—of foreign policy.

Regardless of how these discussions turn out, together we should honor and reaffirm those aspects of our shared history in which we can both take pride, and jettison those elements of our common legacy that only promote ill-will and misunderstanding. Friendship between the Philippines and the United States is what must last, and friendship can only exist in the context of equality, mutual respect and, above all, self-respect.

In its dealings with the United States in the twentieth century, the Philippines has chosen a course of evolution instead of revolution. This evolutionary process continues today. Your patience, steadfastness and, above all, your friendship and loyalty impose upon the United States the duty to help insure that Filipinos in the twenty-first century feel proud of the course charted by their countrymen in this century. We have no option but to take this duty seriously, for what is at stake is nothing less than the future of our relationship as nations and peoples.

It is clear to me that the days of a very large presence of United States sailors and airmen in the Philippines are coming to an end. What remains for us to determine is the rate at which this presence will be reduced and the nature of the security relationship our two governments wish to pursue during and after this transitional period.

I believe that even the most ardent opponents of the U.S. presence on your bases will agree, if only privately, that a sudden liquidation of that presence can only be destructive. In the here-and-now of people trying to earn a living and countries trying to adjust to a changing world, the differences between, say, twelve months and twelve years are monumental. The Philippines and United States have but one opportunity to make, voluntarily, such a fundamental restructuring of this vital relationship. Let us take time to do it right. Let us be your partners in managing the changes.

Let us give the Filipino employees at these facilities adequate time to adjust to new circumstances, while at the same time taking into account United States regional responsibilities. Let us give the armed forces of the Philippines adequate time to deal with the insurgency and take on greater responsibilities for the territorial defense of this republic as well as a greater voice in the security of this region of the world.

Equally, let us give the United States military appropriate time to restructure, and give the Filipino business community adequate time to replicate the management of some of the vital services performed by these facilities. But do so in a way which does not penalize your American allies. Let us give our friends in this region adequate time to adjust to a world in which superpower rivalry is being replaced, it seems, by the proliferation of regional powers seeking domination of their respective neighborhoods.

When the transition is complete, and the new Filipino-American partnership has graduated from the negotiating table to a fully developed reality, let us bequeath one final blessing on the generation of citizens in both countries who will inherit the fruits of our labors, for better or worse. Let the electorate of the 21st century decide whether or not they believe a continued U.S. presence will be helpful.

We Americans have drawn from the well of Philippine friendship many times in the past. We are back again, hopeful that we are seen in this country as a people capable also of giving—giving of respect, friendship and loyalty. Regardless of how we are viewed, however, we know our Filipino counterparts will be guided not by sentiment but by the requirements of their country and its citizens. I believe that between these requirements and the desires of the United States there are no fundamental differences. If I am wrong about this, then I am wrong about much more than bases. By the same token, if I am right about this, then I am right about much more than bases. All in all, I'd rather be right.

Thank you, Mr. Foreign Secretary. This concludes my statement.

TRIBUTE TO PETER J. COYLE

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, Peter Coyle, who for the past 3 years has served on both my personal and small business committee staffs, is returning to Minnesota next week. He will be sorely missed.

Pete came to work for me as a legislative assistant in the fall of 1987. He has had responsibility for numerous issues including taxes, civil rights, trade, pensions, campaign finance reform, minimum wage, parental leave and small business. When I became the ranking minority member of the Small Business Committee, Pete became my minority staff director and chief counsel on the committee. Even after assuming these new duties, he continued his previous LA responsibilities.

Pete is politically savvy and I have relied on him for counsel on many important issues. I will be losing a dedicated employee, but I certainly wish him the best in his new position with Teltech, Inc. in Minneapolis. Pete will be serving as counsel and heading up their new government affairs office.

My best wishes to Pete, his wife, Sandy, and their two young sons, Christopher and Daniel, in their new endeavors in Minnesota.

Thank you, Mr. President. I yield the floor.

A TRIBUTE TO BARBARA BOGGS SIGMUND

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to the memory of Barabara Boggs Sigmund, who passed away recently. Mrs. Sigmund was the mayor of Princeton, NJ, and a woman of character, compassion and courage, as well as a fine public servant. She will be greatly missed.

Mrs. Sigmund was the daugther of my longtime friends Representative LINDY BOGGS and her late husband, Representative Hale Boggs. She was born in New Orelans, but grew up in Washington, DC amid the milieu of national politics.

She was a graduate of the Manhattanville College of the Sacred Heart in New York. As a young woman, her professional life was varied and interesting. She served on the White House staff during the Kennedy administration and also worked as a teacher.

Mrs. Sigmund married Princeton political science professor Paul E. Sigmund in 1964 and became active in local politics in New Jersey. She was a member of the Princeton Borough Council and the Mercer County Board of Freeholders.

In 1982, she ran unsuccessfully for the Democratic nomination to the U.S. Senate, and was the opponent of James Florio for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination in 1989. She was elected mayor of Princeton in 1984.

Over the years, I have had the opportunity to work closely with both Lindy and Hale Boggs. During that time I came to know their daughter as a woman of strength and integrity. She was a fine wife and mother, a conscientious public servant and a loyal friend. Her life brought joy to many people, and her death represents a loss for us all. I join with her many friends and admirers in mourning her passing.

Mr. President, Nancy and I would like to extend our deepest sympathy to her mother, Representative BOGGS; her husband, Paul E. Sigmund; her three sons, Paul, David and Stephen; her sister, Cokie Roberts; and her brother, Thomas Hale Boggs at this difficult time.

TERRY ANDERSON

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President I rise to inform my colleagues that today marks the 2,042d day that Terry Anderson has been held captive in Beirut.

An article in yesterday's Washington Post, "Hostage Release Rumored," reports that the Syrian Government is making progress in its efforts to gain the release of Western hostages held in Lebanon. The article cites a Beirut newspaper, As-Safir, in which Lebanese Agriculture Minister Mohsen Dalloul Claims, "The question of the hostages is about to come to an end."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the above mentioned article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HOSTAGE RELEASE RUMORED

BEIRUT—Lebanese Agriculture Minister Mohsen Dalloul was quoted as saying Syrian President Hafez Assad's government has "achieved progress in its efforts to gain the release of Western hostages held by pro-Iranian extremists.

"The question of the hostages is about to come to an end. Our Syrian brothers are carrying out contacts and have achieved progress," Dalloul, a pro-Syrian Shiite Moslem, was quoted as saying by the leftist Beirut newspaper As-Safir.

DEATH OF BRIG. GEN. WILLIAM L. MULLINS, USAF

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I am sad to bring to the attention of our colleagues that Air Force Brig. Gen. William L. Mullins died in a recent airplane crash. General Mullins was a friend and patriot, and I will miss him greatly. He served his country tirelessly from the day he entered the U.S. Military Academy, throughout his distinguished, and highly decorated service in Vietnam, until he retired from the military in 1979. He then went on to a successful career with General Dynamics. He loved his country, and flying, he was one of the lucky people, able to blend his passions with his careers. Mr. President, I am confident Mrs. Florine Lucy Mullins, and their two sons, Dan and Todd, will be in the thoughts and prayers of our colleagues. I would ask unanimous consent that this notice printed in the Washington Times, be entered into the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Times, Oct. 2, 1990]

WILLIAM H.L. MULLINS, 55, RETIRED AIR FORCE GENERAL

Retired Air Force Brig. Gen. William H.L. Mullins, 55, a vice president of General Dynamics Corp., died in a plane crash Sept. 29 in Chatham, Mass. He lived in Alexandria.

Gen. Mullins, who was the passenger in a restored P-51 Mustang fighter plane of World War II vintage, was visiting Cape Cod for a golf tournament.

George F. Enhorning, 63, of Wolcott, Conn., who also died in the crash, was the pilot. The accident is being investigated by the Federal Aviation Administration.

A native of Independence, Mo., Gen. Mullins was a 1957 graduate of the U.S. Military Academy. He was also a graduate of the Air Command and Staff College and the National War College.

In 1966, he received a master's degree in business administration from the University of Arizona.

A fighter pilot stationed in Japan from 1959 to 1961, he was also a heavily decorated Vietnam War veteran. While stationed in Thailand, he flew 146 combat missions, 116 of them over North Vietnam.

Gen. Mullins was the recipient of five Distinguished Flying Crosses, 13 Air Medals and a Bronze Star.

His last military assignment was as deputy director of legislative liaison in the office of the secretary of the Air Force.

Gen. Mullins retired in 1979 and joined General Dynamics as its deputy director of legislative affairs. In 1980, he was named staff vice president for legislative affairs.

Gen. Mullins became corporate vice president of the St. Louis-based defense contractor in 1986 and worked out of its Crystal City offices.

He was a National Security Industrial Association board member and a member of the National Democratic Club. He was also a member of the Capitol Hill, Burning Tree and Belle Haven country clubs.

Gen. Mullins is survived by his wife of 26 years, Florine Lucy Magnani Mullins; two sons, Air Force Lt. Dan Mullins of Mississppi and Todd Mullins of Alexandria.

Services will be at 3 p.m. tomorrow at Fort Myer Post Chapel, with burial in Arlington National Cemetery. The family suggests that expressions of sympathy be in the form of contributions to the Arthritis Foundation.

S. 2830, THE 1990 FARM BILL

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, earlier this week Members of the Senate and House completed the conference of the 1990 farm bill. Although I was not a member of the conference committee, I am a member of the Agriculture Committee which drafted this bill, and therefore understand the very difficult circumstances under which this bill had to be written and conferenced. In my opinion, given the budget, the conference committee did the best job possible in reconciling the bill.

The budget resolution passed by Congress required that $13.6 billion be cut from agriculture. This amount is over 25 percent of the $54 billion in the agriculture budget. It is these funds that provide the Nation's farmers with income support, and that allow consumers to purchase the lowest cost, safest food in the world. This budget has asked agriculture to continue to produce the abundant foods to which we have become accustomed, but weakens the foundation upon which the farmer's margin and stability is built. I do not support cuts in agriculture, but am pleased with the choices the conference committee made in determining where the savings would be found.

I polled the leaders of the agriculture community in my State prior to the final agriculture budget agreement. Overwhelmingly, in the wheat and barley industries, farmers chose the triple base option over a cut in target prices. Triple base will provide the farmer with an opportunity to recoup income that is lost in the budget cuts. Forecasting the effect of triple base on farm income is difficult. At the very least, though, the committee has given the farmer a chance instead of returning to the days of the early and mid-eighties when acreage reduction programs were at all-time highs, and the Government simply was taking money out of the farmer's pocket without giving the farmer a chance to earn back lost income.

Perhaps one of the most encouraging aspects of the farm bill is the provision relating to the calculation of barley deficiency payments. In the future, the barley deficiency payment will be based on the average market price of feed barley only, not both feed and malt barley. For Washington State barley growers, almost all of whom produce feed barley, this provision will correct an inequity to which they have been subject for far too long.

The assessment fee established by the conference committees in the dairy title will prevent further cuts in the dairy support price. While I am pleased that price cuts are avoided, I remain concerned about the effect this assessment will have on the dairy farmers in my State. Clearly, at some point, the U.S. Department of Agriculture must study a supply management program that will stabilize the market, protect the farmer, and continue to provide consumers with the best dairy products available.

The 1990 farm bill contains many excellent provisions. This bill makes major strides in the areas of research, grain quality, trade, and conservation. The new bill strengthens the constructive environmental goals of the 1985 farm bill. It gives increased emphasis to programs involving water quality, while also taking steps to improve the fairness of existing programs such as swampbuster.

Despite these clearly positive programs, Mr. President, I cannot overlook the tremendous cuts which have been made in agriculture. Mr. President, I have spoken with many leaders in the Washington State agricultural community. All of them are dismayed with a budget that places a disproportionate share of the mandated budget savings squarely on the shoulders of American agriculture. However, farmers are strong people and have weathered difficult times before. Those farmers in Washington State with whom I have spoken are attempting, as difficult as it may be, to look at the positives in the bill. I commend these people for their leadership and optimism.

Recognizing that all cuts are mandated, the members of the Washington Association of Wheat Growers, the Washington Barley Growers and the Washington State Dairy Federation, find some solace in the manner in which these so-called savings are found.

Today I spoke with Chris Laney, the president of the Washington Association of Wheat Growers. Chris said to me:

There will be repercussions and fallout from this bill. Within the context of the three choices available to us—which ranged from very bad to much worse—wheat and barley growers were provided the better option with which to work. I am encouraged that cuts in agriculture were more evenly distributed across all Federal programs. This bill will challenge agriculture to be more resourceful and innovative in the face of increased world competitiveness and ever thinner margins.

Stephen Naught, vice president of the National Barley Growers Association and a resident of Bickleton, WA passed his thoughts on to me. Stephen said:

The overall bill hurts grain growers, but the barley growers are very pleased with the barley provisions in the bill which recognize the inequities that existed from the 1981 and 1985 Farm Bills. I want to thank you for your leadership in the push to get the malting barley price excluded from the barley deficiency payment calculation. This provision will begin to put fairness back into play for barley growers. We hope this will stop the slide of barley acreage in the State of Washington. It will provide a small safety net for barley. I remain concerned about the future of agriculture, but the 1990 Farm Bill contains many good provisions.

Dan Coyne, the executive director of the Washington State Dairy Federation told me:

These cuts are tough. Dairy farmers are not happy. It is difficult for me to find anything positive in this bill. The cuts are going to lead to a major restructuring in the dairy industry. However, since the alternative to an assessment on dairy farmers was a drop in the support price provided by the government, I am glad that the Conference Committee chose the assessment route. An assessment is going to hurt, but a price cut would have further exposed the farmer and led to many, many more farmers going out of business.

Mr. President, agriculture is an important part of America's life, welfare, and economy. The cuts which face agriculture will challenge the industry, but I believe American farmers, who are the best in the world, will continue to provide the Nation with an abundant, safe food supply.

REPORT OF THE NATIONAL CENTER FOR EDUCATION AND THE ECONOMY

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, the National Center for Education and the Economy recently published an excellent report on the critical linkages between education, work force training, and our economy. That report, "America's Choice: High Skills or Low Wages!" is a prescient analysis of what will be demanded of our workers as we round out this decade and move into the next century. This report endorses my firmly-held belief that the investment we make in education is the principal factor in determining our future economic growth, strength and security.

This report was prepared by the Commission on the Skills of the American Workforce. It offers a bold strategy for improving our productivity as a nation through a strategic investment in education and training—one which focuses upon the needs and abilities of the noncollege bound. I have found it a very thought-provoking outline for how we get from point A to point B to produce the kind of worldclass work force that will maintain our competitive edge in the world economy. That objective was central to our work in the recent reauthorization of the Carl D. Perkins Vocational and Applied Technology Act. That act improves the linkage between vocational education and the workplace, requires training and education programs in areas where jobs are currently available, and mandates that training for all students be of the highest quality possible. To do anything less would be a disservice to our students, and a disservice to our Nation.

I commend the work of the Commission, and I would particularly like to recognize the considerable work of the Commission's Chair, Ira Magaziner. Mr. Magaziner is the president of SJS in Rhode Island. He is a nationally recognized expert on work force training issues, and he has been a powerful, moving force behind keeping Rhode Island's work force on the cutting edge of competition. The Commission is cochaired by former Secretaries of Labor William E. Brock and Ray Marshall.

I urge my colleagues to read—and to study—this report carefully. To my mind, no work is more urgent at present than the effort to increase the productivity of our industries and the growth of our economy. I commend Mr. Magaziner, Secretary Brock and Secretary Marshall, the members of the Commission, and their staff for their rich contribution to the discussion of how we craft the critically important strategy of improving the skills of our work force, and in turn strengthen our economy.

I ask unanimous consent that the executive summary of the Commission on the Skills of the American Workforce and the Washington Post editorial by former Secretaries Brock and Marshall regarding this landmark study be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Report of the Commission on the Skills of the American Work Force, June 1990]

AMERICA'S CHOICE: HIGH SKILLS OR LOW WAGES!

THE PROBLEM

Since 1969, real average weekly earnings in the United States have fallen by more than 12 percent. This burden has been shared unequally. The incomes of our top 30 percent of earners increased while those of the other 70 percent spiraled downward.

In many families, it now takes two people working to make ends meet, where one was sufficient in the past.

The United States is in the midst of the second longest economic expansion in its history. But that expansion is built largely on the fact that 50 percent of our population is employed compared with 40 percent in 1973. Forty million new jobs were created as the "baby boom" generation reached working age, and more women entered the workforce. More of us have been working so we produced more.

However, workforce growth will slow dramatically in the 1990's. We can no longer grow substantially just by adding new workers.

The key to maintaining, to say nothing of improving, our standard of living is productivity growth—more products and services from every member of the workforce.

But, during the past two decades, our productivity growth has slowed to a crawl. It now takes nearly three years to achieve the same productivity improvement we used to achieve in one year.

If productivity continues to falter, we can expect one of two futures. Either the top 30 percent of our population will grow wealthier while the bottom 70 percent becomes progressively poorer or we all slide into relative poverty together.

THE TASK

To ensure a more prosperous future, we must improve productivity and our competitive position. We cannot simply do this by using better machinery, because low wage countries can now use the same machines and can still sell their products more cheaply than we can.

The key to productivity improvement for a high wage nation lies in the third industrial revolution now taking place in the world. The steam engine and electric motor drove the first two industrial revolutions, causing profound changes in work organization. This boosted productivity, quality and living standards dramatically. The creation of the modern factory in the 1800's and mass production in the 1900's followed these technology breakthroughs.

The advent of the computer, high speed communication and universal education are heralding a third industrial revolution, a revolution the key feature of which is high performance work organization.

THE ORGANIZATION OF WORK IN AMERICA

The organization of America's workplaces today is largely modeled after the system of mass manufacture pioneered during the early 1900's. The premise is simple: Break complex jobs into a myriad of simple rote tasks, which the worker then repeats with machine-like efficiency.

The system is managed by a small group of educated planners and supervisors who do the thinking for the organization. They plan strategy, implement changes, motivate the workers and solve problems. Extensive administrative procedures allow managers to keep control of a large number of workers. This form of work organization is often referred to as the "Taylor" model.

Most employees under this model need not be educated. It is far more important that they be reliable, steady and willing to follow directions.

But in the world's best companies, new high performance work organizations are replacing this "Taylor" method. These companies are using a new approach to unleash major advances in productivity, quality, variety and speed of new product introductions.

Mass production methods will continue to produce high volume, inexpensive goods and services for a long time to come. But what the world is prepared to pay high prices and high wages for now is quality, variety and responsiveness to changing consumer tastes, the very qualities that the new methods of organizing work make possible.

"Tayloristic" methods are not well suited to these goals. Firms struggling to apply the traditional methods of work organization to more complex technologies, more frequent product introductions, increased quality requirements and proliferating product variety often create cumbersome and inefficient bureaucracies.

The new high performance forms of work organization operate very differently. Rather than increasing bureaucracy, they reduce it by giving front-line workers more responsibility. Workers are asked to use judgment and make decisions. Management layers disappears as front-line workers assume responsibility for many of the tasks—from quality control to production scheduling—that others used to do.

Work organizations like these require large investments in training. Workers' pay levels often rise to reflect their greater qualifications and responsibilities. But the productivity and quality gains more than offset the costs to the company of higher wages and skills development.

Despite these advantages, 95 percent of American companies still cling to old forms of work organization.

IS THERE A SKILLS SHORTAGE IN THE UNITED STATES?

Because most American employers organize work in a way that does not require high skills, they report no shortage of people who have such skills and foresee no such shortage. With some exceptions, the education and skill levels of American workers roughly match the demands of their jobs.

Our research did reveal a wide range of concerns covered under the blanket term of "skills." While businesses everywhere complained about the quality of their applicants, few talked about the kinds of skills acquired in school. The primary concern of more than 80 percent of employers was finding workers with a good work ethic and appropriate social behavior: "reliable," "a good attitude," "a pleasant appearance," "a good personality."

Most employers we interviewed do not expect their skill requirements to change. Despite the widespread presumption that advancing technology and the evolving service economy will create jobs demanding higher skills, only five percent of employers were concerned about a skills shortage. These were mainly large manufacturers, financial service organizations and communications companies.

The reason we have no skills shortage today is that we are using a turn-of-the-century work organization. If we want to compete more effectively in the global economy, we will have to move to a high productivity work organization.

HOW WE PREPARE OUR FRONT-LINE WORKERS FOR WORK

More than 70 percent of the jobs in America will not require a college education by the year 2000. These jobs are the backbone of our economy, and the productivity of workers in these jobs will make or break our economic future.

No nation has produced a highly qualified technical workforce without first providing its workers with a strong general education. But our children rank at the bottom on most international tests—behind children in Europe and East Asia, even behind children in some newly industrialized countries.

More than any other country in the world, the United States believes that natural ability, rather than effort, explains achievement. The tragedy is that we communicate to millions of students every year, especially to low-income and minority students, that we do not believe that they have what it take to learn. They then live up to our expectations, despite the evidence that they can meet very high performance standards under the right conditions.

Unlike virtually all of our leading competitors, we have no national system capable of setting high academic standards for the non-college bound or of assessing their achievement against those standards.

America may have the worst school-to-work transition system of any advanced industrial country. Students who know few adults to help them get their first job are left to sink or swim.

Only eight percent of our front-line workers receive any formal training once on the job, and this is usually limited to orientation for new hires or short courses on team building or safety.

The American post-secondary education and training system was never designed to meet the needs of our front-line workers. The system is a combination of education programs for full-time college students and short term training for the severely disadvantaged, and can be difficult to access. Because employers have not set training standards, few students can be sure that there is a market for the courses they pursue. Education is rarely connected to training and both are rarely connected to an effective job service function.

ANOTHER WAY

While the foreign nations we studied differ in economy and culture, they share an approach to the education and training of their workers and to high productivity work organization.

They insist that virtually all of their students reach a high educational standard. We do not.

They provide 'professionalized' education to non-college bound students to prepare them for their trades and to ease their school-to-work transition. We do not.

They operate comprehensive labor market systems which combine training, labor market information, job search and income maintenance for the unemployed. We do not.

They support company based training through general revenue or payroll tax based financing schemes. We do not.

They have national consensus on the importance of moving to high productivity forms of work organization and building high wage economies. We do not.

Our approaches have served us well in the past. They will not serve us well in the future.

THE CHOICE

Americans are unwittingly making a choice. It is a choice that most of us would probably not make were we aware of its consequences. Yet every day, that choice is becoming more difficult to reverse. It is a choice which undermines the American dream of economic opportunity for all. It is a choice that will lead to an America where 30 percent of our people may do well—at least for awhile—but the other 70 percent will see their dreams slip away.

The choice that America faces is a choice between high skills and low wages. Gradually, silently, we are choosing low wages.

We still have time to make the other choice—one that will lead us to a more prosperous future. To make this choice, we must fundamentally change our approach to work and education.

1. Problem: Two factors stand in the way of producing a highly educated workforce: We lack a clear standard of achievement and few students are motivated to work hard in school. One reason that students going right to work after school have little motivation to study hard is that they see little or no relationship between how well they do in school and what kind of job they can get after school. Other advanced industrial nations have stringent performance standards that virtually all students must meet at about age 16 and that directly affect their employment prospects.

Recommendation: A new educational performance standard should be set for all students, to be met by age 16. This standard should be established nationally and benchmarked to the highest in the world.

We propose that all American students meet a national standard of educational excellence by age 16, or soon thereafter. Students passing a series of performance based assessments that incorporate the standard would be awarded a Certificate of Initial Mastery.

Possession of the Certificate of Initial Mastery would qualify the student to choose among going to work, entering a college preparatory program or studying for a Technical and Professional Certificate, described below.

Creation of the Certificate of Initial Mastery standard would require a new approach to student performance assessment. We recommend the creation of new performance based examinations for which students can explicitly prepare. The assessment system would provide multiple opportunities for success rather than a single high stakes moment of possible failure. Most important, the examination, though set at a very high standard, is not intended as a sorting mechanism on the pattern of virtually all the major tests now in use. Our goal is to set a tough standard that almost everyone will reach, although not all at the same time.

Once created, this system would establish objective standards for students and educators, motivate students and given employers an objective means to evaluate the accomplishments of students.

2. Problem: More than 20 percent of our students drop out of high school—almost 50 percent in many of our inner cities. These dropouts go on to make up more than one third of our front-line workforce. Turning our backs on those dropouts, as we do now, is tantamount to turning our backs on our future workforce.

Recommendation: The states should take responsibility for assuring that virtually all students achieve the Certificate of Initial Mastery. Through the new local Employment and Training Boards, states, with federal assistance, should create and fund alternative learning environments for those who cannot attain the Certificate of Initial Mastery in regular schools.

All students should be guaranteed the educational attention necessary to attain the Certificate of Initial Mastery by age 16, or as soon as possible thereafter. Youth Centers should be established to enroll school dropouts and help them reach that standard. Federal, state and local funds should be raised or reallocated to finance these dropout recovery programs. Once the Youth Centers are created, children should not be permitted to work before the age of 18 unless they have attained the Certificate of Initial Mastery or are enrolled in a program to attain it.

3. Problem: Other industrial nations have multi-year career-oriented educational programs that prepare students to operate at a professional level in the workplace. Graduates of these programs have the skills to hit the ground running when they get their first full-time job at age 19 or 20. America prepares only a tiny fraction of its non-college bound students for work. As a result, most flounder in the labor market, moving from low paying job to low paying job until their mid-twenties, never being seriously trained.

Recommendation: A comprehensive system of Technical and Professional Certificates and associate's degrees should be created for the majority of our students and adult workers who do not pursue a baccalaureate degree.

Technical and Professional Certificates would be offered across the entire range of service and manufacturing occupations. A student could earn the entry-level occupation specific certificate after completing a two- to four-year program of combined work and study, depending upon the field. A sequence of advanced certificates, attesting to mastery of more complex skills, would be available and could be obtained throughout one's career.

The Secretary of Labor should convene national committees of business, labor, education and public representatives to define certification standars for two- to four-year programs of professional preparation in a broad range of occupations. These programs should combine general education with specific occupational skills and should include a significant work component.

Students could pursue these programs at a wide variety of institutions accredited to offer them, including high schools, community colleges and proprietary schools. The system should be designed to make it possible for students to move easily between the Certificate programs and college.

A means should be established to ensure that all students can receive financing to pursue these programs.

4. Problem: The vast majority of American employers are not moving to high performance work organizations, nor are they investing to train their non-managerial employees for these new work organizations. The movement to high performance work organizations is more widespread in other nations, and training of front-line workers, funded in part by national assessments on employers or general public revenues, is commonplace.

Recommendation: All employers should be given incentives and assistance to invest in the further education and training of their workers and to pursue high productivity forms of work organization.

We propose a system whereby all employers will invest at least one percent of their payroll for the education and training of their workers. Those who do not wish to participate would contribute the one percent to a general training fund, to be used by states to upgrade worker skills. We further recommend that public technical assistance be provided to companies, particularly small business, to assist them in moving to higher performance work organizations.

5. Problem: The United States is not well organized to provide the highly skilled workers needed to support the emerging high performance work organizations. Public policy on worker training has been largely passive, except for the needs of a small portion of the severely disadvantaged population. The training system is fragmented wiht respect to policies, administration and service delivery.

Recommendation: A system of Employment and Training Boards should be established by Federal and state governments, together with local leadership, to organize and oversee the new school-to-work transition programs and training systems we propose.

We envision a new, more comprehensive system where skills devleopment and upgrading for the majority of our workers becomes a central aim of public policy.

The key to accomplishing these goals is finding a way to enable the leaders of our communities to take responsibility for building a comprehensive system that meets their needs. The local Employment and Training Boards for each major labor market would:

Take responsibility for the school-to-work and Youth Center-to-work transition for young people.

Manage and oversee the Youth Centers.

Manage and oversee a second chance system for adults seeking the Certificate of Initial Mastery.

Manage and oversee the system for awarding Technical and Professional Certificates at the local level.

Manage a labor market information system.

Manage and oversee the job service.

Coordinate existing programs.

The states would need to create a parallel structure to support the local Boards, coordinate statewide functions and establish state standards for their operation.

IN CONCLUSION

America is headed toward an economic cliff. We will no longer be able to put a higher proportion of our people to work to generate economic growth. If basic changes are not made, real wages will continue to fall, especially for the majority who do not graduate from four-year colleges. The gap between economic "haves" and "have nots" will widen still further and social tensions will deepen.

Our recommendations provide an alternative for America. We do not pretend that this vision will be easily accepted or quickly implemented. But we also cannot pretend that the status quo is an option. It is no longer possible to be a high wage, low skill nation. We have choices to make:

Do we continue to define educational success as "time in the seat," or choose a new system that focuses on the demonstrated achievement of high standards?

Do we continue to provide little incentive for non/college bound students to study hard and take tough subjects, or choose a system that will reward real effort with better pay and better jobs?

Do we continue to turn our backs on America's school dropouts, or choose to take responsibility for educating them?

Do we continue to provide unskilled workers for unskilled jobs, or train skilled workers and give companies incentives to deploy them in high performance work organizations?

Do we continue in most companies to limit training to a select handful of managers and professionals, or choose to provide training to front-line workers as well?

Do we cling to a public employment and training system fragmented by institutional barriers, muddled by overlapping bureaucracies and operating at the margins of the labor market, or do we choose a unified system that addresses itself to a majority of workers?

Do we continue to remain indifferent to the low wage path being chosen by many companies, or do we provide incentives for high productivity choices?

Taken together, the Commission's recommendations provide the framework for developing a high quality American education and training system, closely linked to high performance work organizations. The system we propose provides a uniquely American solution. Boldly executed, it has the potential not simply to put us on an equal footing with our competitors, but to allow us to leap ahead, to build the world's premier workforce. In so doing, we will create a formidable competitive advantage.

The status quo is not an option. The choice we have is to become a nation of high skill or one of low wages.

The choice is ours. It should be clear. It must be made.

BUILDING A BETTER WORK FORCE

(By William E. Brock and Ray Marshall)

Labor Day, a recognition of the accomplishments of our nation's work force, also signals the return to school for millions of students. Unfortunately, these two events have little in common other than their placement on the calendar. The world of work and what one learns in school are more disconnected than ever in the United States.

This September, we have little to celebrate in this country. We continue to lose ground in many international markets, our real earnings and productivity growth have declined, our students rank at the bottom on international achievement tests and we all but ignore the one millon high school dropouts we "lose" every year.

Why?

Part of the problem is the American workplace, which is still based on a system of mass manufacture pioneered during the early 1900s. Under this system, complex jobs are broken into simple rote tasks that workers can repeat with machine-like efficiency; for many workers, an eighth-grade education is about all they need to do their jobs. For employers, financial success depends on keeping labor costs down; therefore, workers with high-level skills do not necessarily receive higher wages. Further, only 8 percent of America's front-line workers receive any formal on-the-job training.

The other part of the problem is our education system. It serves the needs of only 30 percent of our young people—those who proceed to college. The other 70 percent receive the worst job preparation in the developed world, even though it is they who will make or break our economic future.

To ensure a more prosperous future for all Americans, we need to make some fundamental changes in the workplace and in the schools. By the year 2000, more than 70 percent of American jobs will not require a college education—building a relationship between school and work is nothing short of an economic necessity.

As two former labor secretaries, we recently co-chaired the National Center on Education and the Economy's Commission on the Skills of the American Workforce, a group of leaders from business, labor, education and government gathered to study the future skills needs of our nation's non-college work force.

After months of research in businesses and in schools in the United States and in six foreign countries, the commission offered some ideas for change.

First, to meet global competition, the commission believes the United States must create an education performance standard—bench-marked to the highest in the world—to be met by all American students at age 16, the age at which young people can legally leave schools in most states. Students who meet the standard would qualify to enroll in a college-preparatory program, to begin studying for a skilled non-college occupation or even to enter the work force. However, those who did not meet the standard would be required to continue their education toward the performance standard as a condition for being allowed to work part-time before age 18.

Certain young people, for a variety of personal or societal reasons, do not do well in the present public school environment. Therefore, the commission also proposed alternative learning programs to recover nearly all of our dropouts and help them meet this new educational standard. The programs would provide counseling and job-experience services, would combine work with studies and would interact closely with the business community.

At present, there is no consensus about how to prepare students for the world of work if they are not college bound. To accomplish this goal, the commission recommended a comprehensive system of technical training and certification for non-college professions. We used the word "professions" deliberately, because these certificate programs would set higher standards and reward higher skills in a range of occupations. This would be an opportunity for business and labor to work together to create anew the skilled crafts on which America was built.

These recommendations, together with those which would provide incentives for greater investment in the training of front-line workers by all employers, have the potential to once again build the world's premier work force.

This September, as our workers celebrate Labor Day and our students return to the classroom, we ought to be conscious of the choices we are making. Only when we begin to insist on a high-skills, high-wage economy—in our schools and in our companies—will our workers and students have cause for celebration.

STATEMENT ON THE DOMINATION OF RICHARD C. BROWN

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I am pleased that the President has nominated and the Senate is about to confirm, Richard C. Brown, to represent the United States as an Ambassador in Montevideo, Uruguay. I am very happy to see a fellow New Mexican nominated for this important position.

A U.S. Ambassador is charged with enormous responsibilities ranging from serving as a personal representative of the U.S. Government to protecting and enhancing U.S. interests in areas such as economics, communications, human rights, and democratic values. Also, he is required to supervise all other U.S. Government agencies. Mr. President, this position requires strong leadership, great interpersonal communication skills, and superior management abilities which I feel Mr. Brown possesses.

Richard Brown, a career Foreign Service Officer, was born in Tulsa, OK, and shortly thereafter moved to Eunice, NM. Eunice is a small oil producing town of 2,600 people in southeastern section of the State. There he attended both elementary and high school, graduating first in his class. Mr. Brown is the first person from Eunice privileged with the opportunity to represent our country as a U.S. Ambassador. It isn't often that an ambassador comes from such a small community. His nomination demonstrates President Bush's thoroughly researched decision and I am sure that his two children, Tara and Justin, are extremely proud of their father's achievements.

Richard graduated from George Washington University where he received both his bachelors and masters degrees. He also attended the National Autonomous University of Mexico for a year of post-graduate study just prior to his entry into the Foreign Service. His determination and integrity throughout his education have driven him far today.

Richard entered the Department of State in 1963 directly from graduate school where he received a degree in international studies.

Spanning 27 years in five continents, Richard began his career as part of a special information retrieval project on Cuba. His leadership and enthusiasm have carried him far.

After serving in Vietnam as a development officer on loan to the Agency for International Development he shifted from Southeast Asia to Europe where he was assigned as a political officer at the American Consulate General in Barcelona.

Three years later he returned to Washington to become the Special Assistant to Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs.

Richard then traveled to Brazil and spent 2 years as the head of the political section in Rio followed by 2 years as Principal Officer of the American Consulate in Recife. He was then sent to Port Louis, Maritius, to serve as the Embassy's Deputy Chief of Mission for 2 years. Upon completion of this tour, he was posted back in Washington DC where he seconded to the National Security Council to work on Latin American Affairs. He later was made Deputy Director of Central American Affairs in the Department of State, and, after 2 years there, enjoyed a year at the National War College at Fort McNair.

A 3-year stint in the Department in Caribbean Affairs followed. Mr. Brown was initially the Deputy of the office, but later became the Director following his direction of the Grenada Task Force leading up to and following the United States action in 1983. In July 1985, Richard was assigned to the American Embassy in Montevideo Uruguay as Deputy Chief of Mission Three years later he returned to Washington to become the Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense for Inter-American Affairs in the Pentagon, a position he held until January 1990.

Richard has been very valuable in advocating the hemispheric trade concept between the United States and Central America. As a member of the Kissinger Commission on Central America, I am also committed to realize the tremendous potential of a United States, Mexico, Central America, and Canada free trade area.

Mr. President, I look forward to the confirmation of Richard Brown by the full Senate. This is another example of President Bush looking to New Mexico for strong leaders to place in his administration, and he has once again picked a man that will serve his administration and the United States very well.

STATEMENT ON THE NOMINATION OF EDWARD BRYNN

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I rise today in support of President Bush's nomination of Edward Brynn as U.S. Ambassador to Burkina Faso. His nomination was favorably reported to the Senate by the Foreign Relations Committee on Tuesday, October 2, 1990.

Ed Brynn served on my staff during 1981 and 1982 when I was a member of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence. Ed was an asset to our office—his honesty and sense of humor were appreciated by his coworkers. I knew that I could always count on his sound advice and wise counsel during those years.

Ed Brynn has served our country tirelessly. In addition to his Senate service, he saw duty in the Air Force, where he remains as a lieutenant colonel in the Reserves. Since joining the Foreign Service, he has had a distinguished career serving in Sri Lanka, Mali, and The Gambia. Following his 2 years in the Senate, Ed went on to represent the United States as Deputy Chief of Mission in Mauritania, the Comoros Islands, and Cameroon.

He was educated at Georgetown University, Stanford University, and Trinity College in Dublin. He received the Woodrow Wilson National and Dissertation Fellowships, and the National Defense Education Act Fellowship.

Mr. President, Ed has published two books on Irish history and several historical articles and papers, many of them on issues concerning Vermont, where he has a home in Chelsea waiting for him. He taught history at the Air Force Academy and the University of Colorado for 10 years. Ed also received the State Department's Meritorious and Superior Honor Awards and was the School of Foreign Service's Valedictorian in 1964.

Ed has distinguished himself as a scholar, a teacher, a solider, as well as a Foreign Service Officer. He has dedicated his life to his country and his planet in a search for international peace and understanding. At the same time that he has served this Nation so selflessly, he has also remained devoted to his family, as a fine example of a husband and father. I want to add a personal note. Ambassador Brynn and I grew up only a few blocks from each other in Montpelier, VT. Later, when I was in law school at Georgetown, he was in the undergraduate school studying foreign policy. We would travel back and forth to Vermont for school recesses and, in many ways, that relationship has never ended. The United States is fortunate to have Ed Brynn as an ambassador. Mr. President, as one who knows and respects Ed Brynn, I am proud to support his nomination as Ambassador to Burkina Faso.

STATEMENT ON THE NOMINATION OF KATHERINE D. ORTEGA

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I am pleased that the President has nominated and the Senate is about to confirm, Katherine D. Ortega, to be an Alternate Representative of the United States of America to the 45th Session of the General Assembly of the United Nations. It pleases me to see a fellow New Mexican being utilized for this very important position.

Katherine Davalos Ortega, the youngest of nine children, was born in Tularosa, NM and raised in Alamogordo, NM. She comes from a very traditional, conservative, Hispanic family. Her first language was Spanish. She did not learn English until she entered elementary school. She was the first member of her family to graduate from college.

Mrs. Ortega was an honors graduate of Eastern New Mexico University, Portales, NM, where she received her bachelor of arts degree in business and economics. She holds honorary doctor of law degrees from ENMU, New Mexico State University in Las Cruces and Kean College, New Jersey, as well as an honorary doctorate in social science from Villanova University, Pennsylvania.

In 1983 President Reagan appointed and the Senate confirmed Mrs. Ortega as the 38th Treasurer of the United States. She served until June 1989. As Treasurer, she had both management and policy responsibilities for three of the Department of Treasury's major bureaus: the U.S. Mint, the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and the U.S. Savings Bonds Division. These bureaus had combined budgets in excess of $300 million and a work force of more than 4,000 persons. For her service to the Department of the Treasury, the Secretary presented her with the Alexander Hamilton Award, the Department's highest honor.

Prior to her appointment as Treasurer of the United States, Mrs. Ortega served as a Commissioner of the Copyright Royalty Tribunal as a member of the President's Advisory Committee on Small and Minority Business.

Mrs. Ortega was one of the highest-ranking Hispanics in the Reagan administration. Further, she is the second Hispanic woman to the important post of Treasurer.

Mrs. Ortega has an extensive background in banking and accounting. Before entering Government, Mrs. Ortega practiced with Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co., in Los Angeles. Also she served as vice president of the Pan American National Bank of Los Angeles, and then as the first woman president and director of the Santa Ana State Bank.

She currently serves on the board of directors of the Diamond Shamrock Corp., and is a member of the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants, and Executive Women in Government.

Mr. President, I look forward to the confirmation of Katherine Ortega by the full Senate. Once again President Bush has looked toward New Mexico in search of honest hard-working people to serve his administration and the United States.

ENVIRONMENTAL MARKETING CLAIMS ACT

● Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Environmental Marketing Claims Act of 1990. I am pleased to be joined by Senator LIEBERMAN. This bill will require the EPA to establish uniform, accurate standards, and definitions for environmental marketing claims. In so doing, this bill will give consumers reliable and consistent guidance to help them compare environmental marketing claims. It will prevent the use of fraudulent, deceptive, and misleading environmental marketing claims, and encourage the development of innovative technologies and practices that favor natural resources conservation and environmental protection.

Mr. President, the United States is facing growing environmental problems like global warming, lack of landfill space, and air and water pollution. Today, more than ever, people realize one of the easiest and most effective ways they can help address these problems is through their consumer choices. National surveys have shown that 90 percent of American consumers would look for environmentally preferable products and pay more for them. Surveys also show that over 50 percent of American consumers would switch supermarkets to shop at one that offered environmentally sensitive products and practices.

American businesses realize the growing consumer demand for products that don't harm or are less harmful to the environment. They have responded with have a plethora of environmental claims on products and packages. Now, practically everywhere consumers look, they are bombarded with products claiming to be better for the environment.

Mr. President, instead of environmental consumerism, we are getting environmental confusion. When a product claims it is environmentally safe, what does that mean? Does that mean that it didn't use harmful materials or processes during manufacturing or that it was made from recycled materials, or that it is biodegradable? Does it mean all of these? Perhaps it means something else altogether.

There are other, more specific claims that have some meaning to consumers and have the potential to let the marketplace help in addressing environmental problems, but these claims are sometimes misused or misleading. A product labeled biodegradable for example, must ultimately end up in a place where there is air, sunlight, and microorganisms to break down the material for it to biodegrade. But most of the stuff we throw away in our trash cans never gets a chance to biodegrade because it goes to landfills that lack circulating air and sunlight necessary for biodegradation to occur.

Mr. President, I commend those manufacturers that honestly want to respond to consumer demand for environmentally preferable products. They, as much as anyone, want to play by a common set of rules. The American people want to see firms invest in equipment or processes that can back up environmental claims. But companies won't want to do it if their competitors can make the same claim without the same commitment.

Without any direction, the goodwilled consumer who wants to do something to protect our environment is being confused, misled, and sometimes deceived.

Mr. President, it is a basic role of government to establish common standards, measures, and definitions that will provide some common denominators by which competition can take place fairly in the free market. A free market depends on it.

A free market also depends on free and accurate information. Information is power. This legislation will empower consumers with the understanding about environmental claims they need to help protect the environment.

Mr. President, the Environmental Marketing Claims Act of 1990 will make sure that consumers are getting the truth about the environmental products they buy. This bill sets up an independent advisory board of environmentalists, consumer and industry representatives to advise the EPA on standards and definitions governing the use of environmental marketing claims.

The bill also sets forth criteria to be considered by the board and the EPA to ensure that environmental claims are based on the best scientific information available and that the same claims meet the same standards. When a manufacturer claims a product is made from recycled materials, consumers have the right to know whether it is made from 10 percent or 90 percent recycled materials and whether those materials are useful byproducts from manufacturing or whether they are postconsumer materials taken out of the waste stream.

By requiring the EPA to develop regulations based on the best available technology and the most recent scientific knowledge, this legislation will encourage the development of innovative technologies and practices to be adopted by industry in considering the environmental effects when producing products and packaging.

Mr. President, I have worked closely with States attorneys general, environmental groups, and industry representatives in developing this legislation. It builds on a recent resolution by the National Association of Attorneys General that calls on the Federal Government to establish uniform national guidelines for environmental marketing claims. A similar resolution was adopted earlier this year by the National Association of Consumer Agency Administrators. And it has the support of a variety of national environmental organizations.

Industry is ready for regulations governing environmental marketing claims that would allow industry to compete on a level playing field. Consumers are eager to get the information they need to make informed choices according to their environmental preferences. The time for Congress to act is now; before consumers get so disillusioned that they won't believe any environmental claim they see.

Although it is late in the congressional session, we are introducing this bill now so that the Senate can act quickly on this legislation in the next session.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation so that industry and consumers can act consistently and effectively to help protect our environment through the free and green marketplace.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill be printed in the RECORD as well as resolutions and letters of support.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONSUMERS UNION,
Washington, DC, October 12, 1990.

Hon. FRANK LAUTENBERG,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR LAUTENBERG: Consumers Union would like to thank and congratulate you on the introduction of your bill to establish a national standard for environmental marketing claims.

Increased concern with the environment has brought with it a host of confusing and sometimes misleading claims in the marketplace that products are "green" or environmentally "friendly". It is difficult and often impossible for consumers to sort out and evaluate these claims. Further, there is no official standard by which to judge the honesty and accuracy of environmental marketing claims and no specific charge to any governmental authority to prosecute those that are false, misleading or deceptive.

Your bill sets forth a proposal to establish appropriate standards that can serve both to guide marketers who would make such claims and agencies who would be responsible for preventing deception. We are happy to endorse the principles in your bill and look forward to working with you to see that these principles become law.

Sincerely,

MARK SILBERGELD,
Director.

Senator FRANK LAUTENBERG,
Senate Hart Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR LAUTENBERG: As you are well aware, consumer products carrying misleading environmental claims have proliferated as the public interest in a clean environment has mounted. Regrettably, the federal government has been slow to respond to this problem. As a consequence, the American consumer has been left in the dark, forced to sort out confusing or misleading statements for him/herself. For at least these reasons, your truth in labeling initiative, the Environmental Marketing Claims Act of 1990, provides an essential tool now missing from the arsenal of consumer protection. The earth does not benefit from public relations or other symbolic measures. Moreover, upstanding American firms that show a true respect for our environment should not have to compete with unscrupulous marketeers who proffer misleading environmental claims. The passage of this initiative will truly benefit the environment and the economy. You should be applauded for your well thought-out initiative which we strongly endorse.

Best Regards,

ALLEN HERSHKOWITZ, Ph.D.

ENVIRONMENTAL ACTION,
Washington, DC, October 17, 1990.

Senator FRANK LAUTENBERG,
Senate Hart Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR LAUTENBERG: Environmental Action, Inc. is pleased to express its strong support for the Environmental Marketing Claims Act of 1990. This bill represents an effective, timely, and no-nonsense approach to the important issue of environmental marketing and the misuse of misleading environmental claims in advertising.

American consumers are more aware today than ever that they can make a contribution to environmental protection by exercising "environmental choice" at the supermarket check-out stand. Polls consistently find the majority of consumers willing to choose products on the basis of their environmental attributes.

Product manufacturers are racing to tap the buying power of the new American Green Consumer. But some have been more interested in the "green" of the dollar than the green of the earth. The past year has seen an explosion of false or misleading environmental claims designed to cash in on this new consumer awareness. Products with negligible levels of recycled material are labeled "recycled," plastic bags are labeled "degradable," and some aerosol products announce that they are "ozone-friendly."

Such terms are meaningless in the absence of standards governing their use. The Environmental Marketing Claims Act of 1990 directs the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency to set such standards at the national level. This bill builds on efforts already underway in states around the country to regulate the use of environmental claims on product labels or in advertising.

Environmental Action again congratulates you for taking the lead on this important issue. We strongly support passage of this bill.

Sincerely,

RUTH CAPLAN,
Executive Director.

Re: Environmental Marketing Claims Act of 1990.

Hon. FRANK R. LAUTENBERG,
U.S. Senate, Hart Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR LAUTENBERG: I am writing to express my support for the Environmental Marketing Claims Act of 1990. Greenmarketing, the selling of the environment, is clearly becoming the marketing craze of the 1990's. As consumers become more conscious and concerned about the environmental impact of the products that they purchase, environmental issues drive their purchasing decision. Unfortunately, many companies are capitalizing on this genuine consumer concern by marketing products in a deceptive manner.

My office has been actively investigating companies that are engaging in deceptive and misleading environmental advertising. In June I filed suit against Mobil Chemical Corporation for making false claims about the alleged environmental benefits of its Hefty trash bag. Just today I announced a settlement that New York, together with nine other States, reached with the manufacturer of "Bunnies Biodegradable Disposable Diapers". Our agreement will require the company to immediately cease all advertisements which misleadingly claim that the diapers benefit the environment.

It is estimated that disposable diapers comprise as much as 2 percent of all municipal waste diposed of in landfills. Bunnies, by marketing their diapers as biodegradable, tried to exploit the interests of people who want the convenience of disposable diapers but are concerned about the waste problem they create. Although labeled "BIODEGRADABLE", Bunnies diapers, like any organic water, will take decades to degrade in our nation's landfills. Deceptive environmental claims like this are proliferating.

Consequently, there is clearly a real need for national standards for environmental marketing claims. In March of this year I endorsed a resolution of the National Association of Attorneys General calling on the Federal Trade Commission and the Environmental Protection Agency to work jointly with the States to develop uniform national guidelines for environmental advertising with input from environmental groups, consumer groups and members of the business community. This resolution was adopted unanimously.

Your proposed legislation provides a framework for such national standards. Further, by providing for both state and federal enforcement, I believe that this legislation can effectively put an end to deceptive environmental marketing.

Very truly yours,

ROBERT ABRAMS.

STATE OF MINNESOTA,
OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
October 17, 1990.

Re: Environmental Marketing Claims Act of 1990

Hon. FRANK R. LAUTENBERG,
U.S. Senate, Hart Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR LAUTENBERG: I am writing on behalf of the Attorneys General of California, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Missouri and Texas to express support for the Environmental Marketing Claims Act of 1990. In December of 1989, we joined with the Attorneys General of several other states to form a Task Force to investigate the most recent marketing trend: the promotion of products as "environmentally friendly." Although we are excited about the potential of the "green revolution" to encourage the manufacture and use of products that are less harmful to the environment, we are concerned about the alarming rise in the number of confusing and misleading environmental claims.

As members of the Task Force, we have strongly advocated uniform national standards for environmental marketing claims. In March of this year, we joined with the other members of the Task Force to urge the National Association of Attorneys General to endorse a resolution calling on the Federal Trade Commission and the Environmental Protection Agency to work jointly with the states to develop uniform national guidelines for environmental marketing claims with input from environmental groups, consumer groups and members of the business community. The resolution was adopted unanimously.

Your proposed legislation provides a framework for this national regulation and standardization of environmental claims. We commend you for developing and sponsoring this important legislation. By providing for aggressive state and federal enforcement efforts, we believe that this legislation will greatly curtail the exploitation of consumers and the environment that results from confusing and deceptive environmental marketing claims.

Best regards,

HUBERT H. HUMPHREY III,
Attorney General.

RESOLUTION SUPPORTING DEVELOPMENT OF UNIFORM NATIONAL GUIDELINES FOR ENVIRONMENTAL CLAIMS IN ADVERTISING

Whereas American consumers are increasingly concerned about a wide array of threats to the environment and are increasingly interested in changing their buying habits to contribute personally to the protection of that environment; and

Whereas, consumers are beginning to favor products they believe will help the environment; and

Whereas, many businesses have begun to advertise and labels products as "degradable", "recyclable", "recycled" or otherwise environmentally "safe", and

Whereas, these terms have no uniform precise meanings, which may create confusion and potential deception, and

Whereas, State Attorneys General have formed a task force to examine this issue, and whereas, consumer groups, environmental groups, manufacturers, retailers, and trade associations appear to agree on the need for uniform but flexible national guidelines to help ensure the honesty of environmental claims in marketing; now Therefore, be it

Resolved, That NACAA:

(1) Encourages the Federal Trade Commission and the United States Environmental Protection Agency to work with state, county and municipal consumer agencies to develop uniform national guidelines for environmental marketing claims. Furthermore, NACAA urges that input be sought from environmental groups, private consumer groups, business and industry;

(2) Authorizes its President to make these views known to the U.S. Congress, the Federal Trade Commission, the Environmental Protection Agency and other interested parties.

[From the National Association of Attorneys General, March 18-20, 1990, Washington, DC]

RESOLUTION SUPPORTING DEVELOPMENT OF UNIFORM NATIONAL GUIDELINES FOR ENVIRONMENTAL MARKETING CLAIMS

Whereas, American consumers are increasingly concerned about a wide array of threats to the environment and are increasingly interested in changing their daily lives to contribute personally to the preservation of that environment; and

Whereas, consumers are translating these attitudes into purchasing decisions and are beginning to seek out products they believe will help the environment; and

Whereas, many businesses have begun to advertise and label products in a fashion designed to promote them as "degradable," "recyclable," "recycled" or otherwise "environmentally friendly," but these terms have no fixed or widely understood meanings, and are sometimes used in ways that are confusing and potentially misleading; and

Whereas, a Public Forum on Environmental Marketing was conducted in St. Paul, Minnesota, on March 14 and 15, 1990 by Attorneys General Humphrey, Hanaway, Webster, and Spaeth, and representatives of Generals Abams, Shannon, Eikenberry and Mattox, as well as representatives of the Federal Trade Commission and Environmental Protection Agency, to hear testimony on the issues, problems, and potential abuses in the field of environmental marketing; and

Whereas, witnesses at the Forum, including representatives of manufacturers, retailers, environmental groups, trade associations and consumer groups, were virtually unanimous in urging the development of uniform but flexible national guidelines to help ensure the honesty of environmental claims in marketing; Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the National Association of Attorneys General:

(1) requests the Federal Trade Commission and the United States Environmental Protection Agency to work jointly with the states to develop uniform national guidelines for environmental marketing claims, with input from environmental and consumer groups, members of business and industry, trade associations and other interested parties; and

(2) authorizes its Executive Director and General Counsel to transmit these views to the Federal Trade Commission, Environmental Protectional Agency and other interested parties.●

By Mr. MOYNIHAN:

S. 3219. A bill to mandate a study of the effectiveness of the national drug strategy and to provide for an accounting of funds devoted to its implementation; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

ACCOUNTING OF FUNDS FOR IMPLEMENTING THE NATIONAL DRUG STRATEGY

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, on March 7, 1990, the Washington Post reported that the Air Force is paying $100,000 to study how jet noise affects pregnant horses. Should we not be paying at least as much attention to how crack cocaine affects pregnant welfare mothers? Mr. President, the Congress has never mandated a comprehensive study which would examine the totality of our antidrug efforts to determine what methods work best and are the most cost effective.

Today I am introducing legislation which requires such a study. In 1988 a Democratic Working Group on Drug Policy, which I had the honor of cochairing with our esteemed colleague Senator NUNN, developed a comprehensive approach to the drug epidemic which was sweeping the country. This approach divided the subject into problems related to controlling the demand for drugs and problems related to controlling the supply of illegal drugs. Demand and supply, but demand came first. This plan was written into law as the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988.

I have long been skeptical of antidrug programs which place their primary emphasis on stopping the supply of drugs. Surely antisupply programs have their place, but we have consistently underestimated the lengths to which people will go to smuggle drugs into the United States. To take but one graphic example, in March of this year Avianca Flight 52 crashed on Long Island. Among the injured survivors were Antonio Zuluaga and Jose Figueroa. Both were found to have swallowed latex bags containing pure cocaine. Officials have said that they believe that the two were operating independently because the size and type of bags swallowed by the two differed. Customs officials at Kennedy Airport caught 60 persons trying to smuggle swallowed drugs into the country during the last 3 months of 1989 alone. Because of the difficulty of detecting this type of smuggling this number is doubtless a tiny fraction of the total number of such "mules" as they are known who entered New York during that period.

Moreover, drug officials do not even consider this a particularly serious form of smuggling. As Donald F. Kane, assistant chief of detectives in Nassau County explained, "The cartels deal in hundreds of thousands of pounds at a time. Not a quarter of a pound to a kilo"—the maximum amount one can swallow.

The point here is that the plan proposed by the Democratic Working Group embodied a broad approach. It included law enforcement and interdiction, but also emphasized the importance of providing treatment on request or application. I said at the outset that we should be devoting more attention to the effect of crack cocaine on pregnant mothers. And more attention to treatment for crack addiction. The need to evaluate the effectiveness of our efforts in these areas has recently been illustrated by a Government Accounting Office study titled "Drug Abuse: Research on Treatment May Not Address Current Needs". GAO concluded:

> Knowledge about drug abuse treatment is limited in significant ways. Knowledge concerning the effectiveness of drug abuse treatments is limited by the lack of recent large-scale evaluations of treatment programs and methodological shortcomings of existing evaluations.

It seems clear from this report that while we are now spending hundreds of millions of dollars on treatment research not enough has been done to determine the actual effectiveness of the various programs we are funding.

Recently the administration has issued a white paper which, for all practical purposes, rejects the specific, legislatively mandated goal of providing treatment on request. Director Bennett says that he thinks it is not "sensible" to put those seeking treatment "in the driver's seat." Of course, Congress wrote that goal into the law and it is not for Director Bennett to unilaterally decide to disregard it. But his hostility toward treatment on request is all the more reason that we should conduct a thorough, nonpartisan, scientific review of what actually works—dollar for dollar—and what does not.

This legislation is long overdue. As we approach and perhaps exceed the $10 billion level in annual drug program appropriations, it is high time that we ask the simple question: "What works?"

Let there be no mistake. This legislation is highly cost effective in its own right. Already we read headlines like the following: "Federal Funds for Drug Treatment Go Unspent, Official Says" and "DEA Cited for Wasteful Purchases". This is perhaps inevitable when we increase levels of funding so rapidly. Surely the vast and rapid Reagan defense buildup led to similar wastefulness. If we are to succeed and to succeed in the shortest possible time in reducing the level of epidemic drug addiction in the United States, then we need to compare the various possible approaches and make intelligent, informed choices among the competing priorities. The study mandated by this legislation is the sine qua non of making these choices in an intelligent manner.

Research is an important part of the President's drug strategy, for which I commend him. I believe that more must be done in many areas, especially in encouraging pharmacological treatment research, but the President's reports have placed great emphasis on research and its role in identifying cost-effective strategies. However, I believe that we need a comprehensive review of all of our efforts. This legislation would require the Secretary of Health and Human Services to arrange for the National Academy of Sciences to conduct this study. It also provides for an annual audit report of our drug programs by the General Accounting Office.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the legislation and the three reports from the Washington Post which I have mentioned be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3219

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) there is great disagreement concerning the causes of the problem of epidemic drug addiction in the United States and about the most effective way to reduce it;

(2) one of the factors which most inhibits an effective response to the problem of epidemic drug addiction in the United States is the lack of accurate information concerning both the problem and the specific effectiveness of each individual element of the Nation's anti-drug effort;

(3) evaluating the effectiveness of the individual elements of the Federal program to reduce epidemic drug abuse requires accurately establishing cause and effect relationships concerning drug addiction;

(4) the United States has promulgated a National Drug Strategy pursuant to the requirements of the 1988 Anti-Drug Abuse Act and will devote many billions of dollars to anti-drug programs for many years to come; and

(5) it is in the interests of the Nation that these funds be spent as effectively as possible and that a permanent mechanism exist to audit their expenditure.

SEC. 2. PURPOSES.

The purposes of this Act are to—

(1) require a study of the effectiveness of federally funded anti-drug programs; and

(2) create a permanent auditing mechanism for federally funded anti-drug programs.

SEC. 3. STUDY OF ANTI-DRUG PROGRAMS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services (referred to as the "Secretary") shall enter into appropriate arrangements with the National Academy of Sciences to conduct a comprehensive study and investigation of the effectiveness in reducing drug addiction of the various components of the Federal anti-drug program, including—

(1) crop eradication;

(2) crop substitution;

(3) support for foreign law enforcement;

(4) interdiction, including a separate analysis of the effectiveness of the military services in the interdiction effort;

(5) education;

(6) treatment;

(7) support for local law enforcement;

(8) criminal justice system reforms; and

(9) research, including a separate analysis of effectiveness of pharmocological research and research into other types of medical treatments for drug addiction.

(b) METHODOLOGY.—The study described in subsection (a) shall to the maximum extent possible—

(1) control for the effects of broad societal changes unrelated to specific anti-drug initiatives, such as changing demographic patterns;

(2) separate the effects of each component of the Federal anti-drug program from the effects of other anti-drug initiatives;

(3) consider the extent to which the expenditure of Federal funds on job training, education, and other health, education, and welfare programs contribute to reducing epidemic drug addiction;

(4) study the cost-effectiveness of each component of the Federal anti-drug program, as well as the programs described in subsection (b)(3); and

(5) take into account the social and demographic factors which influence rates and forms of epidemic drug addiction and provide, where possible, information on the effectiveness of the various components of the Federal anti-drug program on various demographic subgroups within the population.

(c) REPORTING.—In conducting the study described in subsection (a), the National Academy of Sciences shall provide to the Secretary and the Congress—

(1) not later than 6 months after the date of enactment of this Act a detailed written description of the manner in which the study will be conducted, including a specific set of goals for the study;

(2) not later than 18 months after the date of enactment of this Act the preliminary results of the study; and

(3) not later than 2 years after the date of enactment of this Act the final results of the study.

(d) UPDATE OF STUDY.—The Secretary shall enter into appropriate arrangements with the National Academy of Sciences to update the results of the study described in subsection (a) every 2 years following the initial report.

(e) ASSISTANCE FROM FEDERAL AGENCIES.—Agencies of the Federal Government shall provide to the National Academy of Sciences such information as it may reasonably request for the purpose of conducting the study described in subsection (a).

SEC. 4. AUDIT BY THE GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The General Accounting Office shall provide to the Congress on an annual basis an audit report concerning the management and expenditures of the component parts of the Federal anti-drug program.

(b) SEPARATE COMPONENTS.—The report described in (a) shall contain a separate section on each of the component parts of the Federal anti-drug program.

(c) ACCESS TO RECORDS.—In order to carry out the purposes of this section, the Comptroller General shall have such access to the records, files, personnel, and facilities of the Federal agencies involved in the Federal anti-drug program, including the military and intelligence services, as he considers necessary.

FEDERAL FUNDS FOR DRUG TREATMENT GO UNSPENT, OFFICIAL SAYS

(By Michael Isikoff)

A top Bush administration antidrug official said yesterday that claims of large waiting lists for drug treatment may be exaggerated, noting that many publicly funded drug-treatment programs have not spent all of their available federal funds.

Beny Primm, director of the Department of Health and Human Services' new office for treatment improvement, said his first priority is to "get a better handle" on the actual needs for expanded drug treatment. "Until we do that, I do not feel more money should be spent for drug treatment," he said.

Primm made the comments at a news conference at which the National Association of State Alcohol and Drug Abuse Directors released a report concluding that only 13 percent of the 10.6 million Americans who need treatment for substance abuse are receiving it.

The report, based on estimates from officials in 41 states and the District, reignited a political debate over the Bush administration's spending in the drug war. Although the administration has proposed increasing the federal anti-drug budget by $1.1 billion this year to $10.6 billion, more than 70 percent of the total would be spent on law enforcement and interdiction, areas that critics charge are often futile and ultimately less effective than reducing demand through more treatment and education.

Jack Gustafson, president of the association of state alcohol and drug-abuse directors, said the lack of greater funding for substance-abuse treatment is "a tragedy for millions of people who need help."

In a statement issued later, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.) called the association's report "an indictment of the misplaced priorities of the Bush administration" and said the nation needs "a balanced drug strategy—one that does not neglect the importance of treatment and prevention."

The association's report stated that drug addicts or alcoholics who lack the money to pay for private treatment wait an average of three weeks to get into a publicly funded outpatient program—enough time to cause many addicts to give up. For residential treatment, the average wait is 45 days, the survey found.

But Primm noted that the federal government had budgeted a special $100 million, two-year grant to help reduce waiting periods by making available up to 21,535 treatment "slots." He said, however, that some community-based programs slated to receive those funds, primarily in the Northeast, have yet to "draw down" the money, leaving more than 2,000 slots unallocated.

Gustafson said this is because of bureaucratic and contracting delays. But Primm said the failure of the programs to spend the money "shocks me" and "tells me that some of the reports relating to the demand for treatment were soft."

David Tell, deputy chief of staff for national drug policy director William J. Bennett, and drug-treatment funding has nearly doubled to $760 million over the past year and, as a result, "we are very close" to providing treatment for the approximately 2 million Americans who Bennett's office estimates need such treatment.

"The bottom line is federal drug treatment funding has taken off like a rocket since we've been here," Tell said. "And we've spilled a lot of blood to get that rocket up in the air."

DEA CITED FOR WASTEFUL PURCHASES—JUSTICE DEPARTMENT REPORT FINDS RULES IGNORED

(By Michael Isikoff)

The Drug Enforcement Administration has repeatedly violated federal procurement rules by awarding no-bid contracts, overpaying its suppliers and other procedural irregularities that cost the government hundreds of thousands of dollars, according to an audit by the Justice Department inspector general's office.

The audit, prepared for Attorney General Dick Thornburgh, found irregularities and waste in a wide variety of DEA contracts—including the purchase of satellite communications radios, data encryption devices, special breathing apparatus and other high-tech equipment being used in the drug war.

In one case, DEA paid a contractor $225,500 for three video cameras that were being installed on aircraft turrets—products the audit concludes should have cost the agency less than one-third that amount, or $7,230.

The report also concluded that DEA frequently ignored federal regulations requiring competitive bidding, failed to award contracts in a timely fashion and made "substantial omissions and errors" in reporting procurement information to the Justice Department.

DEA management "had not established and implemented adequate internal controls to protect the interest of the government," according to the report by acting inspector general Tony Moscato.

DEA spokesman Conn Dougherty said the agency will have no comment on the report until it completes formal, written responses due at the end of this month. But David Runkel, spokesman for Thornburgh, said "there has been a great deal of discussion with people at DEA" about the report and that the agency will take steps to ensure that the irregularities do not reoccur.

Nevertheless, the report raised new congressional concerns about DEA's management practices at a time the agency is slated to receive hefty budget increases. As part of the Bush administration's escalation of the anti-drug effort, DEA's budget is slated to jump to $700 million next year—a 27 percent increase over current levels.

In addition, the agency's administrator, John C. Lawn, will retire March 23 to become vice president of the New York Yankees, and the Bush administration has announced a wide-ranging search to find a replacement.

"Obviously, there is some bad management there," said Rep. Robert E. Wise Jr. (D-W.Va.), the chairman of the House government information, justice and agriculture subcommittee. "It concerns me."

Wise cited, as one example $150,000 in DEA contracts awarded in 1988 to provide Spanish language training to agents being sent to Latin America. DEA failed to follow department rules requiring written solicitation of bids because of the "unusual and compelling urgency" of the need—a justification the audit concludes was unwarranted since DEA had known for some time that its agents would need the training.

As part of the audit, the inspector general's office reviewed over $25 million in DEA contracts and purchase orders between fiscal 1986 and the first three months of fiscal 1989, which began Oct. 1, 1988. It identifies at least $567,000 in what it calls "unnecessary costs" on four contracts, including paying $279,000 too much for radio maintenance and $233,232 too much for data encryption equipment.

DEA could have realized savings amounting to even more than the excess costs identified had it adequately planned to meet its need and sought competitive bids, the report said. In one case, DEA awarded four sole-source contracts totaling $2.3 million to one company for a sophisticated satellite communications system, even though two other manufacturers had been identified as being capable of supplying the equipment.

Of 25 sole-source contracts reviewed by the auditors, 10 "could have been awarded competitively." the report states. "As a result, DEA may not have received the lower prices normally obtainable."

AIR FORCE PAYING $100,000 TO STUDY HOW JET NOISE AFFECTS PREGNANT HORSES

GAINESVILLE, FL, March 6.—The Air Force is paying for a $100,000 study to determine how low-flying F-4 Phantom fighter jets may affect the health and behavior of pregnant horses kept near military bases.

Simulated bursts of jet noise will reverberate through barns to determine their effect on eight pregnant, thoroughbred and saddlebred horses, researchers at the University of Florida said. A control group of eight pregnant mares will not be exposed to the din.

"Heavily pregnant mares may be more susceptible to the stress of aircraft noise," said Dr. Michelle LeBlanc, a veterinarian and associate professor at the university's department of large animal clinical sciences. Next year, LeBlanc will continue the study using jets, she said.

The study is funded by the Air Force's unit of noise and sonic boom impact technology.●

By Mr. SARBANES (for himself, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. WARNER, Mr. ROBB, Mr. HEINZ, and Mr. SPECTER):

S. 3220. A bill to assist in the restoration of the Chesapeake Bay, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

CHESAPEAKE BAY RESTORATION ACT

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, today I am introducing together with my colleagues from Maryland, Virginia, and Pennsylvania—Senators MIKULSKI, WARNER, ROBB, HEINZ, and SPECTER—legislation to reauthorize and enhance the Chesapeake Bay Program. This legislation, entitled the Chesapeake Bay Restoration Act of 1990, not only continues the tremendously successful program authorized in the 1987 Water Quality Act, but provides for an expansion and strengthening of the cooperative efforts to restore and protect the Chesapeake Bay. An identical bill is being introduced today in the House.

Why is this legislation needed? For two reasons. First, the existing authorization for the Chesapeake Bay Program, along with other Water Quality Act programs, expired on September 30, at the end of fiscal year 1990. The program along with other Water Quality Act programs are being continued through authorities and funding in the appropriations process. However, there is still much work that needs to be done on the bay and the need for a new authorization is clear and compelling. Second, with the signing of the Chesapeake Bay agreement in December 1987, the bay area jurisdictions and the Federal Government committed to an ambitious program to achieve improved water quality and living resources productivity. The bay area States have moved swiftly to enact legislation and dedicate funding to meet their commitments under the agreement. In order to assure effective implementation of the pact at the Federal level, it is essential that new authorities and resources be provided.

The Chesapeake Bay Restoration Act provides those new authorities and additional resources. It authorizes $20 million a year for the next 4 years for the Chesapeake Bay Program—an increase of $7 million over the previously authorized level. It establishes new initiatives to address key issues such as toxic pollution, the decline of the bay's living resources, and population growth and land use. This legislation reauthorizes the programs established in the 1987 Water Quality Act—a $3 million authorization for EPA to administer the program and a $10 million authorization for grants to the bay area States which has been used primarily for nonpoint source reduction efforts. In addition, this legislation authorizes the resources and guidance for the Federal agencies necessary to begin implementing the strategies called for under the 1987 bay agreement.

The legislation was carefully crafted over the past 7 months with the assistance of the bay area States—Maryland, Pennsylvania, and Virginia—and the District of Columbia, the Chesapeake Bay Commission, the Citizens Advisory Committee, the Scientific and Technical Advisory Committee, the Local Government Advisory Committee, the Alliance for the Chesapeake Bay, the Chesapeake Bay Foundation, the bay area congressional delegation, and many others. It represents a consensus on the highest priority needs as identified by the agencies and organizations responsible for implementing the strategies and programs called for under the bay agreement. It is not intended as a catch-all bill which addresses every possible aspect of every Federal agency participation in the bay cleanup effort. Rather, it is intended to continue and improve upon the Chesapeake Bay Program that was authorized in the 1987 Clean Water Act.

We have come a long way since the first Chesapeake Bay agreement was signed in December 1983 initiating the cooperative Federal-State effort to clean up the bay. Over the past 7 years, remarkable progress has been made in laying the groundwork for the restoration, protection, and enhancement of the bay. An interstate and Federal-State management structure is in place, including memoranda of understanding between EPA and other major Federal agencies, outlining their responsibilities for the bay program. States have adopted far-reaching initiatives and activities that are now underway. The bay area congressional delegation has worked closely together and has been successful in obtaining funding for the Federal agencies involved in the bay program. There is strong public support and a high degree of cooperation and coordination among all parties. Indeed, the Chesapeake Bay Program has been heralded as a model for other estuaries throughout the country and, indeed, around the world.

There are encouraging signs that the bay is improving. Since 1985, phosphorus discharges from municipal treatment plants, industry and nonpoint sources into the bay have been reduced by 35 percent. This is a direct result of the phosphate detergent ban now in place in each State and the District of Columbia, new sewage treatment plant construction featuring processes for advanced phosphorus removal and the bay program's unique nonpoint source controls. Submerged aquatic vegetation [SAV], which provides critical habitat for the bay's living resources, has made a slow but steady comeback from dramatic declines in the 1960's and 1970's. This can be directly traced to improved water quality. Striped bass have also made a significant recovery from the depleted stocks of the early 1980's. This is a success that demonstrates that management controls can make a difference in the health of the bay's resources.

Despite these great efforts, it is clear that we have a long way to go before improvements to the bay's water quality and living resources will be readily apparent. Problems such as medical wastes washing up on the shores near Baltimore Harbor and Annapolis, oil spills that spread thousands of gallons across the bay, the spread of MSX and other deadly oyster diseases, toxic chemicals and nutrients that continue to pollute the bay's surface and bottom waters underscore the difficult challenge continuing to face the bay.

Addressing these serious problems will require a significant and sustained effort on the part of all participants, as well as significant financial resources. Although this legislation will not be considered in the closing days of this Congress, we wanted to introduce the bill this year to begin the discussion and to be prepared for consideration during the reauthorization of the Clean Water Act next year. We plan to reintroduce the bill at the beginning of the 102d Congress and will seek to have its provisions incorporated in the Clean Water Act. It is our hope that the measure which we are introducing today will set the course of efforts to protect and restore our national treasure, the Chesapeake Bay, over the next several years.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that letters and statements from Governor Schaefer of Maryland, Governor Wilder of Virginia, and Governor Casey of Pennsylvania; the Chesapeake Bay Commission, and the Chesapeake Bay Foundation, in support of this legislation be included in the RECORD following my statement. I also ask that the text of the bill and a section-by-section analysis of the bill be made part of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3220

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Chesapeake Bay Restoration Act of 1990".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

(1) the Chesapeake Bay is a national treasure and a resource of worldwide significance;

(2) the productivity and water quality of the Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries in recent years have been diminished by pollution, excessive sedimentation, shoreline erosion, the impacts of growth and development of population in the watershed, and other factors;

(3) the Chesapeake Bay Agreement established an institutional framework, including a Chesapeake Executive Council with oversight, to implement a series of goals, objectives, and commitments to protect, restore, and enhance the estuary's ecosystem;

(4) there is a need to expand and strengthen Federal support of research, monitoring, and management activities in the Bay in order to meet the goals, objectives, and commitments of the Chesapeake Bay Agreement, particularly in the areas of water quality; living resources; public information, education and participation; population growth, development, and governance;

(5) the United States Environmental Protection Agency should continue to lead a cooperative Federal initiative with the United States Army Corps of Engineers, United States Department of Agriculture, United States Department of the Interior, Department of Defense, National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, United States Coast Guard, and other Federal agencies in the effort to attain the goals embodied in the Chesapeake Bay Agreement, working with State and local authorities;

(6) the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration has an important role in the Bay restoration program through participation in Bay research, monitoring, assessment, and management studies and should continue these activities;

(7) the various research and monitoring programs related to the Chesapeake Bay should be closely coordinated to achieve improved water quality and living resources productivity;

(8) public information, education, and participation are essential to foster stewardship of the Bay's resources, to help identify and prioritize the Bay-related problems of each watershed or river basin, and to formulate goals and objectives for addressing these problems;

(9) there is a clear correlation between population growth and development, and environmental degradation in the Chesapeake Bay system and accurate and timely land use data is essential to plan for and manage growth and development and associated impacts on the Chesapeake Bay system and its living resources;

(10) the Federal Government has a special responsibility to ensure that its activities and programs are consistent with State and local efforts to improve the health of the Chesapeake Bay, and Federal facilities and programs must achieve the highest standards of environmental sensitivity and protection;

(11) the local government and citizens' role in the Chesapeake Bay clean-up effort is a vital component for attaining the goals of the Chesapeake Bay Agreement;

(12) the productivity, diversity, and abundance of living resources are the best ultimate measures of the Chesapeake Bay's condition and research and assessment programs directed toward monitoring and enhancing the condition of these resources should be accorded a high priority; and

(13) the fisheries of the Chesapeake Bay provide hundreds of millions of dollars in annual economic activity and thousands of related jobs for the region, and proper management of these vital fisheries resources must include consideration of both biological, environmental, and socioeconomic factors.

SEC. 3. PURPOSE.

It is the purpose of this Act to expand and strengthen the cooperative efforts to restore and protect the Chesapeake Bay and to achieve the goals embodied in the Chesapeake Bay Agreement.

SEC. 4. MANAGEMENT OF CHESAPEAKE BAY PROGRAM.

STATEMENT ON FEDERAL CHESAPEAKE BAY LEGISLATION BY GOV. WILLIAM DONALD SCHAEFER

I want to commend Senator Sarbanes and all the Members of Congress who seized the initiative and put together this new legislation. The bill being introduced today marks the beginning of an important new chapter in the Chesapeake Bay clean up effort.

The Chesapeake Bay program has been a model for saving estuaries around the country. We have been successful in the Bay program because we never stand still; because we are never satisfied with the status quo; because we are constantly forging ahead; and because we work together in a strong federal-state partnership.

The time has come to take the next step. We must match the rhetoric about the need to clean up the Bay with the resources necessary to do the job. This legislation will give the federal government the resources needed to keep its promises.

Our efforts to restore the Bay took a giant leap forward in 1987 with the signing of the historic Chesapeake Bay Agreement. That Agreement strengthened the partnership between the Chesapeake Bay states and the federal government. It also set out ambitious goals for reducing pollution in the Bay. We have made much progress since then, but we still have a long way to go.

This legislation is the next step in our long march to restore and protect our nation's greatest estuary. The federal government took on many new responsibilities in the 1986 Bay Agreement. While the EPA and other federal government agencies have worked hard to meet those responsibilities, they need additional resources to meet their commitments.

This legislation will bring the federal contribution in line with its commitments. It will increase federal funding for many important Bay projects. It will boost federal support for our toxics clean up effort. And it pulls the federal government into our fight against pollution caused by urban and suburban runoff—which is a major problem throughout the Bay watershed.

Just last weekend we held a statewide Community Service Day in Maryland. Citizens from around the state helped pull litter and trash out of the Anacostia River, Rock Creek, and other tributaries that empty into the Bay. Citizens from throughout the Chesapeake Bay watershed want to clean up the Bay and they want to do it now.

We can all take pride in the progress we have made in cleaning up the Bay, but we must not become complacent. We must not look back on how far we have come. We must look forward at how much farther we still have to go.

So we are here today to look ahead and to open the next chapter in the Bay clean up effort. The next chapter calls for an expanded federal role in our fight to save the Chesapeake Bay. This bill will bring the federal government's contribution under the Bay Agreement in line with its commitments and improve coordination within the Bay program. I thank Senator Sarbanes and his Congressional colleagues for launching this initiative and I urge the quick adoption of this important legislation.

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA,
OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR
Richmond VA, October 15, 1990.

Hon. PAUL S. SARBANES,
Member, U.S. Senate, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR SARBANES: As a member of the Chesapeake Executive Council and as the Governor of the Commonwealth of Virginia, I am committed to cleaning up the Chesapeake Bay, and I endorse the reauthorization bill you are introducing.

The Chesapeake Bay system is a regional and national resource that can be restored and protected only if we work together. The principal cooperative mechanism through which we will be able to attain the goal of a permanently healthy and productive Bay is the Chesapeake Bay Program.

Congress' dedication to the Bay has been critical in the successful evolution of this unique regional enterprise. Your support for reauthorization of the program will greatly assist the challenging process of restoration and protection.

With best wishes, I am

Very truly yours,

LAWRENCE DOUGLAS WILDER.

COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA,
OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR,
Harrisburg, October 16, 1990.

Hon. PAUL S. SARBANES,
Member, U.S. Senate, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR SARBANES: I strongly support the proposed "Chesapeake Bay Restoration Act of 1990," to reauthorize the Chesapeake Bay Program. The proposed legisation is the product of extensive discussion and debate among all Chesapeake Bay states, including Pennsylvania.

The current federal mandate under Section 117 of the Clean Water Act was enacted before the 1987 Chesapeake Bay Agreement was signed. The time has come to update that legislation and build upon the federal-state partnership we established in the Bay Agreement.

Substantial progress has been made in cleaning up the Chesapeake Bay under the existing program, but much more needs to be done. This legisation marks an important new phase in the Chesapeake Bay Program. I have contacted Senator Heinz and Senator Specter to urge their support for the legislation.

Sincerely,

CHESAPEAKE BAY FOUNDATION,
Annapolis, MD, October 12, 1990.

Hon. PAUL S. SARBANES,
U.S. Senate, Senate Dirksen Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR SARBANES: I am writing to express the Chesapeake Bay Foundation's strong support for the Chesapeake Bay Restoration Act of 1990. As you know, CBF feels that the leadership of the State/Federal Chesapeake Bay Program is crucial for the restoration of the Bay. This legislation is essential to ensuring the continuation and enhancement of the Bay Program's efforts.

The legislation that has been drafted represents the consensus of the Bay community, including both government and non-government organizations; as a true consensus, it is a compromise among groups with different priorities and perspectives on the Bay and its problems. I view this bill as reflecting the best judgment of all of the participants in the Bay cleanup, and I am comfortable with it as it now stands. I do not see it as legislation reflecting any one senator or representative; I hope that the entire delegations of Virginia, Maryland, and Pennsylvania will sponsor it.

I am pleased the NOAA's role in the Bay cleanup will be explicitly recognized in this legislation. The establishment of a local NOAA office for the Chesapeake Bay is a necessary part of that commitment. Our view of the appropriations in this legislation is that they belong to the Chesapeake Bay, and not to any particular Federal or State agency. The Bay Program structure appears to be adequate for ensuring the wise use of the lands.

There is a tendency to consider environmental protection a luxury that the nation cannot afford during times of fiscal austerity. The Chesapeake Bay Restoration Act is not a luxury—it is our nation's recognition that if we cannot commit ourselves to Save the Bay, we will never learn how to live on this planet without destroying it. As important as the Bay is to those of us who live near it, it is also a critical national and international model for humanity's evolution from abuse to stewardship of our land and its resources. I urge you to co-sponsor and support this bill.

Very truly yours,

WILLIAM C. BAKER,
President.

CHESAPEAKE BAY COMMISSION,
Annapolis, MD, October 16, 1990.

Hon. PAUL S. SARBANES,
Senate Dirksen Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR SARBANES: I am writing to express the Chesapeake Bay Commission's strong support for the Chesapeake Bay Restoration Act of 1990. The Chesapeake Bay Commission is a tri-state legislative advisory commission created to assist the General Assemblies of Maryland, Virginia and Pennsylvania in addressing Chesapeake Bay-related issues which are of mutual concern to the three member states. This congressional reauthorization and enhancement of the Chesapeake Bay Program is certainly one such issue.

The federal-state partnership which has been established through the Chesapeake Bay Program has become a model for environmental management throughout the country. It is essential that this structure be maintained and enhanced. Over the past several months, our Commission staff in Annapolis have been active participants in developing a consensus of the entire Bay community concerning the future needs and direction of this important program.

We believe this legislation represents a true consensus of governmental and nongovernmental organizations that are integrally involved in the Chesapeake Bay restoration and protection efforts. The bill includes important new federal initiatives in the areas of living resources protection, toxics research and population growth and development. These represent major areas in which we, the states, require additional federal assistance.

This legislation is vital to the continued success of our efforts to protect this national treasure, the Chesapeake Bay. It is an issue which I believe warrants and receives the full backing of citizens throughout the Chesapeake Bay watershed. I urge you to sign on as original sponsor of this measure.

Sincerely,

KENNETH J. COLE,
Chairman.

● Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I am pleased to join as an original cosponsor of the Chesapeake Bay Restoration Act of 1990. This important legislation, which, among other things would reauthorize the Chesapeake Bay Program, is supported by a broad range of groups from States bordering the Chesapeake Bay.

Mr. President, as we introduce this legislation, my colleagues will recall the history of our efforts to "Save the Bay." It is worth reviewing that history at this time. Early in the eighties, research revealed that an increasing oxygen shortage had caused a decline in bay resources, including oysters, clams, and vegetation. This discovery led to the signing of the first Chesapeake Bay Agreement in 1983, which was designed to meet this threat to the environment.

In subsequent years Virginia, Maryland, Pennsylvania, the District of Columbia, and the Environmental Protection Agency [EPA] have forged an enviable partnership to restore and protect the Chesapeake Bay. The commitment exhibited by officials from these entities has helped to establish a firm foundation for achieving the goal of significantly improving the mangement of the bay.

On December 15, 1987, the Chesapeake Bay Executive Council, comprised of representatives from Virginia, Maryland, Pennsylvania, the District of Columbia, and EPA, signed the 1987 Chesapeake Bay Agreement. This agreement, which set specific goals and timetables for the bay's restoration, was designed to reverse the decline that has imperiled the Chesapeake Bay's status as a major source of jobs, seafood, recreation and regional culture.

The agreement set an important goal requiring a 40-percent reduction in nitrogen and phosphorous by the year 2000. According to reports, the nutrient reduction plan is being implemented and progress is being made in improving the bay's management.

Despite all of the progress that has been made to date, it is clear that more action is required. The Chesapeake Bay Restoration Act of 1990 represents a crucial step in that process.

In particular, the bill would provide much-needed authority for EPA to continue to lead and coordinate Federal agency participation in the Chesapeake Bay Program, in cooperation with the Chesapeake Executive Council. The bill also directs the Administration [NOAA] together to implement a comprehensive, coordinated program for science research, monitoring and data collection of the bay and its watershed. In addition, the bill would authorize funds to implement the comprehensive basinwide toxics reduction strategy called for under the bay agreement, provide for development of a coordinated Chesapeake Bay watershed land use data base, and establish a demonstration program to address problems associated with urban and suburban runoff. Finally, EPA is directed to undertake an assessment of the Chesapeake Bay Program and evaluate implementation of the bay agreement.

Mr. President, the legislation introduced today represents the consensus of many individuals who are knowledgeable about the methods of preserving the bay as a precious national resource: Those in the bay community, Federal, State and local governments, and many others, including nongovernment organizations. As is the case with any consensus agreement, this bill serves to reflect the best judgment of all participants.

tion Act. Virginia State officials were active participants in developing this proposal, and they tell me that they are pleased with the result.

Mr. President, I commend my Senate colleagues from Virginia, Maryland, and Pennsylvania for their work on this bill. In particular, I applaud the work of my colleague from Maryland, Senator SARBANES, for his leadership in working with officials from all of the bay States to bring this legislation to this point. I look forward to working with the members of these delegations to enact this legislation.●

● Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I'd like to thank my colleague, Senator SARBANES, for the hard work and effort he's put into the Chesapeake Bay Restoration Act of 1990. With Senator SARBANES' work on the authorizing committee, and my Chair on the Appropriations Subcommittee that funds, EPA, we're a one-two punch for the Chesapeake Bay. Together, we're working to protect and preserve Maryland's, and this region's, most valuable natural resource.

The Chesapeake Bay Restoration Act of 1990 builds on the Chesapeake Bay Agreement of 1987. The delegations—both House and Senate—of every State in the region have worked closely together to take a great step toward saving the Chesapeake Bay.

What this legislation means is that the Chesapeake Bay will be safe to swim in. Oysters and rockfish caught in the bay will be safe to eat—and the Chesapeake Bay watermen will be able to earn their living as they have always done.

This legislation means that docks and back yards won't wash away. It means that our children and their families will have a place to spend their weekends, or a resource to make a living from. It means that we care enough to preserve the Chesapeake Bay for them.

Mr. President, we've made a lot of promises on the Chesapeake Bay—promises made and promises kept. The Chesapeake Bay is in better health today than it was in 1987. Today, we say that the promise continues.

I am proud of our record—and of everyone who has pitched in to help. From the volunteers who go out and pick up trash on the beaches of the bay to the farmers who have cut back on fertilizers to reduce nonpoint source pollution, everyone has pitched in to help nonpoint source pollution, everyone has pitched in to help the Bay. The State of Maryland has done an outstanding job, and I want to take special note of their commitment.

And here in the Senate, I have been working to make sure that the Federal Government lives up to our end of the deal. I Chair the subcommittee that funds the EPA, the lead Federal Agency on Chesapeake Bay programs. Earlier this week, the conference committee on our spending bill for 1991 approved an increase in funding for the Chesapeake Bay Program to over $12 million.

We are also working to make sure that other Federal agencies do their fair share. NOAA will continue their vital studies on fisheries stocks, controlling contamination, monitoring algae, and tracking changes in crucial neighboring wetlands through LANDSAT. The Fish and Wildlife Service will continue to work to preserve the incredible and diverse fish and wildlife habitat that is part of the Chesapeake Bay system. And the National Park Service is being asked to identify areas of the shoreline on the bay which are ecologically sensitive or culturally significant.

Mr. President, I pledge to continue my efforts to make sure that programs to save the bay are funded. Through this effort, the legislation being introduced by my distinguished colleague the senior Senator from Maryland, the commitment of State and local officials, and the care and concern of all of the people who enjoy the bay, we will continue to improve the bay.●

● Mr. ROBB. Mr. President, I am pleased to cosponsor the Chesapeake Bay Restoration Act of 1990.

The legislation builds on the successful effort to clean up the bay, to which I have been committed since my term as Governor of Virginia from 1982 to 1986. Since 1983, when the first bay agreement was signed, we have made tremendous strides in restoring and preventing further deterioration of the bay. The bay initiative serves as a model of cooperation between State and Federal Governments attempting to save a vital natural and economic resource.

At the same time, as the population in each of our States grows, and the pressures to develop land increase, it is essential that we continue to push forward in the bay restoration effort.

The Chesapeake Bay agreements represent an important set of promises; the Federal funds proposed in this legislation would continue to provide the resources necessary to fulfill those promises.●

By Mr. BURNS (for himself, Mr. ARMSTRONG, Mr. HEFLIN, Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. INOUYE, and Mr. HELMS):

S.J. Res. 381. Joint resolution to designate November 2, 1990, as a national day of prayer for members of American military forces and American citizens stationed or held hostage in the Middle East, and for their families; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL DAY OF PRAYER FOR THE MIDEAST SITUATION

● Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a joint resolution to designate November 2, 1990, as a national day of prayer for members of American military forces and American citizens stationed or held hostage in the Middle East, and for their families. I am introducing this resolution on behalf of myself and Senators ARMSTRONG, Mr. HEFLIN, Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. INOUYE, and Mr. HELMS.

This resolution was introduced yesterday in the House of Representatives by Representative DUNCAN from Tennessee, and it is something we hope to get enacted into law prior to adjournment. I would urge all my colleagues to look at this resolution and consider cosponsoring it.

In times of crisis, our great Nation has always sought the favor and mercy of God. In fact, the first proclamation of this nature was issued on March 30, 1863, by President Abraham Lincoln in the midst of the Civil War. The situation in Saudi Arabia has not escalated to the point of war, as we all know, and I do not mean to imply that it will.

Regardless of the outcome, our military forces and those being held against their will in the Middle East continue to face great hardships. They have all shown bravery and confidence in the face of danger, yet the need remains for prayer for their safety, strength for their families, and guidance for our National leaders.

I urge my colleagues to cosponsor this resolution so that we can get it passed and signed by the President before November 2.●

By Mr. DIXON:

S.J. Res. 382. Joint resolution disapproving the recommendation of the President to extend nondiscriminatory treatment—most-favored-nation treatment—to the products of the People's Republic of China; to the Committee on Finance.

DISAPPROVAL OF MOST-FAVORED-NATION TRADING STATUS FOR THE PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

● Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I rise today to reintroduce a joint resolution of disapproval of the President's recommendation to extend most-favored-nation status to the People's Republic of China.

This resolution is necessary because the laws applicable to nondiscriminatory trade treatment legislation have changed. The Customs and Tariffs Act, recently signed into law by the President, includes language on the process of dealing with joint resolutions.

The regime in China is just as undeserving today as it was after the brutal massacre of Chinese pro-democracy students and workers in Tiananmen Square for continued most-favored-nation status trade treatment. MFN is a preferential trade status conferred upon nations of the world by the United States. We grant that status to deserving nations. The People's Republic of China is not deserving of continued MFN status.

Political repression, imprisonment of prodemocracy supporters, and religious persecution continue. The Chinese Government has not made the necessary significant steps toward political and economic reform. The regime in Beijing continues to pay little attention to the international calls for respect of human rights and freedom of expression.

Asia Watch, a human rights monitoring group, wrote about the continued repression in China in its August 1, 1990, edition of news from Asia Watch. In the article, entitled "China: Ongoing Repression," the group came to this conclusion about the situation in China:

Although China announced the release of significant numbers of political prisoners in May and June, many participants in the pro-democracy movement continue to be detained in jails or labor camps around the country. Many new arrests have taken place, and some released prisoners have been re-arrested even with the May-June releases, it is difficult to say that the human rights situation has undergone any major improvement since June 4, 1989, the date of the massacre at Tiananmen Square.

We must continue to pressure the Chinese to reform themselves, and make it clear that their failure to change will result in the removal of the People's Republic of China as a beneficiary of United States MFN trade status.●

BOREN (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 3028

Mr. BOREN (for himself, Mr. NUNN, Mr. LIEBERMAN, and Mr. GRAHAM) proposed an amendment to the bill S. 3209, supra, as follows:

At the end of title VII, insert:

SEC. . SENSE OF SENATE WITH RESPECT TO GROWTH AND SAVINGS INCENTIVES.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Senate finds that—

(1) the President and Congressional leaders have worked diligently to fashion a broad bipartisan budget;

(2) any budget package should pass the following three tests to truly serve the national interest;

(A) first, it must be fair—the heaviest burden should not be placed on those least able to bear it;

(B) second, it should help rebuild our economic strength and make us better able to compete in world markets so that we will have the jobs for the next generation of Americans; and

(C) third, it should provide savings and investment incentives to the middle income people of this country—those who work on our farms and in our factories, and create our small businesses; for they are the backbone of America.

(b) SENSE OF SENATE.—It is the sense of the Senate that the Senate conferees should work towards a final budget package that meets these three important tests by increasing the tax rate of incomes above $200,000 by an amount sufficient to—

(1) allow middle income Americans, those with family incomes below $100,000, to set aside up to $1,000 of their income in individual retirement accounts to be used not only for the retirement but also to provide for education and medical expenses and for first-time home purchases;

(2) reduce the tax on capital gains for designated amounts over a lifetime to provide incentives for Americans, with special incentives for middle-income Americans, to make long-term investments that create jobs, reduce America's growing dependence on borrowing from abroad, and increase the productivity and competitiveness of our Nation; and

(3) reduce the proposed increase in gasoline excise taxes.

RECLAMATION PROJECTS AUTHORIZATION AND ADJUSTMENT ACT

HEINZ (AND KOHL) AMENDMENTS NOS. 3029 AND 3030

(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mr. HEINZ (for himself and Mr. KOHL) submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by them to the bill (H.R. 2567) entitled "Reclamation Projects Authorization and Adjustment Act of 1990", as follows:

AMENDMENT No. 3029

At the appropriate place, insert the following new section:

SEC. . COST FOR DELIVERY OF WATER USED TO PRODUCE THE CROPS OF CERTAIN AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES.

Section 9 of the Reclamations Act of 1939 (43 U.S.C. 485h) is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(g)(1) All contracts entered into, renewed, or amended under authority of this section or any other provision of Federal reclamation law after—

"(A) 2 years after the date of enactment of this subsection shall require that the organization agree by contract with the Secretary to pay at least 50 percent of full cost for the delivery of water used in the production of any crop of an agricultural commodity for which an acreage reduction program is in effect under the provisions of the Agricultural Act of 1949; and

"(B) 4 years after the date of enactment of this subsection shall require that the organization agree by contract with the Secretary to pay at least full cost for the delivery of water used in the production of any crop of an agricultural commodity for which an acreage reduction program is in effect under the provisions of the Agricultural Act of 1949.

"(2) The Secretary shall announce the amount of the full cost payment for the succeeding year on or before July 1 of each year.

"(3) As used in this subsection, the term 'full cost' shall have the meaning given such term in paragraph (3) of section 202 of the Reclamation Reform Act of 1982.

"(4) This subsection shall not apply to—

"(A) any contract which provides for irrigation on individual Indian or tribal lands on which repayment is deferred pursuant to the Act of July 1, 1032 (47 Stat. 564; 25 U.S.C. 386(a), commonly referred to as the 'Levitt Act');

"(B) an amendment of any contract with any organization which, on the date of enactment of this subsection, is required pursuant to a contract with the Secretary as a condition precedent to the delivery of water to make cash contributions of at least 20 percent of the cost of construction of irrigation facilities concurrently with the construction of such facilities by the Secretary; and

"(C) any contract which carries out the provisions of the Garrison Diversion Unit Reformulation Act of 1986 (Public Law 99-294; 100 Stat. 418).".

At the appropriate place, insert the following new section:

SEC. . FAIR MARKET VALUE FOR SALES OF LAND.

(a) EFFECTIVE DATE.—Section 209(f)(2) of the Reclamation Reform Act of 1982 is amended by striking "the date of enactment of this Act," and inserting "October 12, 1982 but before the enactment of the Reclamation Reform Act Amendments of 1990".

(b) FAIR MARKET VALUE.—Section 209(f) of such Act is further amended by adding at the end the following:

"(3) In the case of disposals of excess lands, including such land not under recordable contracts, made on or after the enactment of the Reclamation Projects Authorization & Adjustment Act of 1990, the disposal of excess lands to nonexcess owners shall be for fair market value of the land, which shall be paid to excess owners except for the fair market value related to the delivery of irrigation water, which shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts. Upon such disposal the title to these lands shall be freed of the burden of any limitations on subsequent sale values which might otherwise be imposed by the operation of section 46 of the Act entitled 'An Act to adjust water rights charges, to grant certain relief on the Federal irrigation projects, and for other purposes,' approved May 25, 1926 (43 U.S.C. 423e).".

FUTURES TRADING PRACTICES ACT

LEAHY (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 3031

Mr. LEAHY (for himself, Mr. LUGAR, Mr. BOND, Mr. DODD, and Mr. HEINZ) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them to the bill (S. 1729) to amend the Commodity Exchange Act to reauthorize such act, and for other purposes, as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following new title:

TITLE —INTERMARKET COORDINATION

SEC. . MARGIN AUTHORITY OVER STOCK INDEX FUTURES.

(a) AUTHORITY OF THE BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM OVER MARGIN ON STOCK INDEX FUTURES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Act (7 U.S.C. 1 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SEC. 24. AUTHORITY OF THE BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM OVER MARGIN ON STOCK INDEX FUTURES.

"(a) PURPOSE.—The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System has authority to prescribe rules and regulations with respect to margin for securities (other than exempted securities) and options on such securities under the Securities and Exchange Act of 1934 and has other important responsibilities with respect to credit, banking, and finance. Thus, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System is well placed to—

"(A) exercise margin authority with respect to each segment of the overall interdependent market system for establishing prices for equity securities and related products—equity securities, futures, and related options;

"(B) assess the prudential impact of margin levels on the participants and institutions within each such segment;

"(C) assess the potential for systemic risk which may arise as a result of margin levels in any such segment;

"(D) take account, in any such assessment, of the respective roles and structure of margin in each segment and its impact on prudential risk; and

"(E) apply a consistent viewpoint on the nature and magnitude of systemic and prudential risk in making judgments with respect to margin in each such segment and its effect on the maintenance of orderly markets.

Congress therefore finds that it is appropriate and in the public interest to assign authority over margin for contracts of sale for future delivery of groups or indices of equity securities (and options thereon) to the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, consistent with the authority which Congress has assigned to the Board to prescribe rules and regulations with respect to margin for securities (other than exempted securities) and options on such securities.

"(b) IN GENERAL.—The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System shall prescribe rules with respect to the margin that may be initially required and subsequently maintained on contracts of sale for future delivery of a group or index of equity securities (or options thereon).

"(c) STANDARDS.—In adopting such rules, such Board

"(1) shall consider—

"(A) the protection of the financial integrity of clearing organizations, contract markets, futures commission merchants, or related firms or financial institutions from default by participants in such markets on their payment or performance obligations;

"(B) the purposes of this section; and

"(C) the national public interest set forth in section 3; and

"(2) consistent with the purposes and standards of this section, may make appropriate provision with respect to (including special or different margin requirements for) transactions or positions engendering a lesser degree of prudential risk, including hedges, positions held by members of contract markets who have other forms of collateral available to cover their performance or payment obligations, spread or arbitrage positions, and other appropriate positions.

"(c) VIOLATIONS.—Except for purposes of sections 14 and 22, a failure to assess margin in accord with any rule or regulation of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System adopted under this section shall be deemed a violation of this Act.

"(d) DELEGATION.—The Board, at its sole discretion and subject to such conditions as it may determine, may adopt rules pursuant to subsection (a) under which the margin therein required may be the amount specified by the rules of the respective designated contract market, provided that all such rules have been approved or amended by

"(1) the Board or,

"(2) not earlier than 30 months after the date of enactment of this section, the Commission under sections 5a(12) and 8a(7) if the Board, in its sole discretion and subject to such conditions as it may determine, so provides."

(2) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—(A) Section 2(a)(1)(A) (7 U.S.C. 2) is amended by inserting "and section 24" after "subparagraph (B) of this paragraph".

(B) Section 5a(12) is renumbered "5a(12)(A)" and is amended by inserting thereafter a new paragraph as follows:

"(B) notwithstanding any provision of subpart (A) and consistent with the standards and purposes of section 24, with respect to any rule of a contract market—

"(i) setting levels of margin for contracts of sale for future delivery on a group or index of equity securities (or options thereon) adopted pursuant to a rule of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve Board under Section 24 and

"(ii) where such rule of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve Board so provides, the contract market shall inform the Commission of such rule immediately upon its adoption. The contract market may put such rule into effect without receiving prior approval of the Commission unless the Commission, at any time before or after such rule has been put into effect until ten days after receipt of such rule by the Commission, informs the contract market in writing of its determination to review such rule for approval. The Commission shall review such rule under the procedures of subpart (A)."

(C) Section 8a(7) is renumbered "8a(7)(i)" and is amended by inserting thereafter a new subsection 8a(7)(ii) as follows:

"(ii) notwithstanding the provisions of subpart (i)(C) and consistent with the standards and purposes of section 24, the Commission may alter or supplement rules setting levels of margin for contracts of sale for future delivery on a group or index of equity securities (or options thereon) adopted pursuant to a rule of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve Board under Section 24 if such rule of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve Board so provides. In acting under this subpart, the Commission shall comply with the procedures set forth in subpart (i)."

SEC. 2. HYBRID INSTRUMENTS.

"(vi)(I) Except to the extent that such transactions are conducted on a designated contract market and involve contracts of sale of a commodity for future delivery (or options thereon) or accounts and agreements related to such transactions, this Act shall not apply to and the Commodity Futures Trading Commission shall have no jurisdiction with respect to transactions in or involving securities (as defined in section 2(1) of the Securities Act of 1933 of section 3(a)(10) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934) (or any interest therein or based on the value thereof) where such transactions or instruments—

"(aa) do not impose mutual executory obligations between the parties;

"(bb) are not options on an instrument which imposes mutual executory obligations between the parties;

"(cc) are listed or traded on a national securities exchange or quoted through an automated inter-dealer quotation system operated by a securities self-regulatory organization, as defined in the Securities Exchange Act of 1934;

"(dd) are not contracts of sale for future delivery of a single security (or option thereon) except an exempted security under section 3 of the Securities Act of 1933 or section 3(a)(12) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 on the date of enactment of the Futures Trading Act of 1982 (other than a municipal security as defined in section 3(a)(29) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 on the date of enactment of the Futures Trading Act of 1982);

"(ee) with respect to instruments involving a group or index of securities, would not contravene the requirements of subclauses (ii)(I), (ii)(II), or (ii)(III),

"(ff) are not instruments of the type subject to regulation by the Commission by action of section 19 as of the date of enactment of this section; and

"(gg) are (AA) the subject of an effective registration statement under the Securities Act of 1933 or the Securities Exchange Act of 1934," or (BB) have been determined by the Securities and Exchange Commission to be securities within the meaning of section 2(1) of the Securities Act of 1933 or section 3(a)(10) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934;

"(II) Any transaction conducted on a designated contract market (or accounts and agreements related thereto such transactions) excepted from the exclusion in subclause (I) shall be governed solely pursuant to this Act. Any transaction excluded under subclause (I) from the jurisdiction of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission shall not be a contract of sale for future delivery (or option thereon) and shall not be regulated pursuant to this Act.

"(III) Except as hereinabove provided with respect to the exclusive jurisdiction of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission, nothing contained in this subparagraph (vi) shall supercede or limit the jurisdiction at any time conferred on the Commodity Futures Trading Commission to designate a board of trade as a contract market for any contract of sale for future delivery of a commodity or an option thereon, which otherwise satisfies the requirements of this Act."

(b) EXEMPTIVE AUTHORITY OF COMMODITY FUTURES TRADING COMMISSION.—Section 4 (7 U.S.C. 6) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a), by striking "It shall be unlawful" and inserting "Unless exempted by the Commission pursuant to subsections (c) or (d), it shall be unlawful"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(c) In order to promote responsible economic or financial innovation and fair competition, the Commission by rule, regulation, or order may exempt any agreement, contract, or transaction or classes thereof (including any person or class of persons offering, entering into, or rendering advice with respect to, such agreement, contract, or transaction), either unconditionally or upon stated terms or conditions or for stated periods, from the prohibitions and other requirements of any provision of this Act, other than section 2(a)(1)(B), if the Commission determines, after notice and opportunity for hearing, that such exemption is necessary or appropriate in the public interest and that such agreements, contracts, or transactions:

"(A) Would be limited to appropriate parties;

"(B) Would be entered into for commercial or non-speculative purposes; and

"(C) Would not preclude the ability of the Commission or any contract market to discharge its regulatory or self-regulatory duties under this Act.

"(d)(1) To the extent that any such instruments or sub-classes thereof may be considered contracts of sale for future delivery, and the Commission determines that such exemption is not contrary to the public interest, the Commission shall, by rule, regulation, or order, exempt from the prohibitions and other requirements of this Act, including 2(a)(1)(B)—

"(i) swap agreements (as defined in section 101(49) of title 11, United States Code) that are subject to individual negotiation as to substantive terms beyond price and undertaken in connection with a line of business including financial intermediation or the hedging activities of the parties to the agreements, and

"(ii) demand deposits, time deposits, or transaction accounts within the meaning of 12 CFR 204.2(b)(1), (c)(1) and (e), respectively, whether indexed or otherwise, offered by a United States financial institution that is insured by a United States government agency or United States chartered corporation, or by a United States branch or agency of a foreign bank that is licensed under the laws of the United States and regulated, supervised and examined by United States federal authorities having regulatory responsibility for such financial institutions."

(2) Before adopting any exemption under subparagraph (1), the Commission shall provide notice and opportunity for comment.

"(3) For purposes of subparagraph (1)(A), "appropriate parties" include:

SEC. 3. DIRECTIVES REGARDING INTERMARKET ISSUES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 1 year after the effective date of this Act, the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Commodity Futures Trading Commission, in consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury and the Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, shall each respectively—

(1) adopt such rules and regulations, issue such orders, and, subject to applicable requirements, approve such rules of the self-regulatory organizations and contract markets subject to their respective regulatory authority as may be necessary to strengthen the overall stability of domestic equity and equity derivative markets and maintain fair and orderly markets through the adoption and approval of appropriate coordinated "circuit breaker" mechanisms and similar requirements;

(2) establish (for all domestic equity and equity derivative markets) effective prohibitions on intermarket frontrunning, and require the self-regulatory organizations and contract markets subject to their respective regulatory authority as may be necessary to establish effective procedures for sharing price, trading, and enforcement data for the detection of intermarket frontrunning, fraud, and other violations;

(3) adopt (for all domestic equity and equity derivative markets) such rules and regulations, issue such orders, and approve, subject to applicable requirements, such rules of the self-regulatory organizations and contract markets subject to their respective regulatory authority as may be necessary to facilitate the establishment of linked or coordinated facilities for the clearance and settlement of transactions;

(4) adopt such rules and regulations, issue such orders, and, subject to applicable requirements, approve such rules of the self-regulatory organizations and contract markets and clearing organizations subject to their respective regulatory authority as may be necessary or appropriate to authorize the prompt implementation of systems for the cross-margining of intermarket positions and the use of such intermarket positions as security interest for loans and other extensions of credit; and

(5) establish policies with regard to the negotiation and development of international regulatory agreement and standards involving intermarket issues.

(b) OTHER ISSUES. The Securities and Exchange Commission and the Commodity Futures Trading Commission, in consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury and the Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, shall identify and address other intermarket issues as they arise.

(c) The Securities Exchange Commission and the Commodity Futures Trading Commission shall report to Congress on the actions they have taken under this section within 15 months after the effective date of this Act.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with my colleagues, Senator LUGAR, Senator BOND, Senator DODD, and Senator HEINZ, in introducing an amendment on Intermarket Coordination. This amendment—developed by the joint leadership of the two committees of jurisdiction over futures and securities, the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry, and the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs Subcommittee on Securities—is a reasonable, workable compromise on a series of jurisdictional issues involving our Nation's financial markets. We intend to offer this amendment when the Senate considers S. 1729, the Futures Trading Practices Act of 1989, hopefully before we adjourn sine die.

I am concerned that if Senate action on S. 1729 and our compromise on Intermarket Coordination is delayed until next year, our financial markets will remain at substantial risk from trading abuse and sagging public confidence. We must move forward.

I ask unanimous consent that the text and a brief summary of our amendment be placed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMPROMISE AMENDMENT ON INTERMARKET COORDINATION BY SENATORS LEAHY, LUGAR, BOND, DODD, AND HEINZ

The amendment has four principal features:

1. Federal oversight of margin for stock-index futures is assigned to the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System;

2. The CFTC's "exclusive" jurisdiction for futures products is modified to allow certain hybrid securities to trade either under the futures or the securities regulatory system;

3. The CFTC is granted exemptive power to allow certain new products to trade outside the futures regulatory system, and is directed to use that power with respect to swap agreements and certain bank certificates of deposit; and

4. The SEC and CFTC, in consultation with the Federal Reserve Board and Treasury, are directed to develop solutions to such intermarket issues as coordinated circuit breakers, intermarket fraud, and cross-margining.

MARGIN AUTHORITY FOR STOCK-INDEX FUTURES PRODUCTS

The amendment directs the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System to prescribe rules with respect to margin that may be initially required and subsequently maintained on contracts of sale for future delivery of a group or index of equity securities (and options thereon).

The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System currently has authority to prescribe rules and regulations with respect to margin for securities (other than exempted securities) and options on such securities under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 and has other important responsibilities with respect to credit, banking, and finance. Thus, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System is well placed to—

(A) exercise margin authority with respect to each segment of the overall inter-dependent market system for establishing prices for equity securities and related products—equity securities, futures, and related options;

(B) assess the prudential impact of margin levels on the participants and institutions within each such segment;

(C) assess the potential for systemic risk which may arise as a result of margin levels in any such segment;

(D) take account, in any such assessment, of the respective roles and structure of margin in each segment and its impact on prudential risk; and

(E) apply a consistent viewpoint on the nature and magnitude of systemic and prudential risk in making judgments with respect to margin in each such segment and its effect on the maintenance of orderly markets.

Congress therefore finds that it is appropriate and in the public interest to assign authority over margin for contracts of sale for future delivery of groups or indices of equity securities (and options thereon) to the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, consistent with the authority which Congress has assigned to the Board to prescribe rules and regulations with respect to margin for securities (other than exempted securities) and options on such securities.

STANDARDS

In adopting margin rules for stock-index futures contracts and related options, the Board must consider—

(A) the protection of the financial integrity of clearing organizations, contract markets, futures commission merchants, or related firms or financial institutions from default by participants in such markets on their payment or performance obligations;

(B) the purposes of this section; and

(C) the national public interests of futures trading set forth in section 3 of the Commodity Exchange Act.

The Board may, consistent with the standards and purposes of this provision, make appropriate provision—including special or different margin requirements—for transactions or positions engendering a lesser degree of prudential risk. These could include hedges, positions held by members of contract markets who have other forms of collateral available to cover their performance or payment obligations, spread or arbitrage positions, and other appropriate positions.

Any failure to assess margin in accord with Board rule or regulation would be deemed a violation of the Commodity Exchange Act, subject to penalties and enforcement tools available under the Act.

DELEGATION

The Board, at its sole discretion and subject to such conditions as it may determine, is authorized to adopt rules under this provision under which the margin required may be the amount specified by the rules of the respective designated contract market, provided that all such rules have been approved or amended by such Board or, again at the Board's sole discretion and subject to such conditions as the Board may determine but no sooner than 30 months after the date of enactment, by the CFTC.

HYBRID INSTRUMENTS—NEW PRODUCTS

The amendment takes two significant steps to facilitate the introduction of innovative new financial products. First, it modifies the CFTC's "exclusive jurisdiction" for futures products to allow certain hybrid securities to trade either under the futures exchange or the securities regulatory systems. Second, it provides the CFTC with authority to exempt certain new products to trade outside the futures regulatory system.

EXCLUSIVITY

The amendment provides that certain securities-hybrid instruments may trade either on a futures exchange or a securities exchange. These would include securities-based products which—

1. do not impose mutual executory obligations between the parties;

2. are not options on an instrument which imposes mutual executory obligations between the parties;

3. are listed or traded on a national securities exchange or quoted through an automated inter-dealer quotation system operated by a securities self-regulatory organization;

4. are not futures contracts (or options thereon) on single stocks or municipal securities;

5. are not futures contracts (or options thereon) on narrow-based stock indices;

6. are not leverage contracts of the type currently regulated by the CFTC; and

7. are either the subject of an effective registration statement under federal securities statutes or have been determined to be securities by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Transactions excluded from the jurisdiction of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission under this provision will not considered to be contracts of sale for future delivery (or options thereon) nor be regulated under the Commodity Exchange Act.

This provision thus reverses American Stock Exchange versus Chicago Mercantile Exchange, 883 F.2d 537 (7th cir, 1989) by allowing index participations and other hybrid financial instruments meeting the criteria of this provision to trade on securities exchanges or through NASDAQ under the regulatory umbrella of the SEC.

The phrase "mutual executory obligations" means an unconditional, legally binding contract between two parties. Thus, the phrase refers to the reciprocal, mirror image payment obligations of a traditional futures contract. Among other things, this phrase does not refer to the settlement obligations that exist as the result of normal settlement or when-issued trading in the securities markets or the determination to offset securities options, index participations, or similar products.

Leverage contracts of the type defined in the CFTC's Part 31 rules remain within the CFTC's exclusive jurisdiction. The reference to the "type" of leverage contract is designed to ensure that formalistic changes in the nature, structure, or characteristics of a contract—such as changing the duration from 10 years to 9 years—would not exempt the instrument from regulation as a leverage contract so long as the instrument is the functional equivalent of a leverage contract as regulated by the CFTC on the date of enactment of this bill.

This provision is not intended to diminish the scope of the so-called "Treasury amendment" which exempts certain transactions from coverage of the Commodity Exchange Act. For instance, transactions in government securities falling within the scope of the Treasury amendment would continue to be exempt from the Act by virtue of the Treasury amendment and without any need to meet the requirements of new section 2(a)(1)(B)(vi)(I).

EXEMPTIVE AUTHORITY

The amendment authorizes the CFTC, in order to promote responsible economic or financial innovation and fair competition to exempt from any provision of the Commodity Exchange Act (other than the Johnson-Shad Accord restrictions) any new product or group of products, either unconditionally or upon stated terms or conditions or for stated periods. Before acting, the Commission must determine after notice and comment that the exemption is necessary or appropriate in the public interest and that the new product:

(A) Would be limited to appropriate parties like banks, institutional investors, or other persons having the financial and other qualifications to fulfill the relevant obligations;

(B) Would be entered into for commercial or non-speculative purposes; and

(C) Would not preclude the Commission or any contract market from discharging its regulatory or self-regulatory duties.

SWAP AGREEMENTS AND CERTIFICATES OF DEPOSIT

In addition to the CFTC's general exemptive authority, the CFTC is directed to exempt swap agreements and certain hybrid bank products. To the extent that these instruments or any subclasses of these instruments may be considered futures contracts and such action is not contrary to the public interest, the amendment requires the Commission to exempt—

1. swap agreements that are subject to individual negotiation as to substantive terms beyond price and undertaken in connection with a line of business including financial intermediation or the hedging activities of the parties to the agreements, and

2. demand deposits, time deposits, or transaction accounts offered by insured, regulated financial institutions.

DIRECTIVES FOR SEC-CFTC COOPERATION

The amendment requires the CFTC and SEC, not later than 1 year after the effective date of this Act, in consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury and the Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, to take the steps needed to address a number of pressing inter-market issues—

(1) appropriate coordinated "circuit breaker" mechanisms and similar requirements;

(2) sharing price, trading, and enforcement data for the detection of intermarket front-running and other fraudulent activity;

(3) the establishment of linked or coordinated facilities for the clearance and settlement of transactions;

(4) the cross-margining of intermarket positions among specialists, market makers, and others and the use of such intermarket positions as security interest for loans and other extensions of credit;

(5) the development of international regulatory agreements and standards involving intermarket issues; and

The SEC and CFTC must report to Congress on their actions under this section within 15 months.

"(12) BUDGET AUTHORITY.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'budget authority' means the authority provided by Federal law to incur financial obligations, including the following:

"(i) provisions of law that make funds available for obligation and expenditure, including the authority to obligate and expend the proceeds of offsetting receipts or offsetting collections from the public;

"(ii) borrowing authority, which means authority granted to a Federal entity to borrow and obligate and expend the borrowed funds, including through the issuance of promissory notes or other monetary credits;

"(iii) contract authority, which means the making of funds available for obligation but not for expenditure; and

"(iv) offsetting collections as negative budget authority, and the reduction thereof as positive budget authority.

Such term includes transactions classified as means of financing the deficit.

"(B) ESTIMATES OF BUDGET AUTHORITY.—Budget authority may be definite (in which statute specifies the numerical amount) or indefinite (and, therefore, subject to estimate), and includes contingent budget authority determined to exist.

"(C) LIMITATIONS ON BUDGET AUTHORITY.—Any amount that is precluded from obligation in a fiscal year by a provision of law (such as a limitation or a benefit formula) shall not be budget authority in that year.

"(D) NEW BUDGET AUTHORITY.—The term 'new budget authority' means, with respect to a fiscal year—

"(i) budget authority that first becomes available for obligation in that year, including budget authority that becomes available in that year as a result of a reappropriation; or

"(ii) a change in any account in the availability of unobligated balances of budget authority carried over from a prior year, resulting from a provision of law first effective in that year; and includes a legislated change in the estimated level of new budget authority provided in indefinite amounts by existing law.".

"(A) The term 'entitlement authority' means any provision of law that has the effect of requiring the Government to make payments (including payments to any Government account) regardless of the amount of budget authority that may be available to make those payments, including any entitlement authority estimated to exist.

"(B) Except as provided in subparagraph (C), if a provision of law that requires the Government to make payments is limited by any other provision of law to the amount available budget authority (by providing pro rata reductions in payments, changes in eligibility, changes in employment, or through other means), then entitlement authority does not exist.

"(C) For purposes of paragraph (B), subchapter II of chapter 13 of title 31 of the United States Code shall not be considered a provision of law that limits entitlement authority to the amount of available budget authority.

"(D) The term 'new entitlement authority' means any legislation creating entitlement authority (or altering existing entitlement authority that was enacted before the date of adoption of the most recently agreed-to budget resolution, and includes legislation that has the effect of changing the estimated level of entitlement authority created in indefinite amounts of existing law.".

(c) GERMANENESS.—Section 305(b)(2) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 is amended by inserting after the second sentence the following: "An amendment shall not be germane unless it complies with the precedents of the Senate, deals with the same subject matter as the matter to which it is germane, and is within the same committee jurisdiction as the matter to which it is germane".

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Foreign Direct Investment and International Financial Data Improvements Act of 1990".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The United States Government collects substantial amounts of information from foreign owned or controlled business enterprises or affiliates operating in the United States.

(2) Additional analysis and presentation of this information is desirable to assist the public debate on the issue of foreign direct investments in the United States.

(3) Information collected from foreign owned or controlled firms by the Bureau of Economic Analysis has serious analytical limitations because it is largely collected on an "enterprise" basis that does not permit an adequate analysis by industry groupings.

(4) Statistical and analytic comparisons of the performance of foreign owned or controlled businesses operating within the United States with other business enterprises operating within the same industry can be accomplished under sections 2(b) and 5(c) of the International Investment and Trade in Services Survey Act, and under Executive Order Numbered 11961, without the need to collect additional information, by sharing with other authorized Government agencies the employer identification numbers maintained by the Bureau of Economic Analysis.

(5) Public disclosures of confidential business information collected by the United States Government relating to international direct investment flows could cause serious damage to the accuracy of the statistical data base.

(6) The General Accounting Office may have limited access to Government data on foreign direct investment.

SEC. 3. REPORT BY SECRETARY OF COMMERCE.

(a) ANNUAL REPORT ON FOREIGN DIRECT INVESTMENT IN THE UNITED STATES.—Not later than 6 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, and not later than the end of each 1-year period occurring thereafter, the Secretary of Commerce shall submit to the Committee on Energy and Commerce, the Committee on Ways and Means, and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives, to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate, and to the Joint Economic Committee of the Congress a report on the role and significance of foreign direct investment in the United States. Such report shall address the history, scope, trends, market concentrations, and effects on the United States economy of such investment. In addition, the Secretary of Commerce shall, if requested by any such committee, appear before that committee to provide testimony with respect to any report under this subsection.

(b) SOURCES OF DATA.—In preparing each report under subsection (a), the Secretary of Commerce, or the Secretary's designees, shall consider information collected by—

(1) the Bureau of Economic Analysis under the International Investment and Trade in Services Survey Act (22 U.S.C. 3101 and following);

(2) the Bureau of the Census on industry, manufacturing, research and development, and trade, under title 13, United States Code;

(3) the Bureau of Labor Statistics pertaining to information collected under the International Investment and Trade in Services Survey Act, but only to the extent that such information is in a form that cannot be associated with, or otherwise identify, directly or indirectly, a person, including any enterprise or establishment;

(4) the Secretary of Commerce or the Secretary's designee pursuant to section 2 of Executive Order 11858 of May 7, 1975;

(6) the Department of the Treasury under section 6039C of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (26 U.S.C. 6039C), but only to the extent that such information is in a form that cannot be associated with, or otherwise identify, directly or indirectly, a person, including any enterprise or establishment;

(7) the Department of Energy under section 657(8) of the Department of Energy Organization Act (42 U.S.C 7267(8)), but only to the extent that such information is in a form that cannot be associated with, or otherwise identify, directly or indirectly, a person, including any enterprise or establishment;

(8) other Federal agencies not referred to in paragraphs (1) through (7), but only to the extent that such information is in a form that cannot be associated with, or otherwise identify, directly or indirectly, a person, including any enterprise or establishment;

(9) foreign governments and agencies thereof; and

(10) private sector sources.

(c) ANALYSES.—(1) The analysis in each report prepared under subsection (a) shall, to the extent of available data, compare business enterprises controlled by foreign persons with other business enterprises in the United States with respect to employment, market share, value added productivity, research and development, exports, imports, profitability, taxes paid, and investment incentives and services provided by State and local governments (including quasi-governmental entities).

(2) Each such analysis shall be done by significant industry sectors and geographical regions, except that information shall not be presented in a way in which any person, including any business enterprise or establishment, can be identified. The restriction contained in the preceding sentence on presentation of information does not apply to information that is obtained from foreign governments or agencies thereof and that has been published pursuant to the lawful disclosure of the information. To the extent that data are available, each such analysis shall include an analysis, together with current levels and trends, of the number and market share of business enterprises at least 10 percent of the voting securities or other evidences of ownership of which are owned or controlled by a foreign person, and of the number and market share of the establishments of such business enterprises, that are engaged substantially in the production or coproduction of any critical technologies included in the most recent plan submitted to the Congress under section 2368 of title 10, United States Code, or included in the most recent report submitted to the President under section 603 of the National Science and Technology Policy, Organization, and Priorities Act of 1976.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

DICK RANDALL: A PORTRAIT

Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, the October 15 edition of U.S. News & World Report contained an insightful portrait of one of Wyoming's unique conservationists, Dick Randall of Rock Springs.

The environmental writer Aldo Leopold unwittingly described Dick Randall in his foreword to "A Sand County Almanac" when he wrote:

Like wind and sunsets, wild things were taken for granted until progress began to do away with them. Now we face the question whether a still higher 'standard of living' is worth its cost in things natural, wild, and free. For us of the minority, the opportunity to see geese is more important than television, and the chance to find a pasqueflower is a right as inalienable as free speech.

Dick Randall and I have had our share of spirited debates over the years. Yet even when we disagree, I am moved by the integrity and passion of his arguments and the strength of his convictions. He teaches strangers and neighbors alike the importance of wild things. And because of the dedication of the Dick Randall's of the world, Aldo Leopold's minority is becoming a majority.

Mr. President, I ask that this well deserved tribute to my friend, Dick Randall, be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The article follows:

[From U.S. News & World Report, Oct. 15, 1990]

ONE HUNTER'S EPIPHANY

(By Michael Satchell)

The male bobcat had been struggling in the steel jaws for several days when Dick Randall and his 11-year-old son Andy finally came along to check the trap line. Bloodied, dehydrated and spent, the animal was close to death. To a man who had killed thousands of creatures as a professional trapper and hunter, dispatching one more was a routine chore—a sharp blow to the head, perhaps a bullet, depending on how much life was left in the varmint. But not this time. "As we walked up, the cat took one furious leap at us," Randall remembers. "He hit the end of the chain, dropped down and died staring right at us. Andy whispered: 'Look, Dad. The light just went out in its eyes.'"

The incident illuminated a spark of deeply suppressed doubt in Randall's mind. It was one of those rare episodes when a person's closely held beliefs are transformed in one seminal moment—an instant, if you will, when he sees the light. Dick Randall had spent 10 years as a predator-control agent for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, hunting coyotes, bobcats, bears and other species that prey on ranchers' livestock. No one knew more wildlife lore, or dispatched his prey more efficiently. "I never questioned that I was doing humanity a real favor," he says. "I was convinced that the killing was worthwhile." Until that moment.

Just after dawn recently, Randall bounced his Volkswagen camper over the washboard ruts of a dirt road in the Red Desert north of his home in the energy-bust town of Rock Springs, Wyo. The sun was barely up and there was dew on the Indian paintbrush, but already he had spotted a kestrel soaring in search of a meal, sent a brace of antelope streaking for the horizon and scared up jackrabbits galore. This harsh, 1,100-square-mile landscape of sand, sage and greasewood once was his killing field. But for the past 16 years, the 65-year-old Randall has sought to preserve wildlife rather than snuff it out.

A different kind of habitat. Randall is one of a legion of anonymous conservation foot soldiers, toiling for sheer love of the resource, who form the backbone of the movement to preserve the remains of wild America—and not just the picture-postcard scenery. Some environmentalists focus their efforts on crown-jewel areas like Yellowstone and Yosemite, or on high-profile threatened species like the grizzly or the spotted owl. To them goes most of the recognition.

Desert rats like Dick Randall are devoted to unglamorous but no less ecologically vital areas like the Wyoming outback. Here the rail-thin outdoorsman with the white flattop fights to protect his parched and gritty version of Eden. His efforts run the gamut from lobbying public officials to blocking habitat-destroying energy and mining projects, to leading school kids into the desert to show them not only wild horses and golden eagles but also the lowlier creatures.

He has them down on hands and knees to learn the difference between the tracks of kangaroo rats, mice, voles and other little sand critters. He shows them how a thin film of oil on a pond, caused by a dune buggy driven in a restricted area, wipes out a salamander population and upsets a miniature ecosystem. He teaches them about spadefoot toads that stay buried in the sand 11 months of the year. And he reveals the secrets of the Killpecker sand dunes.

In the shimmering, 100-degree noontime heat of a broiling high-plains summer, Randall will take them to the dunes that migrate east from western Wyoming to the Nebraska border. Digging down with the uncanny instinct of a desert dweller, he uncovers great slabs of ice beneath the baking sands. The ice cells are formed from windblown snow that accumulates on the leeward side of the dunes during the fierce winters. The con stantly migrating sand covers and insulates the ice until it is exposed by nature to melt and form pools that sustain waterfowl and other wildlife through drought periods. Sections of the Killpecker dunes are now under consideration for federal wilderness protection, thanks in part to Randall's congressional lobbying efforts as a field representative for the Defenders of Wildlife and, currently the Humane Society of the United States.

"Hooved locusts." He also shows visitors the rich and varied wildlife of the Rhode Island-size Red Desert, one of the largest unfenced, unprotected areas left in the Lower 48 states. On Black Rock butte, a birdwatcher interested in raptors can spot golden eagles, prairie falcons, great horned owls, harrier hawks, red tailed hawks, ferruginous hawks and kestrels as they soar in search of polecats, cottontails, gophers, prairie dogs and snakes. "I like the nooks and crannies of this desert," Randall says, pulling on his first bottle of afternoon Guinness and drawing on a Salem. "People drive through here and all they see is wasteland. But I try to get people to make friends with the desert and become aware of the threats. We're losing so much habitat to everything from energy development to cattle grazing. Those derned cows are hooved locusts."

Strange sentiments from a man who spent 10 years protecting livestock with the kind of efficiency that earned him the reputation as Uncle Sam's top coyote killer. He trapped them, poisoned them, stalked them on the ground and shot them from the air—42 in one 6-hour aerial onslaught that set a Wyoming state record. "Survived four plane crashes, two of 'em when I shot myself down," he chuckles. "Hit the propeller tip with 12-gauge BB shot." Randall counted some 4,000 coyotes he trapped and destroyed along with hundreds of bobcats and scores of black bears. He figures an equal number of coyotes died from strychnine, cyanide and other poisons he spread across the landscape, along with uncounted numbers of nontarget species like eagles, hawks, owls, foxes and skunks.

Burned alive. Randall's work gave him little pause except when it came to stuffing a coyote den with burning sagebrush. "Suffocating the pups was the theory, but they'd often scramble for cracks of light at the entrance. You could hear them howling when they hit the flames and burned alive." Later, the government equipped its hunters with a phosphorus-based compound called a den smoker, but the results were equally unpleasant. "The pups were likely to run into the chemical fire trying to get out. It would literally eat through tissue—hiss and smolder right into their guts when they were still clawing at the blocked entrance."

Today Randall is a vociferous opponent of the government's $29 million animal-damage-control program, which every year kills about 4.5 million birds and mammals deemed to be agricultural pests. Most are birds that raid fields or foul urban areas. Farmers like the program because it helps hold down their crop losses. But killing carnivores like coyotes, bears and mountain lions on the Western rangelands to protect lambs and calves is widely condemned by conservationists as futile and expensive. Last year in Wyoming, Randall's successors in the federal war on wildlife spent $181.82 for each animal killed. The $1.35 million cost of the Wyoming program was more than four times the value of sheep lost to predators. Sheep ranchers, Randall observes, could handle most of their predation problems by better use of herders and guard dogs.

Still, his rational arguments against the program pale next to his memories: Of coyotes taking up to two days to die after a gunpowder charge blasted cyanide into their mouths; of golden and bald eagles killed by his indiscriminate use of poisons; of trapping and shooting seven black bears in a single outing, knowing that only one had killed livestock. Most of all, it is the vision of a bobcat awaiting death in a steel-jaw trap and a young boy seeing in its face what a father had been unable to comprehend. Randall says he still sees that cat's eyes.

DR. CLAUDIO BENEDI DOCUMENTS THE SOVIET GEOPOLITICAL STRATEGY IN CUBA

● Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, Dr. Claudio Benedi is a good friend of mine. He helped me to achieve the passage of the Symms "Cuba Resolution" by Congress twice, in 1982, and again in 1984. I will never forget Claudio's help in my successful efforts to reaffirm the Monroe Doctrine and to support the rights and liberties of the oppressed Cuban People.

Claudio Benedi is the author of the "Benedi Doctrine," which condemns the institutionalized violations of human rights by totalitarian Communist regimes around the world, especially in Castro's Cuba. Moreover, Claudio has for a long time been in the forefront of those who denounce the Soviet military base in Cuba, in violation of the Kennedy-Khrushchev agreement.

Claudio is an expert on inter-American affairs, and for the last three decades he has been fighting for the security of America and for the freedom of Cuba. Claudio is known as "the Diplomatic Dean of the Organization of American States."

Mr. President, I ask that two documents be printed in the RECORD.

The first is the declaration of Dr. Benedi concerning the Soviet-Cuban geostrategic relationship, printed in the Diario Las Americas of Miami on May 2, 1990.

The second is the document presented by Dr. Manuel Antonio de Varona, president of the Junta Patriotica Cubana, and Dr. Claudio Benedi, Secretary for the Foreign Relations and Washington Representative of the Junta Patriotica Cubana, to the 20th Session of the General Assembly of the Organization of American States, at Asuncion, Paraguay, on June 4, 1990.

The documents follow:

SOVIET UNION'S RELATIONS WITH CUBA ARE GEOSTRATEGIC, NOT ECONOMIC, DR. CLAUDIO BENEDI ASSERTS FROM WASHINGTON

(By Ariel Remos)

"Relations between the USSR and Cuba are not merely economic, but mainly and fundamentally geostrategic, for the maintenance—in fact—of the base that the Soviets have attained in Cuba for their penetration into the Western Hemisphere, 90 miles from the U.S.", asserted Dr. Claudio Benedi, representative of the Cuban Patriotic Board in Washington.

That is the reason that, according to Benedi, explains that "despite the totalitarian Stalinist regime that Castro insists in maintaining, its total economic failure, and his opposition—apparent or real—to reforms introduced in the structure of the communist system by Gorbachev, he will be granted this year, for one more year, an increase of 8.7% in economic and commercial aid, in comparison with the previous year, while they say that they sign a protocol for the next lustrum, that will be formalized in 1991".

According to Benedi, the importance of the fact is that, in accordance with statements made by the chief of the Soviet delegation that formalized the agreements with Cuba, Leonid Albakin, the commercial exchange with the island would be over $14,168 millions, which reaffirms the economical and military dependence that the Cuban regime has upon the USSR.

The interviewee recalled that, as columnist Patrick Buchanan recently affirmed in a recent article on Diario Las Americas, if the USSR needs investment capital, it should get ahold of the $5,000 annual millions that is given to Castro for the use of the island as a strategic base.

He likewise refers to the opinion of Senator Sam Nunn, chairman of the Armed Forces Committee in the U.S. Senate, who stated in Miami that "the Cuban economy is increasingly weakening, as a result of the reductions in the aid that it receives from the USSR, but (at the same time that it hurts the position of Castro) the possibility could exist that, as a compensation, Moscow will increase military aid" to Cuba.

He later detailed how the USSR uses the Cuban territory as a base for its warplanes and warships, as well as its main facilities, such as the Cienfuegos base, the espionage plant at Lourdes, where it has 6,000 troops and technicians, and 27,000 military personnel, a brigade organized as such and some airports intended for war activities.

The Soviets have provided Castro with 300 MiG 21s, 23s and 25s, and they have now furnished him MiG 29's.

Benedi says that the Cuban armed forces have a 15% of the population in arms, "one and a half million men and women, regular military and militias, in a country with 11 million inhabitants; but, who pays for that costly military machine? Not Castro exactly.

After analyzing the very grave economic situation of the USSR, which in the long run may influence a change in its programs of aid to countries such as Cuba, Benedi referred to a political event "of a great political transcendence for our Hemisphere". That is, the Vice-Minister for Foreign Affairs of the USSR, Victor Komplektov, upon his return from Managua, said to Pravda that the USSR will continue economic cooperation with Nicaragua, even with the new government, and Washington analysts say that it could be a precedent for other communist totalitarian regimes. "Diplomats stationed here, in the capital, affirm that the USSR, in view of the serious problems it is facing, could be seeking this kind of solutions for the Cuban case, in order to maintain its base in the unlikely case that there could be future cases such as Nicaragua's. Those who state that", Dr. Benedi ends, do not seem to know the Stalinist nature nor Castro's megalomaniac paranoia, nor the sufferings and struggles of the Cuban people for 31 years, inside & outside of Cuba, for their freedom".

JUNTA PATRIOTICA CUBANA, AREA METROPOLITANA DE WASHINGTON,
Washington, DC, June 4, 1990.

Honorable Chairman of the Twentieth Ordinary Period of Sessions of the General Assembly of the Organization of American States (OAS):

Honorable Ministers of Foreign Relations:

Honorable Ambassadors and Representatives of the American States:

Distinguished Representatives of the Americas:

This General Assembly meets in historical moments for the Americas and for the world. For the Americas, because we are celebrating the Centennial of the Inter-American System, and for the world because of the unavoidable crisis of the totalitarian system of Marxist-Leninist socialism, that we expect to reach, in its full extension, the Stalinist redoubt in Cuba.

We, who have been born in the Cuban State, a member of this Honorable General Assembly, of the Inter-American System and of the Organization of American States (OAS) and directly concerned in our own right and affected by that which may be discussed or agreed upon in same, have the moral and legal duty of submitting to your learned consideration our position and denouncements to the effect that, as we suppose, linked by the same cause, they shall be taken into account by you.

The Cuban State is a part of the Inter-American System and of the OAS. What is excluded, now with a greater reason than yesterday, is the present government of Cuba, because of its being a Marxist-Leninist regime, totally incompatible with the Inter-American System. That incompatibility is still in force.

Cuba is a part of the Americas and it is linked to their fate. Said part is integrated in the whole, historically, geographically, politically, economically and ideologically, despite the fact that an extra-continental power (the Soviet Union) has tried to take it out of its geopolitics and geostrategy, through the use of a satellite government subjected to ideological servitude and to economic, political and military submission.

This Soviet Union's intervention in the internal affairs of the Americas, through its base in Cuba, has posed a challenge to the Continent of the Americas and produced a crisis in its institutions, values and principles, because of the overt and sneaky infiltration of the Marxists fifth column into the Inter-American power structures.

As we have already proven, we are not dealing with a super-structure of values, with an addition of principles nor with a mere reform; we are dealing with a subversive supplantation, with a displacement, with the destruction of the spiritual and material structures, in order to replace them with others that are alien to its history, its traditions and its culture. Marxists have understood it thus and, because of it, they have declared war on the Inter-American System, on the OAS and on those nations which represent those values and principles, and that is the reason why they attempt, by all means at their disposal, to introduce their Trojan Horse into the OAS, through the reinstatement of Castro's satellite Marxist-Leninist-Stalinist regime.

The historical sequence cannot be broken by grafting onto the heart of the Americas alien ideologies, such as Communism, whose impracticality and evil nature have been proven, one that destroys man, woman and peoples. That "tragic Utopia has made peoples to retrocede to unprecedented levels in the history of humankind", as Pope John Paul II has stated.

This Twentieth General Assembly of the OAS has no jurisdiction or powers to allow the entry of Castro's Marxist-Leninist regime to the OAS, because it was not the OAS who separated the present government of Cuba from it, but the application of the Treaty of Rio, and besides this meeting not having been assembled in accordance with the Treaty of Rio, not all the countries who are members of the OAS are signatories to the Treaty of Rio.

It must be likewise pointed out that at the Eighth Consultation Meeting of the Foreign Relations Ministers, assembled in accordance with the Treaty of Rio, a Resolution was passed which declared Marxism-Leninism incompatible with the Inter-American System, and that said Resolution is still in force. Despite efforts to repeal it, it is still in force and it is still binding, since the modification of said Treaty, that was made in Costa Rica, has not taken effect because the necessary number of required states have not ratified it.

In the hundred years that the Inter-American System has lasted, a constant preoccupation, besides a basic and substantially fundamental principle has been, and continues to be, to protect the countries of this Hemisphere, as it was wished by Simon Bolivar, the Liberator; Jose Marti, U.S. President James Monroe and all exalted men & women of the Americas, from the intervention of an extra-continental power in their internal affairs. This principle and foundation of our regional organization and our political philosophy about the defense of sovereignty and freedom, self-determination and the dignity of the human person, has been violated by the Soviet Union through its satellite Castro. That is why to let satellite Castro enter into the OAS is tantamount to become an accomplice of the Soviet Union and of the evil Marxism-Leninism. Castro has just stated: "Marxism-Leninism or death", and that Marxism-Leninism is what is being attempted to introduce in the OAS, at a time when East European countries and other nations subjugated by the false Soviet Union are trying to erase every vestige of that "tragic Utopia". Those who attempt such a thing can be defined as suffering from political underdevelopment, political daltonism; they cannot see the red and black colors.

The Socialist Constitution of Cuba, dated February 24, 1976, in its preamble, literally reads: "Based upon proletarian internationalism, fraternal friendship, the assistance and cooperation of the Soviet Union . . ." It remains undoubtedly proven that Castro's Marxist-Leninist regime is a satellite of the Soviet Union, a lackey of Soviet imperialism. What would we say, honorable delegates and members of this Twentieth General Assembly of the OAS, if any of our Latin-American countries wrote into the preamble of its Constitution the same, but referring to the United States? How would you qualify it? The answer is obvious; therefore, if we are honest, let us apply it to the satellite regime of Castro in Cuba. Is that the satellite that someone may attempt to bring back to the OAS?

We must be consistent and follow the historical sequence and the traditions of the Americas, instead of defrauding the founders of our nations; that is why we believe that it is fundamental that we make reference to the indispensable background that irrefutably supports our petitions and denouncements.

We have proven that a regressive transculturation has taken place in Cuba. The values and principles upon which a civilized coexistence of the free nations of this Hemisphere is supported have been destroyed, and other, falsely called values, which run counter to the Cuban people's tradition, culture and history, have been imposed.

Besides the human violation, there has been in Cuba an institutional violation of human rights. The human violation is committed both in the totalitarian and authoritarian regimes, albeit in the former it is committed in a totalitarian manner, but the institutional violation (already known in the Americas and Europe as the "benedi doctrine") is only committed in the Marxist-Leninist regimes, because that kind of violation is intrinsic to such a system, which could not exist without it, because of its being a state totalitarian regime, in which the so-called State has all rights and individuals have none, vis-a-vis the State. The human person is left defenseless before the State. What is the State in communist regimes? The Communist Party. And, what is the Communist Party? A claque. And who rules that claque? The tyrant on duty. It was Stalin in the Soviet Union, and it is Castro in Cuba.

In the above mentioned Socialist Constitution, Article 61 provides the following:

"Article 61. None of the freedoms recognized for citizens may be practiced against that which is established by the Constitution and the laws, nor against the existence and purposes of the Socialist State, nor against the Cuban people's decision to build Socialism and Communism. Violation of this principle is punishable".

Only a naive or deluded person, or an accomplice of communism, would believe that in Cuba, under the Marxist-Leninist system, there could be any vestige of democracy. To this it must be added, mainly and fundamentally, that a military and strategic Soviet base is in Cuba.

We have proven that the relationship between the Soviet Union and Cuba is geostrategic and not merely economic. That is why some people wonder that the Soviet Union would continue to subsidize Castro and his economic and social disaster with over $5 billion annually. It is cheap for the Soviet Union to maintain its base within the heart of the Americas.

The Soviet Union entered the Americas through Cuba, and it has established there, in fact, a military, political, ideological and subversive base. It has there over 27,000 military personnel (during the so-called "missile crisis", in 1962, the Soviet Union already had 40,000 military personnel). Besides, it has a nuclear submarine base at Cienfuegos; an electronic base—the largest and most up-to-date outside of the Soviet Union—operated by 6,000 military and technicians, and it utilizes the whole of the Cuban territory for its warplanes and warships. All of the above entrails, besides an affront, a threat to the security and peace in the Americas.

In the Nuclear missile crisis, in 1962, satellite Castro imperiled the Cuban people to extermination in a nuclear conflict, only to serve the interests of the Soviet imperialism. Nowadays, the danger is repeated, in the "cursi et recursi" or History, as Vico would say. The Cuban people continues to be imperiled through the same or similar reasons, and a holocaust could take place.

There does not exist a state of law in Cuba, as it has been repeatedly stated by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, in whose Annual Reports to this General Assembly it has declared that in Cuba "There are maintained, therefore, the two main characteristics that have originated the lack of enforcement of civil and political rights: the non-existence of a state of law, since individuals are deprived of the recourses that would protect them from the actions of the state, and the lack of political alternatives for the population". There, where a state of law does not exist, cannot be any protection for human rights. Who would like to make that monstrous regime compatible with the Inter-American System?

Let us add to the former that the International Commission of Jurists, an organization attached to the United Nations, after an exhaustive study and investigation, stated: "The rule of law does not exist in Cuba". That statement is presently in full force. What accomplice of Marxist Socialism would dare to deny it?

There does not exist in Cuba the division of powers that is basic in the juridical and political structure of modern states, as Montesquieu declared. The Judiciary Power is submitted to the so-called National Assembly of the Popular Power, which is the same organism in charge of "approving" the regulations dictated by the hierarchy of the Communist Party, the true "power behind the throne". And the latter, in turn, is dictatorially ruled by the "maximum leader on duty". (Articles 70, 85, 86, 87 et sequitur, in the Constitution listed above.

On Articles 9 through 29, the division of powers is banished, private property rights are abolished, such as we understand them in the Western world, as well as the inviolability of the human person, freedom of education and all other rights recognized in the Americas about family, religion, etc. (Article 54)

On Article 52 the freedoms of expression and thought are eliminated. Press, radio and television are controlled by the Totalitarian State.

In the so-called "Socialist Legality", the principle of "analogy" (that had already been abolished in the civilized world and was re-established by Hitler) is enshrined.

There continues to exist in Cuba a continued pattern of violation of rights in their human dimension, and many Cuban political prisoners, both male and female, continue being given a "cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment", as the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights has repeatedly stated; but we must warn you about possible maneuvers of "improvement in the treatment of some prisoners" that such a regime might attempt, and some limited freedoms that could be granted, with preconceived objective of "bettering the image" of the Marxist-Leninist system and of its leaders in the Western World, in order to confound the naive and hide the fact that the basic substance of violations of human rights in a communist regime, both in institutional dimension and in the human dimension, are intrinsically united to the regime and inseparable from it. It is not a case of more or less freedom, nor of a partial improvement or alleviation of the treatment given to the Cuban political prisoners of both genders, but of the system proper, which must generate those violations in order to stay in power through terror and force.

The visit of Pope John Paul II has been cancelled for this year. Terror against the civilian population has been recrudesced and the dissidents have been threatened with a modification of the Penal Code to include dissidence as a form of felonious treason punishable by the death penalty.

Since the end of World War II, the Inter-American System has been getting ready to face the challenge of international communism, to prevent the intervention of an extra-continental power (directly, the Soviet Union) in the internal affairs of the Americas. Let us review a brief summary of that preparation:

1. In 1947, the Treaty of Recip:ocal Assistance (Treaty of Rio) was approved, previous and similar to NATO (that is why the Treaty of Rio can be deemed as the NATO of the Americas). But we must underline that, while NATO was a deterrent in Europe to prevent communist expansion, the Treaty of Rio, debilitated by the ominous Kennedy-Khrushchev "understanding", could not prevent the Soviet Union from expanding its neo-colonialism and its imperialism to the Americas, through locating its base in Cuba.

2. In 1948, the juridical and political institution for the defense of the Americas was created: The Organization of American States (OAS). And it was not by coincidence that Fidel Castro and the communist agents infiltrated in the Americas tried to prevent the OAS from being created, by murdering Jorge Eliecer Gaytan and bringing about over 5,000 deaths and a great deal of destruction. But, despite that tragedy, the OAS was created to respond to the challenge. However, some leaders of the Americas, turning their backs to this tragic reality, have been weakening the OAS, creating parallel organizations that have diminished its efficiency and dynamism, upon usurping some of its functions. The OAS is what its states want it to be at a given time in its history. Thus, the organization is not to be blamed, but its members.

The United Nations Organization was created in 1945 and the OAS in 1948. Albeit the UNO is older, it has experienced basic reforms in its structure, despite its comprising the veto right that does exist in the OAS—in the latter, all member states enjoy a juridical equality—the OAS has experienced reforms, the latter being those of Buenos Aires and Cartagena de Indias and now, in the midst of present crisis and very untimely, instead of strengthening its present structures, which would be the wise thing to do, and fulfilling its treaties, covenants, agreements and resolutions in force, some are attempting to enter into a new process of reforms, with dubious or problematic results.

The Inter-American Conference, held in Caracas in 1954, to consider "the activities of the international communist movement, because of believing that it constitutes an intervention in the internal affairs of the Americas", formulated among others the following statement:

"That the domination or control over the political institutions of any of the American states on the part of the international Communist movement, having as its result the extension into the continent of the Americas of the political system of an extracontinental power, would constitute a threat against the political sovereignty and independence of the American states, and would endanger the peace of the Americas, thus requiring a consultation meeting to consider the adopting of pertinent measures in accordance with the treaties in force".

Nobody can deny that the international communist movement is in Cuba: "Marxism-Leninism or death". There is the imperative juridical, political and moral mandate, in order to act "in accordance with the treaties in force".

In the Seventh Consultation Meeting of Foreign Relations Ministers, assembled in accordance with the Treaty of Rio which is like the NATO of the Americas, in San Jose, Costa Rica, in August, 1960, it was agreed that:

"1. The intervention or threat of intervention, including a conditioned one, on the Part of an extra-continental power, in the internal affairs of any American republic is condemned, and we underline that the acceptance of the threat of intervention by an extra-continental power on the part of any American state, imperils the solidarity and security of the Americas, which obligates the Organization of American States (OAS) to condemn and reject it with an equal energy".

There are exemplified the case of satellite Castro and the intervention of an extra-continental power (the Soviet Union) in the internal affairs of the Americas, with a military, subversive, political, ideological, terrorist and economical base. How "energetically" are the present leaders of the Americas going to condemn and reject it?

In the Eighth Consultation Meeting of the Foreign Relations Ministers, assembled in accordance with the Treaty of Rio at Punta del Este, Uruguay, in 1962, a resolution was approved which, in our judgment, is the most important political statement in this Hemisphere for all of its history, in which it is declared that "the Marxist-Leninist doctrine is incompatible with the Inter-American System, and that the government that would declare itself—mind you that it reads 'the government'—a Marxist-Leninist one, is separated from the System". And, since the present government of Cuba has declared itself Marxist-Leninist, it is thus separated from the Inter-American System, from the OAS and from all of its organisms. The Cuban State continued, and it continues to be, a member of the System and of the OAS.

A Joint Resolution of the United States Congress (the Senate and the House of Representatives) was approved—now known as the "Cuba-Symms Resolution, because of Senator Steve Symms having been its advocate—whereby the United States obligated itself to fight together with the Organization of American States (OAS) and with freedom-loving Cubans to attain self-determination and freedom for the Cuban people.

On October 22, 1962, the so-called "Missile Crisis" took place in Cuba, because the Soviet Union learned that its base on the island was in danger and it placed its nuclear missiles there, not to protect the Castro's satellite regime, but its base. Whoever may think otherwise is a naive person or a useful idiot.

By virtue of the "Missile Crisis", the so-called "Kennedy-Khrushchev Understanding" was signed, a disastrous political mistake on the part of the United States, which violates the Monroe Doctrine, the Treaty of Rio, the OAS's Charter and the Cuban people's rights of sovereignty and freedom.

The force of the Monroe Doctrine, that had been so efficient to deter the European States from intervening in the internal affairs of the Americas, and through which the United States protected our Latin-American countries from the ambitions for conquest of the Europeans, including then-Russia, has now been debilitated and rendered useless to prevent Soviet penetration in Cuba and Nicaragua; in the latter, the Soviet Union maintains its power, although it may have surrendered government halfway.

One of the most outstanding leaders for democracy in Latin-America, our fraternal friend Dr. Romulo Betancourt, an illustrious Venezuelan descended from the Liberator, Simon Bolivar, charged the Stalinist tyrant Fidel Castro with attacking and violating the Venezuelan sovereignty. The Ninth Consultation Meeting of the Foreign Relations Ministers, on July 26, 1964, condemned the Castro regime as an aggressor and violator of the Venezuelan sovereignty. The next step ought to have been the application of the Treaty of Rio to the aggressor and violator. It was not done then, and that regime has continued, until this time, attacking and violating the sovereignty of the peoples of the Americas, as the President-elect of Costa Rica, Dr. Rafael Calderon, has stated, accusing Castro of intervening in the internal affairs of El Salvador by helping the Marxist-Leninist guerrillas. Those aggressions are consubstantial with the communist system implemented in Cuba.

"Pacta Sunt Servanda": One acts freely, but obligates oneself to the pact. The Cuban state has freely agreed with you the treaties, covenants, agreements and resolutions which are in force within the Inter-American System; that is why we now ask you to fulfill what you obligated yourselves to comply with.

Two nuclear plants are being built in Cuba, one of them precisely close to the Soviet submarine base in Cienfuegos. These plants are being built with the same Soviet technology that so noisily failed at Chernobyl, in the Soviet Union. They not only imperil the lives of Cubans, but are also a threat for the rest of the American States.

The satellite Castro, following orders from the Soviet Union, has refused to sign and ratify the Treaty of Tlatelolco on the Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons in Latin-America. With what purpose? The comments are obvious.

We have learned from reliable sources that 15% of the Cuban population, that is, one and a half million people, both men and women, in the regular military and the militias, are upon arms. Since the Cuban economy has been destroyed by the communist system, Castro could not pay for the mobilization of those forces. Who pays for the expenses of those enormous military forces in a country with little over 10 million people? The answer is obvious: The Soviet Union.

We know that the Soviet Union has sent its satellite Castro 300 MiG warplanes, among them MiG 23's and MiG 29's, the latter being the latest warplane in the arsenal of the Soviet Union. It has already sent 10 and it has promised another 36. What does the satellite Castro need a war arsenal of that magnitude for?

The KGB (Soviet secret political police) has long taken over the Cuban intelligence and espionage services, known as the DGI (Directorate General for Intelligence). It has been verified that the Soviet Union had done likewise in Nicaragua.

What we have nowdays in the Americas is a crisis of identity, that is fostered when there are governments that fail to support the principles and values that have given them life and, turning their backs to their traditions, culture and history, embrace ideologies that deny their transcendental values and their juridical and political principles.

There is identity among the nations of the Americas, and through that identity they make up an organic and regionally structured whole in a System that has given itself the juridical and political institutions capable of representing and defending it.

In order to attack and destroy the Americas, it is indispensable to attack and destroy the System based upon that identity and upon those principles, and that is exactly what is happening today. That is the challenge.

Understanding this, the extra-continental foreign forces that have infiltrated the Americas to subvert and destroy them, have begun by securing a base in Cuba and attempting to have another one in Nicaragua, and by devising a strategy to destroy the Inter-American System because of its absolute incompatibility, as well as tactics to fragment the OAS through separating the North from the South, or else trying to create parallel organisms.

The economic, political and social development—giving way to military interventions—in the last three decades, has been at times hampered, other times interrupted and in every case adversely influenced—the exodus of capital and skilled persons and the deactivation of national and foreign investments—by communist subversion, both urban and rural, sponsored by the Soviet Union through its satellite Castro and the Sandinista-Marxist movement of sub-satellite Daniel Ortega in Nicaragua.

The investments and assistance from the United States and the Western world are detouring towards the Eastern European countries that are rejecting communism because of its negative nature, instead of going to the Latin-American nations that want to bring communism, together with Castro, to the OAS.

The Inter-American System is theocentric and its values and principles comprise the belief in God, the full dignity of man and woman, their freedom, justice, peace and the idea that the resources existing in the Americas are at the service of the common good, administered by human beings for the benefit of men and women. The Inter-American System proclaims the unlimited respect to human rights, fraternity and brotherhood among men and women, vis-a-vis the class struggle, and love vis-a-vis hate; because of the above, it is incompatible with Marxism-Leninism, since the latter proclaims the barbarous practice of hate, instead of the Gospel of Love; the class struggle, state totalitarianism, militant atheism, the destruction of the sense of transcendence and the destruction of the human person; it is esentially anthropocentric.

Ideological pluralism—any euphemism used to cover the permissiveness that is an accomplice of Marxism-Leninism in the Americas—is a negation of democratic coexistence in the bosom of the Inter-American System. There cannot be any possible coexistence where all the attributes and conditions for coexistence are not given. We say "yes" to democratic pluralism, whereby representative democracy will be implemented—so many times mentioned in the OAS' Charter—whereby the people shall vote periodically, with full liberty, to elect its leaders in the plurality of democratic parties, which is the antithesis of Marxist-Leninist totalitarianism. There cannot be any reciprocity. What they want is not coexisting, but destroying our democratic system.

There is no ideologic pluralism in the Soviet Union or Cuba, nor was there any in the former communist-subjugated countries. In the former, those who advocate ideological pluralism are deemed as "deviationists" and severely punished. Could we have "the wolf taken into the chicken coop"?

Tomas Borge, the Nicaraguan old-guard Communist leader, was quoted as having stated that "there would be elections in Cuba for all positions, including that of President, and that independent political parties would be allowed". This was widely published in the media of the Americas, but he was immediately ordered by Moscow and Cuba to retract those statements, and he said that "he had been misinterpreted, that he meant that there would be 'elections' within the Communist Party in Cuba and that independent parties or movements would not be permitted". That happened last month. There is the categorical answer for the deluded, the naive and the accomplices, who say or believe that there could be democracy and freedom in Cuba under the Communist system, while the totalitarian Stalinist tyrant and the Soviet base are there. "Upon the confession of a party, evidence is not needed".

The Treaty of Tlatelolco on the proliferation of nuclear weapons in Latin-America, which is so important for the present and future of the Americas, has not been signed by satellite Castro. It is known that the Soviet Union has built a base for nuclear submarines at Cienfuegos, Cuba, which has been "visited" by warships capable of transporting and firing nuclear weapons. Now Castro is building nuclear plants, reportedly for "peaceful purposes". We believe that the Soviet Union, which signed the II Protocol of the Treaty of Tlatelolco, has violated it. Why has Castro not signed it?

The government of satellite Castro has been charged with being involved in the illegal narcotics traffic, lending its air space and territorial waters to facilitate said traffic between Latin-America and the United States. There are courts which have accused high-ranking officials of the communist regime of Cuba of being involved in the illegal narcotics traffic. A few days ago, Castro met at La Habana the lawyers of his partner in crime, former General Manuel Noriega, in trying "to contribute evidence" to defend his disgraced partner. Why is Castro trying to defend a corrupt and narco-trafficker dictator, such as Noriega? The answer is obvious.

The so-called "Cold War" has not ended in the Americas. In order for it to end, many things would have to happen, among them the following:

1. The return to the Soviet Union of the 27,000 Soviet military personnel who are presently in Cuba, the organized brigade with a force of 2,800 members, and the Soviet military technicians who are 6,000 strong, stationed at the electronic base of Villa Lourdes, La Habana. The dismantling of the nuclear submarine base installed at Cienfuegos. The return to the Soviet Union of the military personnel and "advisors" who are still in Nicaragua and with other subversive movements in the Americas.

2. The return to the Soviet Union of the nuclear and/or conventional weapons located in Cuba.

3. The breakup of the military and ideological and geostrategic submission links between Cuba and the Soviet Union.

4. The elimination of the communist system implemented by deceit, terror and force in Cuba.

5. The implementation of full freedom and democracy in Cuba.

6. The return to a free and democratic Cuba and of a government elected by the Cuban people in an internationally-supervised, secret and fair election, free from all fraud, to the Inter-American System and to the OAS.

7. The cessation of the subversive movement sponsored by the Soviet Union in several countries of Latin-America, such as El Salvador, Guatemala, Colombia, Peru, Chile, Brazil, Guyana, Suriname, Nicaragua and Honduras.

The Secretary General of the OAS, Ambassador Joao Clemente Baena Soares, in his eloquent speech of September 5, 1985, quoted the words of Joseph Stalin, the leader of Soviet communism: "Bring the machineguns. We are going to liquidate the diplomats". This quotation should be present in the reformist deliberations of this Assembly, because Castro is an imitator of Stalin.

With all of this background, Honorable Ministers of Foreign Relations and Honorable Ambassadors of the American States, we, who have been born in the Free Cuban State, which is a member of this General Assembly, of the Inter-American System and of the Organization of American States, on behalf of the free people of Cuba and representing the Cuban Patriotic Board, which encompasses the majority of the organizations in exile and within Cuba, declare:

1. That there cannot be any freedom in the Americas, as a whole, if it does not exist in each of its components. And Cuba is a part of the whole.

2. That there cannot be any democracy in the whole, which is made up by the Americas, if it does not exist in each of its components. Cuba, which is a part of the Americas, is presently subjugated by a totalitarian, tyrannical, Marxist-Leninist regime of a Stalinist nature, convicted and self-avowed.

3. That there cannot be any peace in the whole, if it does not exist in each of its components.

4. That the whole (the Americas) cannot be deemed as independent when one of its components (Cuba) is submitted to tributary and feudal servitude, in the condition of a geostrategic base for an extra-continental power (the Soviet Union).

5. There could happen a holocaust in Cuba worse than that of Romania, if the American States would not help the Cuban people and act in solidarity with same to prevent that. Jose Marti, the Apostle of Cuban Independence, stated: "Watching a crime in silence is tantamount to committing it". A crime is being committed in Cuba upon the Cuban people for the last 31 years, by a tyrant dressed in military garb who threatens, in his psychopathic megalomany, to stain with blood that country before surrendering the power to the legitimate representatives of the people.

6. the Organization of American States (OAS) is made up by free, equal, sovereign and independent nations; because of that, if a satellite government, "Marxist-Leninist to death"—as the Cuban government has stated—supported by an extra-continental power (the Soviet Union), endangers or tramples upon the rights of that state, the rest of the member states of the Inter-American System of the OAS have the moral and legal obligation, in compliance with the treaties, covenants, resolutions and agreements in force, to go to the defense of the subjugated state (Cuba) lest they shall incur, by their default, in the most serious mistake that History, in its day, shall condemn.

7. In accordance with the International Law of the Americas, this General Assembly is not competent to give entry to the present goverment of Cuba, because Castro was not separated from the Inter-American System and from the Organization of American States (OAS) by the OAS Charter, but by the Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance (the Treaty of Rio) and the Resolution approved reads that "the Marxist-Leninist doctrine is incompatible with the Inter-American System, and any government which identifies itself as Marxist-Leninist is separated from the System". And it continues to state that, "since the government of Cuba has identified as a Marxist-Leninist one, it is thus separated from the Inter-American System, from the OAS and from all organisms of the System".

"Either Cuba is saved, or the Americas shall be lost", as it was stated by that illustrious patriot and journalist, a former President of the Inter-American Press Society, Dr. Guillermo Martinez Marquez.

Honorable Chairman, Honorable Ministers of Foreign Relations and Honorable Ambassadors and Representatives of the Americas: We respectfully request that these denouncements be considered as made, that this document be circulated among the member States, and that action be consequently adopted. We are in the vanguard of that struggle and we still expect and trust that you shall act in solidarity with us and join us, as the patriots and statesmen of the last century did, to help several countries of the Americas to become independent. Cuba is fighting for its second independence and the whole of the Americas has committed its history and dignity of free nations with the Cuban people.

We remain your with the highest consideration and respect.

Dr. Manuel Antonio de Varona, Chariman, Cuban Patriotic Board, Former Prime Minister and Chairman of the Cuban Senate; Dr. José Ignacio Rasco, Secretary for Foreign Relations; Dr. Claudio F. Bened-Beruff, Washington Area Representative.

A SALUTE TO THE FIRST PROVIDENCE BOY SCOUT TROOP

● Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, on October 24 in the capital of Rhode Island, a gala celebration will mark the 80 continuous years of service of the First Providence Boy Scout Troop. I would like to salute today the 20 men who have served as Scoutmaster to the troop, the 16 men who attained the honored rank of Eagle Scout under their leadership, and the hundreds of parents, friends, and fellow Scouts who have made possible the troop's achievements throughout its remarkable history.

The First Providence Troop was organized in 1910 and listed 64 Scouts in its first charter. Five troops comprised the Rhode Island Boy Scouts in that year and all were on the steps of the state house when their flags were presented to the wife of the Governor on May 23, 1911. During that summer, the first summer camp devoted to Scouting was in operation on Prudence Island in Narragansett Bay. A source of great excitement for the boys was the transmission, while they were there, of the first wireless message ever dispatched from the island.

The approach of World War I brought national recognition to the Boy Scouts of our country, and the chartering of the organization as the Boy Scouts of America by Congress was accomplished on June 15, 1916. A year later, the Rhode Island Boy Scouts, including the First Providence Troop, voted to merge and become the Greater Providence Council, Boy Scouts of America.

The fundamental purpose of Scouting is * * * to promote, through organization and cooperation with other agencies, the ability of boys to do things for themselves and others, to train them in Scoutcraft, and to teach them patriotism, courage, self reliance and kindred virtues, with emphasis on the Scout Oath:

On my honor I will do my best to do my duty to God and my country and to obey the Scout Law; to help other people at all times, to keep myself physically strong, mentally awake and morally straight.

These are the precepts the First Providence Troop, Boy Scouts of America has held fast, and has translated into action through 80 wonderful years. Many are the men, women, and children of Providence who could rise up in thanks to the Scouts for their many gifts of food and clothing and the countless acts of community service.

The leaders of the troop can be justificably proud, for the result of their selfless devotion to the youth of Rhode Island has been a host of "strong, mentally awake and morally straight" men. Today the troop's membership reflects a cross-section of the diverse population of my State—many of its members are newcomers to the United States—and in scouting, they are enthusiastically learning good citizenship and duty to their fellow Americans.

We join with the First Providence Troop in the hope that its thousands of alumni and friends will guide it toward the year 2010, when it may celebrate a century of Scouting.●

JOHN HOUTARI'S TRIBUTE TO THE INTERNATIONAL SPACE YEAR IN 1992

● Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, in 1985, the Congress first proposed that 1992 be declared the International Space Year, commemorating the 500th anniversary of Columbus' voyage to the New World and the 35th anniversary of the International Geophysical Year that started the space age. Our dear friend, the late Senator Spark Matsunaga, introduced the International Space Year resolution during the 100th Congress, and on July 31, 1990, this proposal was finally approved.

A major focus of the International Space Year is global participation in space exploration. Poets such as T.S. Elliot have commented on the human drive to explore:

We shall not cease from exploration
And the end of all our exploring
Will be to arrive where we started
And know the place for the first time.

I am certain that space exploration will teach us a great deal about ourselves, and I am pleased that Congress has taken this step to foster worldwide support for space activities in 1992.

I am particularly proud of a constituent of mine, John Houtari of Zimmerman, MN, who has put his considerable energy and talents into promoting the International Space Year. Mr. Houtari has composed a poem, "First Steps," that represents the finest goals of cooperative space activities. I encourage my colleagues to consider this poem as the theme of the International Space Year. "First Steps," is an eloquent and fitting tribute to human efforts to reach beyond the boundaries of our planet.

Mr. President, I ask that Mr. Houtari's poem, "First Steps" be entered at this point in the RECORD.

The poem follows:

FIRST STEPS

(by John Huotari)

A shrine beneath a vivid sky
As sharp as broken glass,
Stands silent on a sunlit shore
Immune to seasons' change,
And footprints in its shadow lie,
All 'round its gleaming mass,
Imprinted there forever more,
Where none would think it strange.

Where wave will never wash away,
Where wind will never blow,
A precious jewel of history
Beyond our reverent reach,
So that our children's children may Look back on us, and know
Our hungering for mystery,
Our legacy to each.

First footsteps in a brand new land
Too vast to comprehend,
Impressed in soil and soul, our claim
Recorded and enshrined,
And writ that all may understand,
Upon the altar's end,
These ringing words of hope: "We came
In peace for all Mankind."

This symbol on a blazing plain,
Beneath a crescent Earth,
A guiding beacon shall become
To every human mind.
And when we need no more remain
Upon our world of birth,
We'll say to those we meet: 'We come
In peace to All we find.'●

CIRCLES OF POISON

● Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, Circle of poison has been an issue of lengthy debate and increasing scrutiny. It is a serious and contemporary issue that should not wait for any lengthy period of time before this body reaches a point of finality in its decision as to how we should resolve the differences that separate opposing sides of this matter.

Both the House and Senate Agriculture Committees have made gallant efforts to make a decision on how to break this circle. During the farm bill conference it was decided that consumers would best be served if more time was alloted for study of this issue. We reached this decision due to informative and impassioned arguments from several of our colleagues, especially chairman PATRICK LEAHY and Congressman PAT ROBERTS. I fully support this move.

As we continue to address the best way to resolve this contentious issue, I believe each of my colleagues and their staffs should open themselves to as much information as possible. I have a presentation from one of the most learned scholars on this subject, and would feel negligent if I did not offer it to this body for review and future use. Dr. Terry Lavy is a pesticide chemist and a professor at the University of Arkansas. Also, he is the director of the pesticide residue laboratory at the University of Arkansas. He is widely renowned in these fields, and his reputation precedes him wherever he travels. I hope you will find this interesting and helpful. I certainly have.

The presentation follows:

LET'S TAKE A GOOD LOOK BEFORE WE LEAP IMPORTANT PERSPECTIVES ON THE PESTICIDE ISSUE

(By Prof. Terry L. Lavy)

It is vital that no one minimize the importance of the decisions being made in this session of Congress with respect to policies on pesticide use and public perception of pesticides. As a University Professor with 28 years of experience in the scientific arena, I would be remiss in my duties if I did not share some of my research findings with you and the urgent concern that I have with respect to the direction some of our major legislation on pesticide matters may be about to take.

As a father of three, grandfather of four, and a nature enthusiast, I would have a difficult time living with myself if I felt that the following ideas and information that I am about to present, would in any way, lead to the deterioration of our environment or result in present or future adverse health effects on any human. It is my intent to present some of my research findings which appear to contrast significantly with what is so commonly portrayed in the popular press today. Although I have won national awards, authored a book and many scientific journal publications, seldom have my findings made exciting enough reading to merit publication in the national popular press.

I would be pleased to think that some of my research or that of my colleagues has assisted the American farmer in becoming the most efficient producer this world has ever experienced. What concerns me at this time is the possibility that we may be about to incur legislation and regulations that will take away this competitive advantage and at the same time put the American consumers in a position where they will be forced to pay exorbitant food prices for food of inferior quality.

The driving force that compels me to put this into writing is my interpretation of the results that I have gained from conducting research on pesticide residues for the past 28 years, the data I have collected while conducting pesticide applicator exposure studies over the past 12 years and my experience monitoring pesticides in ground water for the past 5 years. The popular concept that, as a result of the use of agricultural pesticides one should expect human health problems and a contaminated environment, is contrary to my findings and those of many other researchers working on the environmental fate of pesticides. It is my firm conviction that most researchers walking in my shoes would have formed conclusions similar to mine.

With the sophisticated analytical equipment available to researchers today, it is far easier to isolate and identify trace levels of pesticides than it is to understand the significance of those findings. If the trace level of pesticide occasionally found in water, soil, on food, or excreted from the body of exposed workers was resulting in sickness or presented a true health threat to a human, or posed a threat to the environment, then I would strongly recommend measures to eliminate the use of that pesticide.

Unfortunately the majority of the pesticides being lost or canceled today is the result of an ultra-restrictive atmosphere brought about by phobias regarding pesticides in general. It is important that Congress, EPA, and the concerned public be more informed concerning pesticide toxicity. All should know that the toxicity levels of different pesticides vary markedly and that both the toxicity of the pesticide and the extent of its dose govern any potential adverse health or environmental effects which may occur. It is ironic that the country that has been the real leader in the development, manufacture and use of pesticides and the country with the safest and most ample food supply in the world is now nearly ready to force a mass exodus of pesticide research and development from this country. It is important to take a close look at the data and interpretations responsible for the rigorous new re-registration requirements which have caused manufacturers to voluntarily remove their products from the marketplace. As the IR-4 liaison director for the State of Arkansas, I am shocked to see the loss of large numbers of pesticides which were only a short while ago available to those producing the food for the U.S. consumer. With the current restrictions in place, too many of the manufacturers of pesticides for the minor use crops (namely the fruits and vegetables that we have grown accustomed to consuming) are no longer seeking registration due to the high costs associated with the new regulations. When weighed against the limited returns they may expect from selling the relatively low amounts of these pesticides required for the production of food for humans, these manufacturers have deemed that efforts on their part would not be cost effective. It is essential that all understand that it is not the manufacturers who will be encountering the major loss, rather it is the American vegetable and fruit consumer. There is no evidence showing that the food safety guidelines governing pesticides which have been in place during the past 20 years have been detrimental to the health of the consuming public. Not only are we living longer, but incidences of cancer, with the major exception of lung cancer attributable to tobacco, have decreased. It is important to note that the use of pesticides has continued to increase during this period of time. One must question the wisdom of enacting extreme restrictive legislation just because it is currently the popular thing to do. Only when it can be scientifically shown that real adverse health effects are occurring due to the prescribed use of pesticides should changes in regulations be initiated.

Pesticide phobia and popularity at the polls seem to have replaced the quest for scientific information in the minds of too many influential people. If pesticides have and are causing health problems, it is our duty to remedy this situation. If not, we should carefully weigh the facts and consider whether we are prepared to have other countries whose workers are less knowledgeable about the proper use of pesticides producing our vegetables and fruit. The most logical location for the new production areas would be Mexico and Central America. The use of insecticides most probably would need to be increased due to the warmer temperatures which are more conducive to insect activity. Since we would have less control over the choice and amount of pesticide used, increased testing of the fresh produce would be required if we wish to know the pesticide levels in the fresh produce. It would be a gigantic task, if not an impossible one, to sample the fresh fruit and vegetables, have them extracted, and the materials quantified and identified in time to keep them off the market in case they are shown to contain a pesticide at a level above the tolerance limit. It is time we take a good look at our present method of operation and see if we really want to try to fix something that is not broken. It is time we create an economic and regulatory atmosphere which both allows and encourages the continued research, production and use of pesticides in the United States.

As a university researcher, over 96% of my research support has come from the public sector; my duties require that my publications reflect the results of my research findings regardless to whether these are positive or negative with respect to pesticides. As director of the pesticide residue research program at the University of Arkansas my research is designed to address potential problems associated with the use or misuse of pesticides.

In 1978 my laboratory was selected to conduct a research project in which we were to measure the extent of exposure occurring to workers whose duty required them to apply 2,4,5-T in the forest. We were selected since we had no vested interest in the outcome of the study, had the personnel required, and were equipped to analyze the samples. During the past 12 years our laboratory has conducted 12 different pesticide exposure studies with grant funds in excess of $1,000,000. None of this funding has come from any chemical manufacturer. More than 20 different pesticides have been included in these pesticide worker exposure studies that we have been asked to conduct.

Before we enter into a new study we routinely request EPA personnel to evaluate our protocols prior to initiating the study. In developing the protocol I have been fortunate to have excellent input from experts in academia, the regulatory arena as well as toxicologists and researchers from industry. Perhaps the unique feature of our research is the fact that we base our findings almost solely on absorbed dose data which we obtain from analyzing urine samples of potentially exposed workers. We feel it essential to make a total, complete urine collection from each worker prior to, during exposure and for at least four days following the potential day of exposure. Since we deem it critical that only those workers normally engaged in the pesticide application process be a part of the field monitoring study, the research team goes to the field and collects the samples while the crews are performing their normal activities. Each worker is provided a new urine collection container daily and provided cash incentives for cooperating in proving the total sample. To ensure that no unexplained degradation can occur in samples prior to consequent analysis in the laboratory, blind fortified samples are prepared in the field. The analyst does not know in advance which are the fortified samples.

A typical detection limit for the parent compound or the urinary metabolite excreted is 10 to 100 g/ml as determined by gas chromatographic analysis.

Since pesticide applicators receive more exposure than all other workers, with the possible exception of those in the manufacturing plant, we have thus studied that group in society most likely to have received health threatening amounts of pesticide. In none of these 12 studies involving over 250 pesticide workers have we found a worker who has received a dose nearing a health-threatening level. The amount of pesticide received by a person who ingested a trace amount of pesticide in food or water is far less than the amount absorbed by the most heavily exposed workers.

Our studies have focused on measuring the amount of pesticide actually entering the body since the amount deposited on clothing or that remaining on the outside of the body has no effect on human health. We speak of this amount entering the body as the absorbed dose.

This next point in this discussion is perhaps the most important! My studies show that pesticides and/or their metabolites are readily excreted from humans via urine, and there is no evidence that they build up in the body. Unlike the earlier generation of chlorinated hydrocarbon insecticides which were deposited in fatty tissues of animals, all of the 11 pesticides evaluated in our human exposure studies have been found to be readily excreted in urine (see Table 1 for details).

Urinary excretion of the pesticide or its metabolite occurs readily and provides a convenient means of assessing the extent of exposure, if any, which has occurred. Results obtained from animal feeding trials or human volunteer studies provide information which allows us to evaluate the significance of the absorbed dose. By comparing the amount of the absorbed dose with data gathered from long-term animal feeding studies which establish No Observed Effect Levels (NOEL), it is possible to calculate the margin of safety associated with some workers applying the pesticide. The rate at which pesticides are excreted in urine from humans seems to parallel that observed by humans who consume asparagus, as evidenced by the smell of asparagine in urine within 60 minutes after eating it.

Scientists will never be able to effectively counter claims that "long-term effects of pesticide use are not known." The same claim can be made for chewing bubble gum, consuming beverages sweetened with saccharine, sunbathing, drinking chlorinated water, or eating peanut butter. Although in this country we have many freedoms, it is not possible to thoroughly evaluate the long-term effects of any one component since we do not pen humans up and feed them one diet for extended periods and carefully monitor all possible health effects.

It is essential that I state that I believe there are some real environmental-health issues that should be addressed. Disposal of toxic wastes, air pollution and the proper disposal of nuclear wastes are legitimate issues that merit the attention of congressmen, regulators, researchers and the public. We must permit our limited financial resources to be directed towards these real health issues. Evidence linking pesticides, when used at label recommended rates to human health problems is sparse to non-existent. The concept "if we are to err, let us err on the side of safety" when taken to extremes could play a major role in converting a once affluent society into a second-rate nation. It is difficult to know exactly how much testing is really necessary to protect human health without forcing an excessive burden ultimately on the U.S. taxpayer.

The recent statement by EPA which downgrades the potential health threat of asbestos to humans, vividly illustrates the need for enhanced scientific verification of items related to health. The millions of dollars spent on removing asbestos from schools and other public places could have been much more wisely spent. It is important to cry wolf only when there is a wolf. With respect to pesticides, it appears that we have become so enchanted with the thought of crying wolf that we are willing to undermine the economy of our country by making it impossible in the United States to continue producing the variety, quality, and quantity of food that we have in the past. In the absence of legal pesticides, food production, consumption practices and food prices would take on a new dimension in the United States. Before it is too late, let us all hope that informed citizens and legislators learn the real facts. It is important that scientific evidence be used to evaluate pesticides, their benefits and the misconceptions associated with occasionally finding trace levels in food or water.

Although I do not advocate the intentional consumption of pesticides, based on the results of my findings it is comforting to realize that our bodies have the capability to readily and quantitatively excrete them whether they enter as a result of our occupation or if we would happen to ingest them.

A supplement follows which contains toxicological information on some of the pesticides on which I have measured absorbed dose data for pesticide workers. Since the information is somewhat more technical than that in the preceding section, I have included it for those desiring some more specifics on the information presented above. Following the technical supplement is a discussion of the current state-of-the-art methodology and the implications associated with conducting pesticide applicator exposure studies involving humans.

TECHNICAL SUPPLEMENT

The common and technical names of the pesticides included in our worker exposure studies are listed in Table 1. Also included is the No Observed Effect Level (NOEL), the LD_{50} value and a listing of the margins of safety for the most highly exposed worker in each of the studies.

[3] This worst-case calculation assumes that the worker receives the same highest one day absorbed dose, each day of the year.
[4] This margin of safety calculation was based on the assumption that for each positive sample the worker had the potential for exposure over a 12-day period.
[5] No absorbed dose was found for any worker during an eleven-month worker exposure study.

In the case of 2,4–D, as shown in Table 1 the most highly exposed worker could have received an absorbed dose 272 times higher, before he would have received enough 2,4–D to reach the No Observed Effect Level as determined by long-term rate feeding trials in which the animal is fed that amount of pesticide daily. This margin of safety calculation is a worse-case situation since the worker receives exposure for only a limited time each year. For the compounds Captan, Dursban, Pydrin, and Roundup none of these materials or their metabolites were found in any of the over 1000 urine samples tested. Thus their margins of safety calculate out to be infinity since the denominator in the equation (absorbed dose) was 0. It was interesting that no Roundup was excreted in urine since gauze sample patches attached to the clothing of these workers contained significant amounts of Roundup. These urinary excretion values for Roundup are consistent with values observed in monkey exposure studies conducted by other researchers (1), in which applications made to the skin of monkeys showed that this herbicide has almost no ability to penetrate skin. Previous studies, primarily evaluating phenoxy compounds, showed that essentially all of these materials which enter the body, enter via the skin and not as a result of breathing vapors (2). Pharmacokinetic studies reveal that over 97% of the phenoxy herbicides absorbed into the body are excreted in urine within 7 days (3). The remaining portion appears to continue to be excreted at a similar rate.

IMPLICATIONS ASSOCIATED WITH CONDUCTING EXPOSURE STUDIES

Research involving human exposure studies has been interesting, stimulating, and challenging. One of the intriguing portions of my work has been the extreme interest shown by the media when they first learn of my studies. After it becomes clear that the results indicate no potential health effects, this interest fades. As I have indicated earlier, it was and is my intent to publish whatever results my findings show. What we have is a good news story which shows that human body can receive some pesticide exposure without suffering health effects since these materials are readily excreted via urine or feces.

Before I leave the impression that we have all of the answers with respect to the significance of the pesticide exposure, it is important that I clarify that point. In my opinion there are some major data gaps that should be closed before we can fully interpret some of the data that I have collected. Specifically, the fact that we do not know the total fate and excretion pathways for many pesticides makes it difficult to quantitate the total dose received. For picloram and the phenoxy compounds, some excellent data have been obtained by feeding known amounts of low concentrations of these compounds to human volunteers and following their excretion pathways and kinetics. However, for 5 of the last 7 pesticides listed on Table 1, only data from sensitive test animals were available for calculations to quantify the amount of pesticide absorbed, as measured by urinary excretion. In the absence of human data, mass balance data from rat and other animal studies must be used to provide information regarding what percentage of the absorbed dose is excreted in urine.

Too large a portion of the research budget in the pesticide exposure area in recent years has been used to fund studies of a repetitive nature in which evaluation of the deposition of pesticides on patches or other parts of the body is the primary issue. In my opinion, EPA, FDA, NIH, CDC, and other agencies should place a much higher emphasis on funding studies which will definitively show the amount of pesticide entering the bodies of humans, determine the metabolic and excretion pathways, and ultimately, determine the health significance of these amounts which enter the body. Without this information one must continue to speculate about pesticide effects.

I realize it is much easier to make these requests than it is to conduct research of this nature. Legal implications and social attitudes make these research ventures difficult. Among possible alternatives, we may have the following options: (A) Animal studies can help provide some answers, but the argument can always be made that humans and other animals are not the same. (B) We could allow fear of pesticides to result in tighter restrictions on them, eventually resulting in a total ban. (C) Legislative exemptions could be made which would allow well-planned studies involving volunteers and low levels of pesticides to be conducted without fear of legal repercussions. Options A and C are the ones that should be considered.

There is much talk and a considerable amount of fear associated with exposure or potential exposure to pesticides, but there is a very important piece of information that seldom receives much attention. The biggest study in our history continues to go on every year in our farm communities. The pesticide materials that many people fear that they may be receiving in trace amounts, in food or water, are routinely being used in large quantities by pesticide applicators, farm workers and others associated with the agricultural community. What we are seeing is a success story! Very seldom are humans affected by using these pesticides when used according to label instructions, despite the fact that we know that this group of workers who mix and apply pesticides receive a much higher dose than others in our society. While conducting 12 exposure studies over the past 12 years involving over 250 people, I did not see or hear of any of these workers becoming ill due to the use of these materials. I am aware that some individuals are more sensitive to pesticides than are other people. The same statement can also be made for other items such as ragweed, antibiotics, cosmetics, or poison ivy.

If and when biological control measures are developed which can replace synthetic pesticides, this option should be considered. In the meantime, it is essential that the best science be used to provide answers that can allow us to maintain our ample high quality food supply, a good economic climate, and a protected environment and at the same time provide some clear answers to those who fear that pesticides may be harmful to their health. The results of my research, my awareness of hundreds to thousands of healthy farm workers and pesticide applicators who have used pesticides for 20 to 30 years with no known adverse health effects, and a knowledge of the literature regarding the type of information remove my fear of pesticides to human health—when these materials are used according to label instructions.

FORT COLLINS RE-LEAF PROGRAM

● Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, I am pleased to have the opportunity to share with my colleagues a unique and promising tree planting program taking place in Colorado. The Fort Collins Re-Leaf Program allows individuals to sponsor trees to be planted throughout the city.

As you know, trees not only enhance the beauty of our communities, they form a vital link in the environmental systems that sustain us. Trees are not simply a desirable addition to the landscape but a necessary element in nature's ecosystems. They absorb carbon dioxide from our atmosphere, which helps in the fight against air pollution and global warming.

The Fort Collins Re-Leaf is an urban forestry group drawing together land resources. Working closely with the city of Fort Collins Forestry Department, tree nurseries, local residents and organizations, Fort Collins Re-Leaf is dedicated to getting trees planted. A $5 donation to this worthy cause allows volunteers to plant one tree in Fort Collins.

With the help of this group 10,000 trees will be planted in Fort Collins over the next 3 years. Mr. President, I would like to commend Fort Collins Re-Leaf for its effort and promotion of tree planting.●

REPRESENTATIVE TONY HALL CARRIES ON THE LELAND TRADITION

● Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I was pleased to read an article the other day in Roll Call about the work my friend and colleague, TONY HALL, has done over the past year as he succeeded Representative Mickey Leland who died in a tragic plane crash on August 7, 1989, as chairman of the House Select Committee on Hunger.

I have had the pleasure of getting to know TONY through our weekly prayer breakfasts meetings and on a trip he and I and several others took last August to the Middle East and parts of Asia and Africa. On this trip, we met with government and religious leaders on an informal basis in an effort to learn more about their countries and to build personal relationships that might later lead to enhanced economic and political relations.

From country to country, from Syria to Pakistan, Nepal to India, we took away impressions of the nations we visited. The most dramatic impression made upon me during my trip was the poverty that still exists in almost all of the countries we visited. In fact, our group traveled to two of the five poorest countries in the world—Nepal and Bangladesh—nations with per capita GNP's under $200 a year.

So I was happy to read that TONY has been able to take what he learned from that trip and from many other contacts with poverty and hunger around the world and turn that into action through his work as chairman of the Select Committee on Hunger. And I commend him on stepping into the shoes of the late chairman and using his skills and experience to move forward in ending world hunger.

Mr. President, I ask that the text of the Roll Call article be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

The article follows:

WITH DIFFERENT STYLE, HALL PURSUES SAME GOAL AS LELAND IN A YEAR AT HEAD OF HUNGER PANEL

By Karen Foerstel

Tomorrow marks the one-year anniversary of Rep. Tony Hall's (D-Ohio) ascension to the chair of the House Select Committee on Hunger. Hall, who had headed the committee's international task force, succeeded Rep. Mickey Leland (D-Texas) who, along with three staffers, died in a tragic plane crash on Aug. 7 during a relief mission to Ethiopia.

Since, in the minds of many, Leland and the committee were one and the same, it's fair to ask how the panel has fared in his absence.

Members and staffers agree that the past 12 months have brought more success than was ever expected.

"Mickey would be very pleased with what we have done this year," said Rep. Doug Bereuter (R-Neb), who has served on the committee since it was first established in 1984. "Even though his leadership was sorely missed, his death created an added stimulus that we continue his cause."

Tony Gambino, director of the panel's international task force, agreed.

"At the very least, we wanted to go out and work twice as hard," Gambino said. "Leland's death happened over recess when there wasn't a lot to do. Having to come to work during that period, for me, that was the worst time of all. I'd look across to the seat where Hugh Johnson [one of the staffers killed in the crash] used to sit.

"But things changed very rapidly once Tony was named chairman," Gambino continued. "The committee is back into full swing. We were ready to go [last] September."

While the Hunger Committee has no formal legislative authority, during this past year it has pushed two freestanding measures through Congress.

One of the committee's bills, the WIC Services Restoration Act, sailed through both houses in just five days. The bill, which restored food allotments for women, infants, and children on the federal nutrition program, was signed by the President just one week later.

The committee was also responsible for a bipartisan resolution, passed by the House last month, which asked both sides in the Angolan civil war to put humanitarian needs above military goals and to provide hunger relief to the starving people of that southern African country. The bill marks one of the few times that Members supporting different factions in the war have united.

The committee's influence was also seen in the 1990 Farm Bill. Panel members sponsored the "Mickey Leland Domestic Hunger Prevention Act." the most significant overhaul of food-stamp policy in a decade, which eventually became part of the House-passed version of the Farm Bill. The Farm Bill is currently in conference.

The committee's success "has gone beyond my expectations," Hall told Roll Call. "The committee has been very aggressive. . . We hit the ground running."

Hall's success as chairman comes, at least in part, from his long tenure on the committee. He also has developed a solid working relationship with the committee's staff—no mean feat considering the dedication of many aides to Leland.

The majority of staffers remained on committee through the transition of power. One major staff change, however, was the departure of the panel's chief of staff, Miranda Katsoyannis, just one day after Hall's succession to chair. Katsoyannis was replaced by Hall's legislative director, Martin Rendon.

Over the past year, Hall has visited Panama and Peru to look at the hunger problems in those countries, but he has not returned to the Ethiopian refugee camps which Leland was visiting when his plane crashed into the side of a mountain.

The reason, said one aide, is that any Congressional trip to Ethiopia, which is in the midst of a civil war, could be used as a political tool by either side of the fighting. Hall, the aide said, has attempted to keep politics out of his work against hunger.

Rep. Leon Panetta (D-Calif), who ranks second in seniority to Hall on the committee, noted that between Leland and Hall "there is a difference in styles. Mickey was much more open in going out into the public. Tony is much more of an individual who works within the institution. He does that effectively because of his membership on the Rules Committee."

Rep. Byron Dorgan (D-ND), who also serves on the committee, agreed that there is a "difference in style, but not so much in results. Mickey was the center of attention. Tony, I think, is quieter," Dorgan said. "But I don't think there's any difference in commitment."

Said Hall: "We're different men, but we shared the same goal. . . . The committee can really fulfill a role in bringing an end to world hunger. We feel we're making a contribution and that gives you joy."●

LETTER FROM TUNISIAN AMBASSADOR

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I recently received a letter from the Ambassador of Tunisia in Washington. In his letter, he addresses two issues of concern—the current crisis in the Persian Gulf and an incident involving the arrest of alleged smugglers in Tunisia.

The Government of Tunisia has been a good friend of the United States for nearly 35 years. The Ambassador's letter puts forth an explanation of Tunisia's position on these issues.

The letter follows:

EMBASSY OF TUNISIA,
Washington, DC, October 16, 1990.

Hon. RUDY BOSCHWITZ,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR BOSCHWITZ: The Government of Tunisia is concerned about erroneous characterizations of its views on issues which have appeared in recent reports. I would like to take this opportunity to state clearly for the record my Government's position on these issues.

First, with respect to the Gulf crisis, on August 3, the Government of Tunisia voted for the resolution adopted by the Arab League Foreign Ministers meeting which condemned the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait. The Resolution also called for the immediate withdrawal of Iraqi forces and the return of the status quo in Kuwait as of August 2. The Iraqi invasion and holding of hostages are unacceptable in the Government of Tunisia.

The Government of Tunisia considers itself bound by the Security Council embargo against Iraq and is taking the necessary measures to enforce it, although the cost to the Tunisian economy is in the hundreds of millions of dollars. Included in this estimate are the following:

$30 million worth of goods already purchased by Iraq but not shipped. Most of these items have been manufactured to meet Iraqi specifications and standards and cannot be redirected to other markets:

Export credits to Iraq amount to $75 million, $25 million of which are past due;

Some $225 million in annual trade with Iraq, and $25 million with Kuwait;

A substantial loss of foreign exchange remitted by 5,000 Tunisians working in Kuwait and Iraq; and, $550 million in Kuwait investments committed to Tunisia, three fifths of which is outstanding. Consequently, a number of projects have been suspended causing losses to hundreds of subcontractors as well as thousands of jobs.

These employment losses are in addition to those incurred by Tunisians returning from Kuwait and Iraq, swelling an already high unemployment rate of 14 percent.

Ultimately, the fear is that the effect of the Gulf crisis on the Tunisian economy will jeopardize the implementation of the Tunisian structural adjustment program embarked upon since 1986 in cooperation with the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank.

The Government of Tunisia respects Saudi Arabia's right, as a sovereign nation, to invite foreign forces to defend its territory but would prefer that this has not happened. While not favoring the introduction of foreign troops in the Gulf, the Government of Tunisia calls for their withdrawal as part of an overall diplomatic resolution of the crisis.

The Government of Tunisia seeks a peaceful settlement of the crisis. The stakes are so high and the consequences of a military conflagration so dire that Tunisia believes that no effort should be spared in exhausting whatever possibilities exist to resolve the crisis diplomatically. To this end President Ben Ali has recently dispatched special envoys to a number of countries, including the United States, to propose a set of ideas.

Tunisia's endeavors are in keeping with and in fulfillment of the principles embodied in the U.N. Security Council Resolution on the crisis. Tunisia considers the Iraqi withdrawal from Kuwait and the release of all hostages to be non-negotiable.

Tunisia and the United States share the common goal of ending the Iraqi occupation of Kuwait and re-establishing Kuwait's sovereignty, although we may differ on the method to achieve such a goal.

Secondly, I would like to clarify the record concerning recent allegations of the mistreatment of Tunisian Jews living in Djerba. On June 12, 1990, twenty nine individuals were arrested for gold and foreign currency smuggling. Of these individuals, five were Tunisian Jews. All arrests were made under a search warrant.

Jews and non-Jews were treated as Tunisians. No distinction was made on the basis of religion. This is important to Tunisia because religious tolerance is a basic belief in the Tunisian society. After being received by President Ben Ali, the Great Rabbi of Tunisia has issued a statement in which he denied the allegations of the mistreatment of Tunisian Jews.

It is also important to note that all the accused smugglers are being treated in accordance with the Tunisian due process and legal system. We pride ourselves on having a free and fair justice system. We remain committed to respecting and implementing the basic principles of human rights. The Government of Tunisia allows independent observers to operate and monitor allegations of human rights abuses. Amnesty International, for example, has had an active office in Tunisia since 1988.

Finally allow me, Senator, to thank you for providing me the opportunity to state my Government's views on these matters. Tunisia and the United States have enjoyed close and friendly relations and a shared commitment to democratic values. We continue to share that commitment and value our relationship with the United States. We do not believe that difference in tactics in the current Gulf crisis should seriously impact on these mutually beneficial ties and we look forward to continuing to have close and friendly relations.

With warm regards.

Sincerely yours,

ABDELAZIZ HAMZAOUI,
Ambassador of Tunisia.●

PRIDE AND PATRIOTISM IN SAUDI ARABIA

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I have received a copy of a remarkable letter, written by a senior airman in Saudi Arabia to the eighth-grade students of Chippewa School in Des Plaines, IL, and sent to me by the students' teacher Jim Sorenson. Because I believe it deserves wider attention, I ask that the complete text be included in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Senior Airman Fernando Casillas describes in his letter his hopes and concerns and those of his colleagues in the United States Armed Forces in Saudi Arabia. He writes of the injustice of Saddam Hussein's aggression in Kuwait, his pride in role in the multinational efforts to free Kuwait, and his fervent hope that the impasse can be resolved without war. "Peace," he writes, "is the ultimate goal." Mr. President, this eloquent letter is well worth the attention of all the Members of this body as we deliberate on issues that touch on the crisis in the Persian Gulf.

September 18, 1990.

My Dear friends at Chippewa J.H.:

Hello! My name is Senior Airman Fernando Casillas. Today I received your letters from Des Plaines. Even though they were addressed to the Army boys over here, I am very glad they were given to me. All of you are a great group, and I thank each one of you for including your lines of friendship and true American support. All of you are my new friends.

I am part of Operation Desert Shield with the U.S. Air Force unit of Aerial Refueling KC-135's from Griffiss AFB, New York. I have been here for three weeks now. Other refueling squadrons of stratotankers from all over the U.S. are here also. We, together with other Air Force aircraft units, Navy fighter aircraft, Marine Corps pilots, and Army helicopter units are here to help protect our friends, the Saudi Arabian people and help restore their home land to the Kuwaiti.

It is terribly unfortunate that grown-ups in this world act the way Saddam Hussein has acted. It does nothing but create tension and struggle for many innocent people.

This world is our home and we should always strive to live at peace with one another. When a situation like this crisis occurs, it is only right to help those in need, and I am glad to be a part of the world-wide effort to see this injustice become resolved.

Being in the military is a demanding and sometimes difficult duty, as many of you already know. But, the reward is priceless. Our American veterans, prisoners of past wars, those who have been missing in action, and our brothers, the unknown soldiers have, in days gone by, forged the freedom of our great home, America. They will not have their work, and their fight forgotten. Because we enjoy liberty and peace in the United States, I and my fellow service members continually do our work with much pride and enthusiasm. Helping to preserve our nation's security is an honorable and noble opportunity.

And now the world has looked to us for help. We must set the example. We cannot let this situation go unnoticed, not when the opportunity for every man's freedom still exists. Even though we are in a foreign land, I am glad we are here. Our families and our friends, such as yourselves, all depend on us to do a good job.

The probability of war does exist. War is always a tragic and horrible thing. I would like to see all of us go home soon, every single one of us. Nobody here wants to see the consequence of a battle. We all have people to go home to. It is our job, though, that keeps us here ready to fight a good fight. We have superior weapon technology. Our ground forces can't compare to the enemy's in number, but we are stronger and better. The world knows the calibur of the U.S. Armed Forces has never been better or stronger. But we are praying that none of the United Nations Allies will have to show and prove their strength in war. A solution is more important. Peace is the utmost goal.

That, my friends, is just about how every soldier, marine, seaman, and airman feels about being here. We want to make you proud of us. But we miss home a whole lot! Being away from all of you is tough and your letters help a great deal.

Let's see. Some of you really understand how it is to live out here in the desert. Our friend Amanda Kornacki knows that being away from the family for even a week is not easy. That is most certainly true, Amanda. Thanks for your best wishes!

Jimmy C knows what it's like to have a nice hot day. Pretty rough here, too, but we are getting used used to it slowly. Thanks, partner.

Thirteen year-old Jinay Thomas sends a "thanks" for us being in military. Thank you, J.T. for writing to us!

Lakeita Duncan is one of our many friends praying for us. We want to thank you for remembering us when you talk with God. That is very important. Thanks, Lakeita! We are praying, too.

Ron Magrow says he is lucky to have us protecting him and the U.S. We, too, are fortunate to have Ron write us to say that. See ya soon, Ron!

We all may just show up at Robert Mazur's house for some movies on the VCR he has. We miss catching the latest flick. Thanks for your letter, Robert, and make lots of pop corn, okay?!?

Michelle Marconi tells us that her dad was in the National Guard. She knows what it is like to have someone she loves in the military. Thanks, Michelle, for your letter! We wish that this thing was over, too.

Baseball fan and card collector, Jimmy Lokotkin, hopes there will not be a war. Jimmy, we will do our best to do as President Bush says. We don't want a war either. Keep your chin up, there, sport!

Tracey Owen wonders if we are lonesome. Well Tracey, we have each other. We are all buddies around here, the best team anyone's ever seen. We do miss everyone back home, though. You take care also, Tracey, and thanks for your special letter!

Jim Douvalakis asked if we were scared or nervous. Jim, often we stop and wonder, "How will I perform if I'm needed in battle." We can't help but feel scared sometimes, honestly. But when we are at work and two jets fly by, an American F-16 and a British cargo plane together, we know we are not alone. Thanks for your concern, Jim. We hope everything is well for you, too.

Rosa Tenuta, an 8th grader, at CJH, wonders about the kind of lifestyle in the Middle East. The Arab people are very different from us, Rosa. Their religion and family traditions are old, but very sacred to them. We respect them for their hospitality towards the U.S. military here. They are a gentle, friendly people Thanks for asking Rosa. Best of wishes from us to you!

Gina Linz is an active participator in her class's discussions on the Middle East. It is important, as Gina knows, to learn and communicate knowledge about the current events in today's world happenings. Thanks for your support, Gina! We want to definitely make it home safe!

Bonnie Weber, who recently celebrated her thirteenth birthday, is a social studies student who also likes L.A. as one of her favorite subjects. It is not easy being brave, but knowing people like you, Bonnie, are behind us all the way, then we always do our best. Thanks, Bonnie, for sending your letter!

Our friend Mandy Severson is sorry to hear of the situation over here. Mandy, we just want those people to get their homes back so we can go home, too. Thanks for the nice letter and for thinking about us, Mandy!

Mike Bronillette, who will be a freshman at Main West High next year, and who is proud of his hometown, knows it takes guts to do something difficult like this. This is true. Many people's lives are at stake, so we must be extremely cautious. And that does take guts, Mike. Do well in school there, big guy. Thanks for your letter.

Many of you wrote about the tornadoes that happened near your homes. I read about this in the Stars and Stripes newspaper, an overseas, military periodical. I am very sorry about this incident. It hurt me to know that many died and were injured. I understand it is always difficult losing loved ones, and the immense feeling of helplessness that can overcome you. It is these kinds of occurences that makes us realize just how much we depend and rely upon one another. We will always need each other, just like we needed your letters to help us feel better about being away from home.

I am very proud of all of you at Chippewa Junior High. Just knowing that a special group of young people in Des Plaines, Illinois, are thinking about us, caring about what goes on, and being our friends makes my life as a United States Air Force member much more rewarding.

For all of you who included a home address, I would like to have the chance to respond personally to each of you. I will do that in the following days. I work 12 hours a day and I write letters when I go off-duty. It may take a little while, but I promise to write back.

Oh! I almost forgot! I work on the KC-135 Stratotankers. Those are the refueling planes I told you about. I am an Avionics Systems Repair Specialist. I work on the various electronic systems on board the aircraft of the Strategic Air Command of the 8th Air Force. My regular duty station is at Griffiss AFB in New York, and it is there that I learned to be a technician on flight instruments, flight directors, auto-pilot systems and navigational equipment.

My training base was at Chanute in Rantoul, Illinois, so I am familiar with your home state. I spent the Fourth of July in Chicago in 1987, and I loved the countryside. The sky is its bluest and biggest in Illinois. There's no doubt about that.

Well, kids, I only have a few things I'd like to tell you before I close. Please be good students. I know you already are intelligent, bright, and growing minds just ready to take on the world. For that, I am very proud of you.

Don't forget that education is the most important, vital strength. You will be the leaders of our nation soon, and you will learn about peace and liberty from all of this.

Believe in yourselves. Dreams and goals are always yours for the taking. Take as many as you can hold and make them reality.

Be good students. Teachers are really neat people and they will always show you the right thing. Only students (you guys) work harder than they do.

Be good to one another. We are all on the same team. I'm on your team and all of you are my teammates. Together we will work things out if we help each other.

I would like to visit each of you soon. Maybe we can arrange to meet in the near future. Until then, remember—stay in school. Absolutely no drugs. Drugs are not cool and will only hurt our team.

Thanks again for your letters. Next time you guys write, tell us what you'd like to be someday.

When I finish my tour of duty in the Air Force I am going to be a teacher because I will always need guys like you.

Thanks again. We love you all!

SENIOR AIRMAN FERNANDO CASILLAS

P.S.—Please say "Hi!" to all your families and friends for me!

USED OIL ENERGY PRODUCTION ACT OF 1990

● Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, each year an estimated 400 million gallons of used oil are dumped into the Nation's soil and water causing widespread environmental damage. Nearly all of this used oil could be re-refined or reprocessed into fuel or other petroleum products using existing petroleum industry capacity. Such a policy would not only reduce environmental damage, it would strengthen our national energy security by treating what has generally been considered a waste, as a valuable domestic energy resource. Used oil could thus supply the Nation with the equivalent of 10 million barrels of crude oil per year, roughly 1 week's output of the trans-Alaska pipeline.

Congress has long recognized the benefits of the reuse of certain waste materials, including their use for energy production. In 1975, the Congress enacted section 383 of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (Public Law 94-163) which set forth a Federal policy designed to promote the reuse of used oil. This policy has helped develop fledgling industries in the reuse of used oil. However, significant economic and legal disincentives continue to exist for the expanded reuse of used oil.

First, the economies for used oil are marginal, because the price of the competing resource, crude oil, is subject to wide price swings. Low world crude oil prices have, at times, made the collection and reprocessing of used oil more expensive than producing products from crude oil. This economic uncertainty creates a disincentive to investment in the reuse of used oil—even though these disincentives cost us in terms of energy security and environmental quality.

The second disincentive to the reuse of used oil is a consequence of the fact that the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency is currently authorized to list used oil as a hazardous waste. Such an action would completely alter the regulatory framework governing the reuse of used oil and would open the entire used oil collection and reprocessing system to the legal liabilities set forth in the Solid Waste Disposal Act. Because of this possibility, business is understandably reluctant to invest in the collection and reuse of used oil. I understand that this is a controversial issue, but the record is clear—listing could deter our efforts to collect used oil.

In an effort to reduce these disincentives, the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources unanimously reported S. 2923, the Used Oil Energy Production Act of 1990, on September 28, 1990. It had been my hope that the Congress would be able to quickly adopt a policy of treating used oil as an energy resource, instead of a waste, and thereby increase our domestic energy supplies. The deployment of troops to Saudi Arabia gives an urgency to the implementation of such a policy.

The environmental benefits of such a policy are also compelling. By treating used oil as an energy resource, the Nation's petroleum industry would have an incentive to go out and collect the used oil that now contaminates our soil and water. By declaring used oil to be an energy resource, powerful market forces would be harnessed to respond to two important national objectives, energy security and environmental quality.

Unfortunately, yet understandably, the chairman of the Committee on Environment and Public Works wrote to the chairman of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources to request sequential referral of this legislation, and to suggest that any action regarding used oil be made within the context of the Environment Committee's consideration of the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act [RCRA], next year.

I believe that we can work together to implement a policy of treating used oil as an energy resource, instead of a waste, without a great deal of complication. The situation, and the opportunity, presented by used oil is fundamentally different than that of other wastes. Used oil is generated by virtually every household in the Nation, and it has an energy value as high as, or higher, than crude oil.

I am pleased that staff from the Energy and Environment Committees have expressed a desire to work together, and to work swiftly to consider this issue next year—either as part of RCRA or independently if possible.

The issue of used oil is significantly different from other RCRA issues, and used oil offers unique opportunities to the Nation. I look forward to working with the Environment Committee on this issue. I recognize their expertise and encourage their contributions. However, it is my hope that we can fashion a proposal built around the idea of harnessing market forces to bring stable progress to our efforts to reuse used oil.

Mr. President, I believe the approach taken by S. 2923 to promote the reuse of used oil is good public policy. It is an initiative that should no longer be delayed. I plan to push this legislation again next year and I look forward to the support and contributions of all my colleagues, especially those on the Environment Committee.●

EMPLOYMENT SECURITY REFORM

● Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, it is my intention during the 102d Congress to introduce legislation to ensure the stability and effectiveness of the Federal-State employment security system. I would like to give my colleagues a little background on this proposal and invite their comments during the months ahead.

The legislation is based on principles adopted by the National Governors' Association and unanimously endorsed by the Governors in August 1988. The primary goal is to make urgently needed reforms to the Nation's unemployment insurance and employment service programs.

Employment security programs are powerful tools for helping employers and workers adapt to a rapidly changing workplace. These programs serve as an integral part of the Nation's strategy for maintaining a skilled and productive work force.

Groups in which we have traditionally underinvested—minorities and women—are occupying an increasing share of the labor force, and, in fact, will be a majority of new entrants. We are experiencing a tighter labor market, and in many places, serious labor shortages. We must work to find quality jobs for our jobseekers and unemployed workers.

A strong employment security program will play a vital role in this effort. It is the only system that links all employment and training organizations, serves all populations, and promotes community economic development, while assisting individual workers.

This legislation is particularly important to me, as I am sure it will be to my 16 colleagues who are also former Governors. During my 8 years as Governor of Florida, I experienced firsthand the frustration of trying to run an employment security system with dwindling funds, while at the same time, knowing that employers in Florida were paying more than their fair share to ensure that we had adequate resources to run quality programs.

Firms in all of our States pay a special tax exclusively for the purpose of funding the operation of the unemployment insurance and employment service programs. As such, they expect States to efficiently pay unemployment benefits to laid-off workers, and to help facilitate a labor exchange. Yet, a large portion of the revenues accumulating from that tax remain in the U.S. Treasury and are not being used for the purpose for which they were collected.

Let me describe briefly the way this is affecting Florida. Since 1980, the number of businesses paying unemployment compensation taxes has increased by 48 percent. These firms are also, of course, eligible to receive services through the Job Service. This year, Florida will be providing unemployment compensation benefits to approximately one half million people, nearly 60 percent more than 10 years ago. All of these increases are inevitable for a State whose population has grown by 35 percent, according to preliminary census estimates.

Meanwhile, during the same 10 year period, funds to operate our employment security programs have not even kept pace with inflation, much less with the phenomenal growth in population. In 1987, Florida employers contributed nearly $160 million to finance administritive costs and the State received back only $65 million for this purpose; in 1988, they paid $169 million in unemployment taxes, but the State received back only $70 million.

Clearly no State can expect there to be a 100 percent correlation between what its employers pay and what it receives back in its allocation; such would undermine the insurance aspect of our system.

But the enormous discrepancy in Florida, and in most other States is unfair to both workers and employers, particularly in light of the surpluses in the dedicated trust fund.

The effect on other States is no less dramatic, and in fact, came to a head last year when unemployment rates increased beyond a level for which there was money for the States to effectively provide services to workers. Although there was an anticipated $1.76 billion surplus in the trust fund created exclusively to pay for the operation of employment security programs, the President did not request a supplemental appropriation to accommodate the shortfall of $90 million.

In the end, the Congress did enact a supplemental, as we have done repeatedly during the past decade, but these shortfalls are bound to persist as long as there is no effective link between unemployment levels and allocations to States. And relying on supplementals is not an effective or reliable way to ensure that the system can respond to fluctuations in unemployment levels.

In fact, we are, at this moment, experiencing the problem again for fiscal year 1991. When the President submitted this budget request in January, he estimated that the unemployment rate would be 5.3 percent; his budget request for employment security reflected that assumption. During his July midsession review, he revised the number up to 5.7 percent, and correspondingly, revised his budget request by nearly $91 million.

The recently enacted budget resolution is based on an even higher level of unemployment—6.1 percent—and the shortfall is estimated to be closer to $180 million for next year. Florida will be nearly $5 million short, and all of the States will suffer to some extent.

Without additional money to pay for processing higher levels of unemployment, offices across the country will shut down, workers will have to travel great distances to claim their unemployment benefits, and they will face significant delays.

Meanwhile, the Department of Labor predicts that the balance in the employment security administrative account alone, will be more than $3 billion at the end of fiscal year 1991. The Secretary anticipates a total of nearly $17 billion in the three Federal employment security accounts.

Essentially, what my bill does is to:

Guarantee that States will have adequate funds to provide services to unemployed workers, and individuals seeking employment. I propose to reform the administrative financing of the employment security system by ensuring that 90 percent of the funds employers pay exclusively to financing the operation of these programs, is returned to the States, and that 10 percent is allocated to the Department of Labor. Further, the bill establishes that each State will receive the higher of 80 percent of the amount its employers paid in employment security taxes, or the amount the State received in moneys to operate the programs for ES and UI during a base year, indexed for inflationary increases.

Identify core services—assessment, placement assistance, referral, information services, and temporary income maintenance—that employment security programs across the country should provide to unemployed workers and other job seekers.

Enhance opportunities for States to more effectively coordinate their employment insurance programs.

With this legislation, public employment programs throughout this Nation will be able to count on consistent and equitable funding to provide services to unemployed workers and Governors will have the flexibility to design and implement economic security programs that address State-specific situations.

At the same time, the legislation preserves the Federal-State partnership that presently exists, and is the basis of our country's safety net for unemployed workers.

The legislation I plan to offer is one way to address the problems plaguing the employment security system. I know there are other proposals on the table which utilize different mechanisms to achieve the same goals. I hope, over the next couple of months, to work with business and organized labor representatives, with the Governors and other State leaders, and with my colleagues here in the Senate to determine the best way to achieve our shared goal of ensuring that the employment security system is better equipped to meet the labor market realities of the 1990's and beyond.

I encourage my colleagues to work with me on this vital reform effort.●

H.R. 3386, THE SANITARY TRANSPORTATION OF FOOD ACT

● Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, it is with the greatest pleasure that I lend my wholehearted support to the Sanitary Transportation of Food Act. This vital legislation, which passed the House on Monday, is based upon my bill, S. 1751, introduced last year. My legislation was created in response to news reports of disgusting practices detailing unsanitary food transportation.

I would like to thank my constituents Jim and Rikki Pomerenke of Yakima and Sharon Sonner and Dave Helzer, formerly of Yakima, and now residing in Hermiston, OR, for their courage in coming forward and sharing their experiences in the trucking industry with the public. I also would like to thank James Wallace of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer for his superb reporting of these practices. Together, they told a tale which was hard to believe. Dangerous liquid chemicals were being routinely hauled in the same tank truck which later carried edible liquids such as fruit juices. Often, the tank truck was not even cleaned between loads. Even more difficult to believe was that this practice was legal. My first reaction after reading this article was the same as every other person's I later talked with—there should be a law against such a dangerous, disgusting, and unhealthy practice. Fortunately, Mr. President, there now soon will be.

I also want to thank my good friend in the House, Congressman CLINGER who first introduced the House companion bill on this subject. Congressman CLINGER deserves our gratitude for moving this bill so quickly through the House and for focusing our attention on a closely related transportation practice addressed in this legislation. The bill not only pertains to the transportation of liquid foods in tank trucks but also to all foods that could potentially be at risk from food trucks which also haul garbage.

My thanks also are extended to Senator GORE who introduced a related bill in the Senate and to Senator EXON, the chairman of the Surface Transportation Subcommittee. Without the support and bipartisan cooperation from both of these gentleman, this legislation would not be ready for the President's approval. Mr. President, today marks an important chapter in our efforts to ensure that America's food supply is the safest in the world. I am delighted to have played a role in this regard.●

LINKING ISRAEL TO IRAQ IS WRONG

● Mr. BOND. Mr. President, for the past 2 months we have seen Saddam Hussein do his best to draw Israel into the gulf crisis—to link the invasion of Kuwait with the occupied territories, and to lay the blame for his heinous acts at the feet of the Israelis.

Though it is clear there is absolutely no factual base for the argument that Israel is somehow to blame for a disagreement between two Arab nations, there appear to be some willing to accept this view. As I have said many times—on this floor and elsewhere—we must not let Saddam achieve his goal. He must not be allowed to escape responsibility for his crimes. Unfortunately, much of the media and many political leaders have fallen into Saddam's trap and have made statements which appear to legitimize the linkage.

Yesterday I came across an article in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch which sheds some light on this issue and makes some points all of us should note. It was written by my good friend Stuart Raskas, a past president of the St. Louis chapter of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith and a current commissioner of the national organization. Stuart has devoted a substantial amount of time over the years to studying Middle East issues and he brings an experienced viewpoint to the issue. I hope all of my colleagues will read this article.

I ask that immediately following my remarks, the article "Linking Israel to Iraq Is Wrong," be introduced in the RECORD.

The article follows:

LINKING ISRAEL TO IRAQ IS WRONG

(By Stuart Raskas)

An incredible miscalculation of logic and ignoring of history appears to be taking place in the Middle East. The administration, the British foreign secretary and President Francois Mitterrand of France seem to be drawn to the insulting demands of Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein that any consideration of his withdrawing from Kuwait be linked to Israel and the Palestinians.

Who are we dealing with and how stupid can we get? There appears to be total ignorance of the first part and no limit to the second.

Who are our friends? Is it the regime of Saddam Hussein, who has gassed hundreds of his own citizens to death, butchered his own relatives whom he believed opposed him and whose troops tossed newborn babies in Kuwait on hospital floors to die so their incubators could be shipped to Iraq?

Maybe it is President Hafeza Assad of Syria, who has trained and harbored terrorists, including those responsible for Pan Am 103, and who some eight years ago liquidated more than 15,000 fellow Syrians in the town of Hama who were protesting his policies.

Maybe it is King Hussein, ruler of the fictional area called Jordan created in 1922 by the British Empire as a reward to Hussein's grandfather Abdullah for the Hashemite's help during World War I. This is the same Hussein who in 1970 murdered thousands upon thousands of Palestinians who were living in Jordan and rose against him. We should be aware that more Palestinians are living in Jordan today than any other group.

Maybe our friend is King Fahd of Saudi Arabia, that outstanding liberal head of a large ruling family, which does not allow the official practice of any religion but Islam in its country and holds public beheadings weekly for serious crimes but only limb removal for less serious crimes such as petty theft.

This is the group with whom we are dealing, with whom we are attempting to make peace in our time even if that time may only be 10 minutes. We have Neville Chamberlain to thank for the lesson and ourselves to blame for not learning it.

When the world is starving for leadership, our leaders are following paths that will lead to reward for aggression and feeding the insatiable appetite of diabolical tyrants who would blow away their own brothers with any weapon or chemical or germ at their disposal. This is not cheap verbiage or hypothication—they have already done it and have threatened more. What do we need to have happen to believe—more bombs on commercial airplanes or a missile attack with biological warheads?

To begin speaking of linkage between Iraq's massacre of Kuwait and the Israeli-Palestinian conflict is the start of the most blatant act of scapegoating in modern history. Perhaps when Saddam invaded Kuwait he really did it to rescue the Palestinians in the Gaza Strip. He is such a humanitarian that hundreds of thousands of refugees have fled to Jordan from Kuwait and Iraq, including many fellow Moslems. Those don't include the thousands left behind.

The real reason we have more than 200,000 of our armed forces in Iraq seems to have fallen between the cracks. It is because we need to protect the oil fields of Saudi Arabia and the emirates from being blown up or taken over by Saddam. True, it is in the national interest and the security of the West to protect the flow of oil, but it is also in the interest of the oil companies, which have for decades determined what is in our national interest.

In the middle '80s we were warned of an energy crisis in 1990 or 1991. These forecasters did not specify what would precipitate the crisis—after all, Saddam was still involved in his war with Iran and watching hundreds of thousands of his people being killed in battle, many under the age of 13.

What we should have been doing as a nation since the first crisis in 1973–74 was to have lessened our dependence on oil. This may not have been in the interests of the oil companies, but it certainly would have been in the national interest.

There are meaningful alternatives to our reliance on oil, and we need to be developing these alternatives without dealy. We have waited in the past because of the cost compared to the price of oil. How much more would that cost be than the more than $2 billion a month it is costing to have our troops in the Arabian desert?

Japan and our European allies, who depend on OPEC oil far more than we, should also be willing to participate in a noble attempt to release us from our bondage.

True leadership is rare and takes courage. We need to be strong now to prevent sapping our strength later. Let's hope our leaders have the ability to lead citizens who are fully informed and who will then have the will to bite the bullet temporarily to avoid taking the bullet later.●

STUDENT AMBASSADOR

She was there for 3 weeks, and while the observations are not the same as we might get from Henry Kissinger visiting the Soviet Union, they are insights into the daily life of people there.

These kinds of insights are important to understanding people.

I ask to place Hope Rentschler's comments from her journal of the trip to the Soviet Union into the RECORD at this point.

The journal follows:

EXCERPTS FROM A RUSSIAN JOURNAL

(By Hope S. Rentschler)

WEDNESDAY, JULY 18, 1990

Well, here I go! I'm on the plane to Washington, D.C. right now. It was sad leaving Mom and Dad—Mom was a bit teary, as was I. I can't believe I'm finally going after all this preparation. Despite my excitement, I'm kind of looking forward to having gone, and being back from my adventure. There's no doubt about going—it will be a spectacular experience. I am hoping to keep my mind open, and I'm going to really try to pick up as much and as many subtleties as possible about the culture and way of life in Russia. As I've said about a million times in the past few weeks, "It will be especially interesting with all that's going on right now in Russia." I'm so tired of talking, planning, anticipating—I just want to go there!

I'm excited to see Washington. I don't really remember it from my 8th grade trip. Now it's 11:16 p.m., and I'm sitting in my room at George Washington University. I went with Lynette, Julie, and Alissa to the Washington Monument, Vietnam Memorial, etc., and got an MIA bracelet for Lt. (JG) Robert A. Clark. I can't take it off until he is found.

THURSDAY, JULY 19

Up early, listened to two speakers who briefed us on what we could expect in Russia. Went to Capitol Hill to meet and have pictures taken with Congressmen Porter and Crane. We saw just about everything, and then toured the city by bus. It is beautiful. Seeing Congress in session and all the political figures today makes me want to go into politics. Or maybe journalism or communications. My future is all so confusing at this point. I'm excited to get to the USSR. I want to get on with this trip. The people in our group are definitely diverse and interesting. They all seem nice.

FRIDAY-SATURDAY, JULY 20–21—9:30 A.M.

I'm sitting on the floor with about 30 others and many bags in the Frankfurt Airport. I'm so tired and wiped out from lack of sleep. I feel weird being a foreigner here. The Germans can tell instantly if you're American. I think Europeans are fascinating. More subtle and more natural beauty than many Americans. Not as much fakeness with makeup, etc.

We're flying Aeroflot from here to Moscow. Isn't Aeroflot the one that's always hijacked? The flight takes three hours, and they don't serve food and drinks. I'm going to try to sleep the whole time.

We're in Moscow. Flight OK. Got to our hotel by bus. Now I'm in my room with Desiree, my roommate for now. I feel so out of touch. The room is cold and bare, and we share a bathroom with three other girls.

When we arrived, I carried my bag in, set it down, and slumped into a chair. This Russian man came up and yelled at me in Russian, literally pushed me out of my seat, and motioned for me to take my bag somewhere else. It was a bit scary.

The men I've seen so far are very cheesy and make faces and stare at us a lot. Even the guy who checked my passport winked at me. I don't like it.

We ate dinner in the hotel restaurant. There was a stack of hard bread in the center, a pitcher of water, a pot of tea, and these little round fruits that taste like sour plums. For our meal, we had cucumbers, onions, and tomatoes drowning in salad dressing, then white rice, and some sort of chicken-type meat, which I didn't eat.

I just washed some of my clothes in the sink, and they aren't much cleaner, but c'set la vie. The shower has no curtain, which makes for a very wet floor. Life goes on. I'm going to get everything I can out of these next 2½ weeks. We've been travelling for the last 48 hours, and bed feels so good.

SUNDAY, JULY 22

I discovered today my name in Russia is Nadirshta (Nadia for short). That's phonetic spelling. Natasha, who is 23 and attends Moscow State University, was one of our guides on a tour of Moscow. We talked a lot and got along very well. She told me so many fascinating things about Russia and the sights we were seeing. Hopefully, I'll see her again when we return to Moscow for several days at the end of our trip.

We saw such points of interest as the Kremlin, Red Square, and Lenin's tomb.

Now it is 1:05 a.m., and we are on a train to Leningrad. I'm in a compartment with Val, Matt, and Paul.

The Moscow train station smells really bad. I heard there are mites and such creatures skiddling around in the sheets of this bed. Help! Right now I'm having a sinking spell. I miss home lots. Everything here is so different. There's no decoration—everything is bare and plain. It's like one big prison. Well, if anyone ever questions my stamina. . . .

MONDAY, JULY 23

Last night was hell. I didn't sleep much. People drunk and screaming all night. We went first today to the Memorial Cemetery of Leningrad. We participated in a big ceremony honoring all the soldiers who died in World War II, which the Russians call the "patriotic war." There was an eternal flame with flowers around it to honor the dead. The graves were labelled only by year of death (no names), and they were great mounds of grass. I guess they dug huge holes and just dumped in body after body and covered them up. That's so sad. After 600,000 bodies were buried, they ran out of room. In total, about a million died. The Russians give such respect to these types of monuments. Natasha made a good point yesterday. She said she didn't like the way they only honored and focused on dead people and heroes. We do that in America, too. That's kind of sad.

We also went to the Peter & Paul Fortress, but I was so tired. I didn't get much out of it. It had very dark, scary cells to hold criminals. I would hate to be arrested and taken there.

Tonight we went to the ballet, Swan Lake. I liked it once I got into it. Alissa and I are sharing a room, nicer than in Moscow. It's near midnight and still light outside. I wrote 10 postcards. They'll probably arrive long after I'm home, but I feel relieved to get them done.

TUESDAY, JULY 24

Fun day. Went to Petrodvorets, summer home of Peter the Great. Beautiful gardens and fountains. After lunch, we met with the main Council running the City of Leningrad and got to ask questions. They support Boris Yeltsin, as do many Russians. They want to have U.S. friends and pen pals and were very enthusiastic about the USA. Tonight we had free time. We played cards, ate dinner, snacked in the room, and walked around the city. I keep forgetting I'm here. It just doesn't feel like I'm that far away.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 25

We went out with Scott and Seth tonight, two boys I know from school. It was amazing. We met them today at the Hermitage. It was so random! I was walking with our group, and all of a sudden I saw Seth. He screamed out "Hope!" Small world. It was great fun for me. Seth and Scott came back to the hotel, and Alissa and I went out to dinner with them. Mrs. (Barbara J.) Nohr (of Vernon Hills, one of the three teacher/leaders) let us go out. Surprised me, but they said we had been good kids up to now, and they trust us. Scott and Seth are on their own and having such a good time. I miss independence!

THURSDAY, JULY 26

We're sitting here, outside the Leningrad Youth Palace (our hotel), because last night someone broke into one of our caravan buses and stole the mirrors and stuff. The police are here making a report and we have to wait to depart for Novgorod. An hour and a half so far. The bus ride is four to six hours, but we have no plans when we get there, so we're not missing anything. I like our leaders more and more. They trust Alissa and me and think we're responsible.

Russia is a different world—it's so different here. We took a cab to the restaurant last night and the driver was going 120 kph (75 mph) in traffic on the city streets. It was a frightening experience. Back at the hotel. Long bus ride to Novgorod. We waited and waited. If I've learned anything at all so far, it has to be patience! Also, group stuff. Being with a group 24 hours a day is very trying, but I'm getting used to it.

Arrived at the hotel around 9:50 p.m. My room is OK. A TV that doesn't work and three beds, but only one roommate, Julie. That's cool.

Right now, I feel I'll be in Russia for the rest of my life. Thank God I won't! That would be horrible. Leaving America to spend your life in Russia. Yikes! I can't wait to go home, but I'm really glad I came. This is an experience I'll never forget. I'm so lucky I live where I do. No matter how things are at home, we'll never live like the people here do. I am so thankful for that. I never thought of it that way, but now I see everything differently. There is so much poverty here—that's all I've seen.

Everyone in cities lives in huge buildings that are so dirty, rundown, and awful. America seems like a royal land compared to this. It makes me mad, though, that we live like we do when there are people living in conditions like these. I wish we could do something about it. Maybe I can . . . we'll see.

All I eat is bread. Seriously, that's it. Actually, at dinner and sometimes lunch there is rice or potatoes, and I like both. Usually some mystery meat, too. I haven't eaten anything colored in so long, except what people brought from home. Time to read.

SATURDAY, JULY 28

I noticed today that women do a large part of the work here. I never really see men doing much of anything, except selling and trading at the Black Market. Women seem to have huge roles in the work that gets done here.

Tonight, some of us went to the "beach" and built a bonfire. It's not really a beach, but there is sand and a river, and it's as close as we're going to get. It was fun. Real togetherness.

SATURDAY, JULY 28

No water this morning, which means no shower. We left for the little town of Valday and arrived in the pouring rain. Alissa and I went into a grocery store. It was dirty, it smelled, there was barely any food, and there were people everywhere. We then went into a store that reeked of fish—yuck. To top it off, we saw a large dead rat at the side of the main street.

At a museum we visited, the guide talked about Russian women and how they were seen in the old days. Beauty focused on their eyes, not their measurements or bodies, as well as what they could do, like how well they could embroider things.

As we waited on our bus, we gave little things to Russian kids. They were like fish at feeding time. They'd swarm at the steps of the bus with their hands up, trying to grab anything we offered—pens, gum, postcards, pins, etc. It was so pitiful. They obviously had almost nothing.

On the "beach" again, we met a little Russian girl named Dasa playing with other Russian kids. She had the bluest eyes and dirtiest little face and clothes. We gave her bread and gum, and I got pictures of her.

As Bill said tonight, "Now I know why people pray and thank God for their food." Well said, eh? I can't wait to see Mom and Dad and my friends. I keep having daydreams about walking out of the gate door at O'Hare and seeing them and giving them big, huge hugs.

SUNDAY, JULY 29

We toured the Kremlin today, which was impressive, but our guide didn't speak much English, so we learned very little.

Five of us gathered in our room, and we talked about how far behind this country is. Even if people have enough money, there's nothing to buy. We have the feeling the government just doesn't care about its people.

MONDAY, JULY 30

After a long bus ride, we stopped in this small town to pick up some Russian teenagers who will be our hosts. This is where we'll be staying with Russian families. Alissa and I talked and exchanged gifts with one Russian girl about our age who boarded the bus and whose name sounded like Lerum. Soon she asked if we wanted to stay at her home. We were very pleased to accept her invitation.

We drove first to meet the Mayor of the little town, which was called Kalinin until recently, but is now Tver. He welcomed us warmly and spoke of the growing friendship between our two countries and the Russian and American people.

We left there on buses with our hosts for their homes. Lerum is pretty and doesn't wear too much makeup like most Russian women. Bill, Rick, Cricket, and Carrie are all staying in the building next to ours. Tonight, in Lerum's home, we talked, looked at family pictures, and exchanged little gifts. I gave her a little brush, nail polish, and some U.S. postcards.

Dinner was good, the best since I've been in Russia. The bread was soft and fresh. We had mashed potatoes, cucumbers, and tomatoes. For dessert, ice cream, and it was yummy, a real treat!

Then we went on a long walk all around the city and along the banks of the Volga River. The city is beautiful. When we returned, Lerum's mother had prepared tea and cookies. It was so sweet of her. After that, we played cards—21, which was fun.

Mothers do everything here. I kept offering to help, but they refused and acted as if I was crazy. Bill told me he started clearing dishes at his home, and the father said that was what women are for. Prehistoric!

Our "home" is in an apartment building with five floors, but we're on the first, thank God, because my bag is so heavy. There is a living room with TV, kitchen, our bedroom, and I think one other bedroom. The toilet is in a different little room than the sink and tub.

Many kids live with their grandparents. Lerum does, but her mother came to help with us and everything. This is her grandmother's apartment. Her parents live in another village, and her father is in the military. Weird, eh?

She has a boy friend who is 17 (she is 16) and at military school in Leningrad. He comes home only one month a year. How sad. She says they write lots of letters. They don't have a car or phone, and ride public transportation. She has taken 6 years of English, and she let me read her English book, which is similar to my French book.

In the book is a passage about how great Communism is. It says that because of Amendment 40 to the Russian Constitution (the one that guarantees people jobs for life), USSR doesn't have an unemployment problem like capitalist countries. Talk about propaganda!

I have a choice of staying here two or four nights. I want to stay four. After all, this is my first and last time staying in a Russian home. I'll never have this experience again—ever! So I'd better go for it!

TUESDAY, JULY 31

I learned my host's name is Lera, from Valeriya, last name Zakolyukina. The Russian accent makes it sound like Lerum. We are talking more, and she seems to be opening up a bit.

There was a dance tonight Soviet-American young people, which was all right. I sat outside and talked away the evening. When we arrived home. Lera's mother gave us hot milk, this cottage cheese-type stuff with jam, and a sort of apple pastry. All pretty good. Alissa developed an allergy to Lera's cat and went back to the hotel.

I get so pampered here it's great. Lera's mom did my laundry today. She is so sweet. Tonight, she brought in our Christmas card, which I gave her, and asked who everyone was, so I explained my very large and confusing family to Lera, who translated for her mother.

Women do everything in this country. I saw a woman paving a street today. No need for equal rights fighting here. These women have more equality than I'd want. Actually, that's not true. They are expected to do so much, but are treated with no respect. They are just "women," and therefore incompetent, and should be cleaning, etc. Yuck!

Everyone loves Boris Yeltsin. He's the new guy in the political hierarchy, and he's stepped down from the Communist Party. Smart guy!

This is too weird. I'm having such fun. My attitude is surprisingly positive. I'm not usually this happy and positive all the time. Maybe it's because I'll be home in a week.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 1

Our Illinois group went for plane rides over the city in groups of 12 in an Aeroflot mini-plane. It was awful. I nearly threw up. Inside the plane, it was about 150 degrees F. and smelled terrible. We sat on wooden benches facing each other, and most of the seat belts didn't work. We took off and landed on a runway in a grassy field. I was so scared and felt sick for a few hours afterwards.

Lunch with our Russian friends at the hotel. We stopped at a Berioska shop and I bought a beautiful lacquer address book, which I'll give to someone. Then I bought five men's caps for people at home. Next we all went on a party boat down the Volga River—music, dancing, many people, and a bar with cookies to buy. Lots of fun.

In the evening, we went to a folk dance performance, where the dancers, all dressed in costumes, danced for us and pulled us into the center to join them.

Went home with Lera and finally had dinner around 10. Lera asked me all about the house where we live, our cars, and such things. She is so sweet and kind. So is her mother. They treat me like a queen. It is nice to feel so special and wanted.

I'm psyched that I've survived so far and this has been such a positive experience.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 2

Museum day. We toured ethnic and samovar museums. Samovars are big, beautiful Russian tea urns, and we drank tea the Russian way. Pour tea from the cup into the saucer, dip a sugar cube in it, and slurp from there.

Later, we went far into the lovely countryside for a picnic. Thick woods overlooking a river and rolling prairie. Wonderful time: bonfire, frisbee, walking in the woods, snacking, mingling, and some even swam.

Home for dinner at Lera's. Lord, how I've eaten since we embarked on our homestay. After dinner, I gave Lera and her mother the presents I'd brought from home, including a handsome book of Chicago photos. I love giving people presents. It makes me so happy, even more than receiving them myself. We had a good talk about our schools. USSR has 11 grades and then college for 5 years. So it equals out, but is proportioned differently than in U.S. Tonight I pressed in my journal a rose from Alissa and a daisy from Bill. Nice of them.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 3

Today I gave a speech to the Mayor of Tver, thanking him in behalf of our group for the warm hospitality. I was very nervous, but got through it. It was an honor to be chosen to speak. We stood beneath a huge portrait of Lenin, still very much a hero here.

It was sad to say good-bye to our Russian friends. Lera's mom helped me carry my bag to the hotel. Lera said her mom liked me a lot, which made me feel good.

It is 11:15 p.m., and now I'm sitting in my room in Moscow with Alissa.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 4

This day in Moscow has been a blur. A convent this morning, and then shopping on Arbat Street. Bought lacquer things, earrings, a T-shirt. The street was lined with very European buildings. Many people singing and playing music on the street. We watched some Americans musicians for 45 minutes. The lead singer had a hippie look, with long. curly, black hair; he was cool and from San Francisco. We went to the Moscow Circus, which was O.K., but I dislike trained wild animals. It seems cruel to me.

Just learned that Iraq invaded Kuwait last Thursday. Kuwait asked the U.S. for help, and we don't know the response yet. Who knows what Bush will do? Scary.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 5

Went to a youth camp today. Played volleyball, soccer, and sang with Russian kids.

This camp is for kids 6-15 picked by local party leaders, and teaches Communism and "the Russian way" to the very young. It bothers me that this country starts brain washing its kids at such an early age.

Tomorrow's our last day. I'll miss everyone. After all, we've spent every waking minute together for the last three weeks. Our leaders—Mr. Malmquist, Mrs. Christiansen, and Mrs. Nohr—have really gotten cool in the past few days. They've loosened up and finally figured out that everything runs a lot smoother when we're happy campers.

Just learned from a man in the lobby that the U.S. and Russia sent troops into Kuwait. We're so out-of-touch here. I'm glad to be leaving, but I'm so very glad I came. I think I'll realize how much I learned after a few weeks at home and back in USA.

MONDAY, AUGUST 6

The last day was fun. Went to Red Square, and it was magnificent all lighted up, with the moon almost full.

This morning, we went to the famous Moscow McDonald's. We got in line at 9:20, it opened at 10, we were seated and eating by 10:30. Cool! My whole meal (fries, an apple pie, milkshake), plus three double cheeseburgers for Jon Alpert, was only 14 rubles (about $2.50). When we came out, the line stretched all the way around the block.

We have to be down in the lobby with our bags at 5:30 a.m. We'll have 24 hours of straight travel before arriving at O'Hare. Help! Home. Yea, whoopee!!

TUESDAY, AUGUST 7

Finally on our Pan Am flight to New York after a hellish day. The bus didn't show up at our Moscow hotel, we've had customs delays, temperature was subzero on the "wonderful" Aeroflot flight, etc. Then a long delay in Frankfurt, and we'll miss our connection in New York. Bummer!

Overall, this has been an incredible experience, and I've learned so much. I've learned a lot about myself and what I'm capable of. I learned that a good attitude can really help. I learned that it pays to be nice to as many people as you can stand—what goes around comes around, as they say. I've learned a lot about other countries and people, and that what I think is difficult or upsetting or unfair is nothing compared to what many people deal with on a daily basis.

I am really lucky to have what I have, to be free and not to be severely restricted in many ways. Russia is an interesting place to visit, but I don't think I'm cut out to live there. I could probably handle it, but I wouldn't enjoy it. I am thankful I have love, shelter and happiness with my family, wherever we live or whatever I have.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 8

I am home. We all cheered and clapped when we landed. When I got off the plane, I cried as I hugged Mom and Dad. Then Scott came up. I was so happy.

I stayed positive, and it obviously affected everyone else. Each note my friends wrote in this journal was so nice—everyone commented on my attitude. That makes me feel proud and grateful that I had that outlook. I survived, as I knew I would, and I feel much better about my own character as a result of my attitude toward the trip. I hope to keep my positive feelings and attitude forever. I will remember Russia and the people I spent 21 days with for the rest of my life.

I am lucky to live in America, but I am also glad I am not so sheltered that my life here is the only one I know. It's nice that Russia 1990 is a past experience and not a present one. I like talking about it and reflecting on it now. I can be much more objective now that I am not entangled in the whole drama.

All I have to say is thank God for my life, family, friends, love, and happiness. Amen.●

THE CONGRESSIONAL MEDAL OF HONOR

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I was extremely honored to have the privilege of participating in a recent program to honor those who hold the Medal of Honor, and to preview the first episode of a new television series entitled "The Medal of Honor."

On September 13, at the Army and Navy Club here in Washington, this new television series—a joint venture by U.S. News & World Report and the Buick Motor Division of General Motors—was introduced in a moving ceremony. I want to share with my colleagues a sense of the deep feelings which, I believe, were felt by all of us who were present.

The Medal of Honor recipients who were there included Capt. Maurice Britt, U.S. Army, retired; Mr. Walter Ehlers; and Lt. Col. Edward Michael, U.S. Air Force, retired; all of whom were featured in the first episode of the series. Other Medal of Honor recipients present were Mr. Paul W. Bucha; Rear Adm. Eugene B. Fluckey, U.S. Navy, retired; Col. Wesley L. Fox, U.S. Marine Corps; Capt. Thomas G. Kelley, U.S. Navy, retired; Col. Walter J. Marm, Jr., U.S. Army; Col. Charles P. Murray, Jr., U.S. Army, retired; Mr. Nicholas Oresko; Mr. Ronald Ray; Mr. Brian Thacker; and BMC J. Elliott Williams, U.S. Navy, retired.

It was a memorable experience to be in the presence of these extraordinary, humble Americans, whose gallantry in action helped assure our Nation's freedom.

I will take a few moments, Mr. President, to identify some of those responsible for this series and to provide some of the highlights from the ceremony.

Mr. Calvin H. Cobb, Jr., national president of the Navy League, presided over the ceremonies and reviewed the origin and history of the Medal of Honor. I quote from his remarks:

The Medal of Honor was born during the early days of the Civil War and came to represent the highest honor our Nation bestows on its soldiers. The Medal is a tribute to perhaps the only thing truly noble in war: the deliberate decision of one man to sacrifice himself so that others may live.

When it was my turn to speak, I quoted from Gen. Douglas MacArthur's remarks as he pinned the Medal of Honor on Maj. Richard Bong in December 1944:

Of all military attributes, that one which arouses the greatest admiration is courage. It is the basis of all successful military ventures. Our forces possess it to a high degree, and various awards are provided to show the public appreciation. The Congress of the United States has reserved to itself the honor of decorating those amongst all who stand out as the bravest of the brave.

Mr. Fred Drasner, chief executive officer of U.S. News & World Report, described the purpose of the series:

In one lifetime, we have gone from an age in which heroes were almost commonplace, to the day of the Anti-Hero, and now to a time of no hero. . . . we sincerely hope 'Medal of Honor' will serve as an inspiring example of what America can be at its best.

On behalf of the Buick Motor Division of General Motors, Mr. Jack W. Qualman, Jr., indicated how proud Buick was to sponsor the series and recognized the recipients of the Medal of Honor as follows:

Most especially, we are proud to recognize our honored guests. . . . The Medal of Honor recipients themselves, and their uncommon courage and extraordinary deeds. We also commend the 3,400 recipients that aren't with us tonight but who are, most assuredly, in our thoughts. To each, we offer our profound appreciation.

BMC J. Elliott Williams, USN (Ret), a Medal of Honor recipient himself and the president of the Congressional Medal of Honor Society, was cited for his invaluable assistance and support of the project.

Co-writer and director of the series, Mr. Patrick Duncan, described the extensive research that went into development of the series and noted how impressed he was by the character of the Medal of Honor winners.

I would like to recognize also Mr. Mortimer Zuckerman, chairman and editor-in-chief of U.S. News & World Report, and Mr. Michael Nolin, the producer of the series, whose contributions and support were essential to this achievement.

Lastly, I was especially touched by the remarks of Mr. Cliff Robertson, who will host the series on television. I will close with the reading of Mr. Robertson's remarks.

MEDAL OF HONOR

In the best of worlds—there would be no need for medals of war.

For there would be no wars.

There would be no need for wars, for civilization would be humane—charitable—and peaceful.

There might be, however, in this best of worlds a medal of the very highest order—that recognized man's capacity to love his fellow man—to sacrifice—to stand tallest in face of life's worst adversities.

A medal that would reflect his unstinting courage and character.

In that best of worlds—that warless world—things would be so different.

But not that medal—that highest medal.

For that medal would represent the same qualities of valor—of courage—and love for his fellow man—as this world's Congressional Medal of Honor.

Thank you, Mr. President.

INTERPARLIAMENTARY CONFERENCE ON THE GLOBAL ENVIRONMENT

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask unanimous consent that the final report of the Interparliamentary Conference on the Global Environment, as required by Senate Resolution 171, be printed as a Senate document and that 1,500 copies be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CORRECTION OF THE PERMANENT RECORD

Mr. MITHCELL. Mr. President I ask unanimous consent that the permanent RECORD be corrected to reflect that on Senate amendment 3020, Senator KOHL's name should appear immediately after the name of Senator LEVIN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

HUMAN SERVICES REAUTHORIZATION ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. MITHCELL. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on H.R. 4151 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 4151) to authorize appropriations for fiscal years 1991 through 1994 to carry out the Head Start Act, the Follow Through Act, and the Community Services Block Grant Act, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses this report, signed by a majority of the conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

(The conference report is printed in the House proceedings of the RECORD of October 5, 1990.)

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I rise in support of the conference report on H.R. 4151, the Augustus F. Hawkins Human Services Reauthorization Act of 1990, but I must say I am very disappointed that the Senate conferees chose to recede to the House on what I believe to be a very critical program for some of our Nation's most vulnerable children.

The Health and Social Services for Students Act of 1990 would have provided much needed resources to local education agencies to fund programs which provide supportive health, mental health, and social services on the school site.

In this age of broken families, of alcohol abuse, drug abuse, and child abuse in the home, of neglect and worse by parents who are poor role models, we must provide the support and motivation our children so desperately need to become confident, caring adults possessed of both job and social skills.

While I believe our families must retain the primary responsibility for childrearing, in the absence of a family structure, this support will need to come from sources outside the home.

Too many of our children are falling through the cracks.

Each day in America, over 1,800 children are abused, 1,300 students drop out of high school, and 6 teenagers commit suicide. Each year in America, 1,300,000 children run away from home, and 3,200 of our children die at gunpoint.

That's not fair to our kids nor to society. We cannot afford to waste their talent and energy. If we do not provide them the proper tools to become productive adults, we face the high risk that their energy will be misdirected into lives of association with crime and drug gangs, or worse, if we fail to give them the necessary support, they may never reach their 18th birthday.

Though our Nation's schools are increasingly cast involuntarily into the role of being in loco parentis, this unwanted role is of extreme importance in getting vulnerable children the help they so critically need. Over half of a child's waking hours are spent at school.

In essence, the schools can serve as the focal point to provide the kind of assistance our children require to provide America with the kind of leadership she will need to solve the many challenges which the 21st century will present.

To assist school districts in creating the optimum child development environment, I worked with the Senator from Massachusetts, Senator KENNEDY, to refine an early proposal I had offered. The net result was the Health and Social Services for Students Act of 1990—a modest $20 million grant program to establish health and social service delivery hubs at school sites nationwide.

During Senate consideration of the Head Start reauthorization legislation, the Senate unanimously passed the Health and Social Services for Students Act as an amendment thereto.

Under the guide of false assertions that my amendment somehow authorized funding of abortions on school sites—there is not one dime of service funding in the act, and perhaps election year politics, it is no secret that I am a candidate for Governor in California—the conference committee chose not to approve the Wilson-Kennedy amendment as part of the conference report before us.

Mr. President, this may sound like sour grapes. It is not. It simply is an expression of increasing frustration with battles over committee turf and politically partisan actions.

Whether the House Democratic leadership's co-option of legislation I authored to provide funding to the successful DARE Antidrug Use Education Program or the Senate Labor and Human Resource Committee's need to claim for their own the issue to expand treatment to substance abusing pregnant women, one thing is clear. Odd forces are at work in Congress.

Mr. President, having said that let me just conclude by expressing my hope that the 102d Congress will look beyond partisanship and committee jurisdiction and pass much needed legislation to help our Nation's schools cope with the many problems children now bring to the classroom.

In the end, it is not the legislation's sponsor who wins, but rather it is America that wins. We will have provided the necessary support to our schools to produce confident, caring adults with much improved skills and self-esteem.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. SIMPSON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

CORRECTING ENROLLMENT OF H.R. 4151

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of House Concurrent Resolution 381, a concurrent resolution making corrections in the conference report on H.R. 4151.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 381) to correct the enrollment of the bill (H.R. 4251).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

AMENDMENT NO. 3048

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator DODD, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Maine [Mr. MITCHELL] for Mr. DODD, proposes an amendment numbered 3048.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the resolution, add the following: After section 122 of the bill, add the following new section:

"SEC. 123. EXTENDED HEAD START SERVICES.

"(a) DEFINITIONS.—Section 637 of the Head Start Act (42 U.S.C. 9832) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(10) the term 'full calendar year means all days of the year other than Saturday, Sunday, and a legal public holiday.

"(11) the term full-working-day means not less than 10 hours per day."

"(b) EXTENDED HEAD START SERVICES.—Section 640 of the Head Start Act (42 U.S.C. 9835) is amended by adding at the end of the following:

"(h) Each Head Start program may provide full-working-day Head Start Services to any eligible child throughout the full calendar year."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3048) was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there are no further amendments, the question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

So the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 381), as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. SIMPSON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

INTERNATIONAL DATA IMPROVEMENT ACT

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 797, S. 2516, the International Data Improvement Act of 1990.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2516) to augment and improve the quality of international data compiled by the Bureau of Economic Analysis under the International Investment and Trade in Services Survey Act by allowing that agency to share statistical establishment list information compiled by the Bureau of the Census, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation with amendments; as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 3049

(Purpose: To make an amendment in the nature of a substitute)

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, on behalf of Senators HOLLINGS and EXON, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Maine [Mr. MITCHELL] (for Mr. HOLLINGS), (for himself and Mr. EXON] proposes an amendment numbered 3049.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Foreign Direct Investment and International Financial Data Improvements Act of 1990".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The United States Government collects substantial amounts of information from foreign owned or controlled business enterprises or affiliates operating in the United States.

(2) Additional analysis and presentation of this information is desirable to assist the public debate on the issue of foreign direct investments in the United States.

(3) Information collected from foreign owned or controlled firms by the Bureau of Economic Analysis has serious analytical limitations because it is largely collected on an "enterprise" basis that does not permit an adequate analysis by industry groupings.

(4) Statistical and analytic comparisons of the performance of foreign owned or controlled businesses operating within the United States with other business enterprises operating within the same industry can be accomplished under sections 2(b) and 5(c) of the International Investment and Trade in Services Survey Act, and under Executive Order Numbered 11961, without the need to collect additional information, by sharing with other authorized Government agencies the employer identification numbers maintained by the Bureau of Economic Analysis.

(5) Public disclosures of confidential business information collected by the United States Government relating to international direct investment flows could cause serious damage to the accuracy of the statistical data base.

(6) The General Accounting Office may have limited access to Government data on foreign direct investment.

SEC. 3. REPORT BY SECRETARY OF COMMERCE.

(a) ANNUAL REPORT ON FOREIGN DIRECT INVESTMENT IN THE UNITED STATES.—Not later than 6 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, and not later than the end of each 1-year period occurring thereafter, the Secretary of Commerce shall submit to the Committee on Energy and Commerce, the Committee on Ways and Means, and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives, to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate, and to the Joint Economic Committee of the Congress a report on the role and significance of foreign direct investment in the United States. Such report shall address the history, scope, trends, market concentrations, and effects on the United States economy of such investment. In addition, the Secretary of Commerce shall, if requested by any such committee, appear before that committee to provide testimony with respect to any report under this subsection.

(b) SOURCES OF DATA.—In preparing each report under subsection (a), the Secretary of Commerce, or the Secretary's designees, shall consider information collected by—

(1) the Bureau of Economic Analysis under the International Investment and Trade in Services Survey Act (22 U.S.C. 3101 and following);

(2) the Bureau of the Census on industry, manufacturing, research and development, and trade, under title 13, United States Code;

(3) the Bureau of Labor Statistics pertaining to information collected under the International Investment and Trade in Services Survey Act, but only to the extent that such information is in a form that cannot be associated with, or otherwise identify, directly or indirectly, a person, including any enterprise or establishment;

(4) the Secretary of Commerce or the Secretary's designee pursuant to section 2 of Executive Order 11858 of May 7, 1975;

(5) the United States Department of Agriculture under the Agricultural Foreign Investment Disclosure Act of 1978 (7 U.S.C. 3501 and following);

(6) the Department of the Treasury under section 6039C of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (26 U.S.C. 6039C), but only to the extent that such information is in a form that cannot be associated with, or otherwise identify, directly or indirectly, a person, including any enterprise or establishment;

(7) the Department of Energy under section 657(8) of the Department of Energy Organization Act (42 U.S.C 7267(8)), but only to the extent that such information is in a form that cannot be associated with, or otherwise identify, directly or indirectly, a person, including any enterprise or establishment;

(8) other Federal agencies not referred to in paragraphs (1) through (7), but only to the extent that such information is in a form that cannot be associated with, or otherwise identify, directly or indirectly, a person, including any enterprise or establishment;

(9) foreign governments and agencies thereof; and

(10) private sector sources.

(c) ANALYSES.—(1) The analysis in each report prepared under subsection (a) shall, to the extent of available data, compare business enterprises controlled by foreign persons with other business enterprises in the United States with respect to employment, market share, value added productivity, research and development, exports, imports, profitability, taxes paid, and investment incentives and services provided by State and local governments (including quasi-governmental entities).

(2) Each such analysis shall be done by significant industry sectors and geographical regions, except that information shall not be presented in a way in which any person, including any business enterprise or establishment, can be identified. The restriction contained in the preceding sentence on presentation of information does not apply to information that is obtained from foreign governments or agencies thereof and that has been published pursuant to the lawful disclosure of the information. To the extent that data are available, each such analysis shall include an analysis, together with current levels and trends, of the number and market share of business enterprises at least 10 percent of the voting securities or other evidences of ownership of which are owned or controlled by a foreign person, and of the number and market share of the establishments of such business enterprises, that are engaged substantially in the production or coproduction of any critical technologies included in the most recent plan submitted to the Congress under section 2368 of title 10, United States Code, or included in the most recent report submitted to the President under section 603 of the National Science and Technology Policy, Organization, and Priorities Act of 1976.

The agency or agencies concerned shall promptly review the report for the purpose of assuring that the confidentiality of such information and identity is maintained, and for any other purpose, and shall provide the Comptroller General with appropriate comments or other suggestions within 10 working days after receiving the report.

SEC. 10. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this Act—

(1) the terms "foreign", "director investment", "international investment", "United States", "business enterprise", "foreign person", and "United States person" have the meanings given those terms in section 3 of the International Investment and Trade in Services Survey Act (22 U.S.C. 3102); and

(2) the term "foreign direct investment in the United States" means direct investment by foreign persons in any business enterprise that is a United States person.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, today the Senate is considering an amendment in the nature of a substitute to S. 2516, a bill reported by the Commerce Committee on August 30, 1990. I take this opportunity to review the committee's work as it relates to the Federal Government's collection of data on foreign direct investment.

The Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation has a long record of legislative activity and oversight in the area of foreign investment in the United States. Under the able leadership of Senator INOUYE, the committee passed several bills in the 1970's and 1980's on this topic. In 1974, the seminal legislation in this field was written by the Senate Commerce Committee, Public Law 93-479, which authorized the Secretary of Commerce to conduct surveys on foreign direct and portfolio investment in the United States. In 1976, the Commerce Committee again passed legislation, Public Law 94-472, the International Investment Survey Act [Survey Act], to supplement the authority already granted to the Secretary of Commerce to collect regular and periodic information on foreign direct and portfolio investment in the United States and on U.S. investment abroad.

Again in 1978, the Commerce Committee acted on Public Law 95-381, to increase the authorization of appropriations for the Survey Act. In 1979, the committee reported legislation with an authorization for the Survey Act for fiscal years 1980 and 1981. In 1981, the committee passed legislation reauthorizing the Survey Act and directing the Secretary of Commerce to do benchmark surveys on foreign direct investment in 1980, 1987 and every 5 years thereafter.

Since 1987, the Commerce Committee has been examining the U.S. Government's collection and analysis of information on foreign direct and portfolio investment under the International Investment and Trade in Services Survey Act. This examination began with the committee's deliberations on the omnibus trade bill in the 100th Congress.

The House Energy and Commerce Committee had passed, in 1987, an amendment offered by Congressman JOHN BRYANT, which required the filing of additional information of foreign investment with the Department of Commerce [DOC] and disclosure of investment information to the public. In July 1987, Senator HARKIN offered a similar amendment to the trade bill on the Senate floor. I opposed that amendment because the committee had not held hearings on the issue. The amendment was tabled, and the committee held hearings on the Bryant and Harkin amendments in March 1988.

Later, we faced the issue in a House-Senate conference on the trade bill. At that time, a compromise was suggested to the Byrant language—that compromise was suggested to the Bryant language—that compromise provided access by the General Accounting Office [GAO] to the information collected by DOC. I supported that compromise, but it failed because a majority of the conferees could not reach agreement. Ultimately, the Bryant amendment was dropped in conference. After the conference, the Bryant amendment was passed by the House as separate legislation. It came over to the Senate in the closing days of the 100th Congress and was referred to the Commerce Committee.

At the beginning of the 101st Congress, Congressman BRYANT and Senator HARKIN again introduced their legislative proposals with some changes, embodied in H.R. 5 and S. 289, respectively. The most significant changes related to the limits on disclosure of individual investor information. Instead of being publicly available, the information was limited to several specific groups of people.

Senator MURKOWSKI also introduced legislation in 1989 to permit DOC's Bureau of Economic Analysis [BEA], the office within DOC that does the surveys on foreign investment, to share information with the Committee on Foreign Investment in the United States [CFIUS] and to require BEA to collect and disseminate information on foreign governments' direct investments in the United States. The Commerce Committee held hearings on these bills in July 1989.

In April 1990, Senator EXON introduced legislation to require BEA to share data with the Census Bureau [Census]. This had been an idea strongly supported in testimony before the committee over the years. This data exchange would allow BEA to report data at a more detailed level and would allow BEA to check its enterprise, or companywide, data against Census' establishment, or plant level, data. A hearing was held on this legislation in July 1990, and the committee favorably reported the legislation with an amendment on July 31, 1990.

The bill reported by the committee this year included an amendment offered by Senators STEVENS and EXON, for Senator MURKOWSKI. This amendment requires BEA to do reports on investments in particular sectors upon the request of CFIUS. If CFIUS requests such a report during a review of a takeover under the Exon-Florio amendment, embodied in section 721 of the Defense Production Act, the report must be provided within 14 days. If the request is not made within that context, it must be provided within 60 days. This amendment reflected Senator MURKOWSKI's longstanding desire that CFIUS have the benefit of BEA's analysis, when needed, in an Exon-Florio review and investigation.

At the same time that the Senate Commerce Committee was working on S. 2516, the House Energy and Commerce Committee was considering several bills pending before that committee. One bill was introduced by Congressman LENT, the companion bill to S. 2516; another bill was introduced by Congressman SHARP and HAMILTON; and a third bill was introduced by Congressman BRYANT. Congressmen SHARP and LENT have been in negotiations for several weeks with the administration to come up with compromise language acceptable to the administration. H.R. 4520, the Sharp-Lent compromise, was ordered reported by the House Commerce Committee on October 2. After further talks with the administration, additional changes were made by the House Foreign Affairs Committee on October 11, and the resulting reported version is the one we are offering as a substitute today.

Let me outline for my colleagues the major provisions of this substitute.

First. The substitute requires the Secretary of Commerce to do an annual report to the Congress on the role and significance of foreign direct investment in the United States.

Second. The substitute authorizes GAO to review the information considered by the Secretary and submit a report to Congress—for the first 3 years—analyzing the Secretary's report, and making recommendations for improvement in the Federal Data Collection Program. GAO is also authorized to do other reports to the Congress from time to time. GAO is expressly prohibited from disclosing individual investment information or confidential business information to anyone. GAO must submit any reports to the statistical agencies involved for review of its compliance with this prohibition.

Third. The substitute directs an exchange of information between Census and BEA. This section tracks the central provisions of S. 2516.

Fourth. The substitute also authorizes DOC to collect and report information on foreign governments' investments in the United States. In addition, BEA is required to provide reports to CFIUS upon request. These two provisions reflect the language in Senator MURKOWSKI's amendment to S. 2516, adopted by the Senate Commerce Committee.

Fifth. The substitute authorizes the Bureau of Labor Statistics [BLS] at the Department of Labor to have access to certain information collected by BEA. This access will enable BLS, BEA, and Census to report more accurate, complete and timely information.

Sixth. Reports to BEA by foreign investors, if required to be furnished under oath, must be made by the officer who is directly responsible for the maintenance and compilation of the information, and that officer must certify that the report is accurate.

Seventh. Penalties for unlawful disclosure of information collected by BEA and Census are expanded.

These are all laudable changes; their primary purpose is to eliminate duplication and overlap from the Federal Government's collection of data on foreign direct investment. The House and Senate have held numerous hearings on this issue, and many of these changes have been suggested by witnesses and other experts over the years. It is my understanding that the administration has been closely consulted on this language and has no opposition to it.

Over the last 4 years, many Members of both bodies have worked diligently on legislation to improve the Government's Data Collection Program. Senator EXON has been a leader in this field, as the author of the Exon-Florio amendment to the 1988 Trade Act. He also has been instrumental in moving this bill to final passage in the Senate. Without his help, the provisions sought by the administration would not have been adopted. Congressman BRYANT started this review, and without his leadership and persistence, we would not be considering this legislation today. In addition, Senator MURKOWSKI and Congressman SHARP, LENT, and HAMILTON worked hard to come up with a good bill. This substitute amendment I offer today with my colleagues Senator EXON is a good package, and I urge its adoption.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, earlier this year I introduced the Foreign Investment Analysis Act with Congressman LENT on behalf of the Bush administration. The legislation is cosponsored by Senators HATCH, BOREN, and SPECTER. The Senate Commerce Committee held a hearing on this legislation on July 19 and reported the bill to the full Senate on a unanimous voice vote on July 31.

I was honored to be asked by the Bush administration to introduce the International Data Improvement Act. The President and his administration merit congratulations for their recognition of the need to improve foreign investment data collection. This change from policy of the previous administration represents a dramatic victory for those of us in the Congress who have worked for so long on the foreign investment issue.

The International Data Improvement Act of 1990 puts forward a consensus position on this important issue. During the consideration of the bill in the Senate Commerce Committee, a helpful amendment was offered by Senator STEVENS on behalf of Senator MURKOWSKI to address the issue of foreign government investment and the preparation of background reports by the Bureau of Economic Analysis for the Committee on Foreign Investment in the United States.

The "good government" approach of the International Data Improvement Act will facilitate a more complete collection and analysis of foreign investment data without imposing new burdens on business or compromising the confidentiality of statistical information.

Our legislation would allow the Bureau of Economic Analysis [BEA] and the Bureau of the Census, both agencies of the U.S. Department of Commerce, to cooperate and share data on foreign investment. The information would be used for statistical analysis and the confidentiality of data submitted to both agencies would be strictly protected.

The fruits of this legislation will provide a constructive addition to the debate on the role that foreign ownership should play in the U.S. economy.

As the author of the Exon-Florio law which gave the President the power to investigate, and if necessary, stop foreign purchases of American companies in the national security sector, I am most concerned about the impact of foreign ownership on the national security.

As a senior member of the Commerce Committee and the Budget Committee, I am also concerned about the risk of selling off America's future prosperity. In response to those who pose the question, "Who is us?" When looking at the foreign investment issue, I say, in a capitalistic system, it matters a great deal who owns businesses, assets, and technologies. American economic policy must be concerned about the creation of American wealth and international economic leadership as well as the creation of American jobs.

The International Data Improvement Act will give policymakers a better understanding of the level of foreign ownership, which will help the Congress and President better craft economic policy. Among the policies encouraged by the public's concern about the increasing level of foreign ownership would be a better use of the Exon-Florio law, stronger efforts to reduce the Federal budget deficit, a more aggressive U.S. technology policy and active efforts to increase U.S. competitiveness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3049) was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is Shall it pass?

So the bill (S. 2516) as amended, was passed.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. SIMPSON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

ENVIRONMENTAL CLEANUP ACTIVITIES

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar Order No. 960, S. 3187, regarding environmental cleanup activities.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3187) to address immediate problems affecting environmental cleanup activities.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 2, line 3, after "any surety who" insert the following: ", after October 16, 1990, and before January 1, 1993,".

On page 2, line 6, strike out the period after "bond" and insert the following: ", but only in connection with such activities or obligations.".

On page 3, line 18, strike out the quotation marks and the last period.

On page 3, after line 18, add the following: "(5) This subsection shall not apply to bonds executed before October 17, 1990, or after December 31, 1992.".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

So the amendment (No. 3050) was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. SIMPSON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed on.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I rise to express my strong support for passage of this legislation. I commend the distinguished Senator from North Dakota, the chairman of the Environment and Public Works Committee, for his prompt action on this measure. The chairman and I, along with other members of the Environment and Public Works Committee, have worked to develop this bill to address a crisis facing Superfund—the unavailability of surety bonds, which already has limited competition for Superfund cleanup contracts, and may threaten to slow the program significantly.

For Superfund's federally funded cleanup construction contracts exceeding $25,000, the Government requires cleanup contractors to obtain bonding from sureties. Sureties which provide such bonding, in effect, guarantee the proper performance of the contract, as well as the payment of subcontractors.

Environmentalists, insurance associations, contractors, and members of organized labor have been talking to the staff of the Environment and Public Works Committee for the past several months about the impacts of surety unavailability. Starting several months ago, staff were presented with legislative proposals to address the problem.

After several months of discussion of the issue, and review of such proposals, on September 19, 1990, the Superfund, Ocean and Water Protection Subcommittee held a hearing on the issue. The hearing showed that we have an immediate problem facing Superfund, a problem that should be addressed now. According to Superfund contractors, environmentalists, and the laborers who do the actual cleanup work, the lack of bonding is resulting in very few contractors being able to bid on certain contracts. And a recent EPA-commissioned report by the Corps of Engineers documents the concerns many have raised about the effect this can have on the Superfund Program.

EPA and others confirmed that we are already seeing less competition for Superfund cleanups. Less competition means higher prices for a program whose funds are already stretched too thin, and for a nation struggling to deal with a massive budget deficit.

Following up on the report EPA commissioned from the Corps of Engineers, and based on extensive staff discussions with all interested parties, the Environment and Public Works Committee on October 4, 1990, considered the bill before us today, which is designed to allow contractors and the Government to obtain the necessary bonding protections they need.

The bill—which is supported by the Sierra Club, the Environmental Defense Fund, the Laborers International Union of the AFL-CIO, the National Constructors Association, the Associated General Contractors of America, and the American Insurance Association—essentially clarifies two principles. First, where a surety steps into the shoes of a cleanup contractor, and takes over the cleanup work, the surety's liabilities and access to indemnification should be the same as the contractor's. Second, a surety's contractual liabilities should be only those obligations for which the surety contracts.

The consensus among the diverse groups supporting the bill suggests that these are two sensible, noncontroversial principles, consistent with the intent of currently applicable laws. These measures provide sureties with the certainty they need to re-enter the markup, and provide the Government with the protections it needs.

The bill does this, and it does it in a way that narrowly addresses the essential issues, without upsetting the scheme of current Federal or State law.

I understand that the Senator from Ohio will be offering amendments that will limit the application of this bill to the period starting October 17, 1990, and ending December 31, 1992. The amendments will still afford redress for the immediate problems I have discussed facing the Superfund Program over the next 2 years, but would envision that we review this approach during Superfund reauthorization.

Mr. President, the bill takes a sound approach necessary to respond to an immediate threat to the environmental cleanup effort, and I ask for its immediate adoption with the amendments of the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed as follows:

S. 3187

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. AMENDMENTS.

Section 119 of the Comprehensive, Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980, as amended, is amended—

(1) by deleting the period at the end of subparagraph (B) in subsection (e)(2) and inserting "; and";

(2) by adding at the end of subparagraph (B) of subsection (e)(2) the following new subparagraph:

"(C) any surety who, after October 16, 1990, and before January 1, 1993, provides a bid, performance or payment bond to a response action contractor, and begins activities to meet its obligations under such bond, but only in connection with such activities or obligations."; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(g) SURETY BONDS.—

"(1) If under the Miller Act, 40 U.S.C. sections 270a-270f, surety bonds are required for any direct Federal procurement of any response action contract, they shall be issued in accordance with 40 U.S.C. sections 270a-270d.

"(2) If under applicable Federal law surety bonds are required for any direct Federal procurement of any response action contract, no right of action shall accrue on the performance bond issued on such response action contract to or for the use of any person other than the obligee named in the bond.

"(3) If under applicable Federal law surety bonds are required for any direct Federal procurement of any response action, unless otherwise provided for by the procuring agency in the bond, in the event of a default, the surety's liability on a performance bond shall be only for the cost of completion of the contract work in accordance with the plans and specifications less the balance of funds remaining to be paid under the contract, up to the penal sum of the bond. The surety shall in no event be liable on bonds to indemnify or compensate the obligee for loss or liability arising from personal injury or property damage whether or not caused by a breach of the bonded contract.

"(4) Nothing in this subsection shall be construed as preempting, limiting, superseding, affecting, applying to, or modifying any State laws, regulations, requirements, rules, practices or procedures. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed as affecting, applying to, modifying, limiting, superseding, or preempting any rights, authorities, liabilities, demands, actions, causes of action, losses, judgments, claims, statutes of limitation, or obligations under Federal or State law, which do not arise on or under the bond.

"(5) This subsection shall not apply to bonds executed before October 17, 1990, or after December 31, 1992.".

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. SIMPSON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

SEC. 6 ACQUISITIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—(1) Within the conservation area, and subject to the provisions of this section, the Secretary is authorized to acquire lands and interests in lands by donation, purchase with donated or appropriated funds, exchange for Federal lands outside the conservation area, or transfer from another Federal agency with the concurrence of the head of the appropriate agency thereof.

SEC. 8. COOPERATIVE AGREEMENTS.

(d) The Federal water rights reserved by this Act shall be in addition to any water rights which may have been previously obtained by the United States for purposes other than for the conservation area.

(e) The Federal water rights reserved by this Act are specific to the conservation area designated by this Act. Nothing in this Act shall be construed as establishing a precedent with regard to any future designations, nor shall it constitute an interpretation of any other Act or any designation made pursuant thereto.

SEC. 11. NO BUFFER ZONES.

The Congress does not intend for the establishment of the conservation area to lead to the creation of protective perimeters or buffer zones around the conservation area. The fact that there may be activities or uses on lands outside the conservation area that would not be permitted in the conservation area shall not preclude such activities or uses on such lands up to the boundary of the conservation area to the extent consistent with other applicable law.

SEC. 12. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as are necessary to carry out this Act.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, it is with great pleasure I note the passage of the bill to establish the Red Rock Canyon National Conservation Area. I applaud the efforts of the Upper Chamber and my distinguished colleagues. The passage of this bill represents the culmination of many, many months of hard work.

When I introduced the companion bill to H.R. 4559 in the Senate on April 19 of this year, I knew it would take a Herculean effort to bring this dream to fruition before the adjournment of the 101st Congress.

However, I felt so strongly about Red Rock Canyon, the precarious protection of its fragile age-old resources, and the growing need of the citizens of southern Nevada for outdoor recreation opportunities, I was compelled to seek and secure meaningful protection of the priceless natural treasures which lie within and around Red Rock Canyon.

As I pressed on in this endeavor, I was continually reminded of the words of Gaylord Nelson, the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin and founder of Earth Day: "Right now and in the long haul * * * no other issue is more relevant to the condition of human life than our resources."

And so with the passage of the Red Rock Canyon bill, we reaffirm our commitment to protection and wise use of the natural resources this great Nation is so blessed with. We take the imperative measure of conserving for our children and their children the crown jewel of Nevada's public lands, Red Rock Canyon. We are protecting one of America's great treasures.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on agreeing to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the committee amendment and third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read a third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall the bill pass?

So the bill (H.R. 4559), as amended, was passed.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. SIMPSON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

IMPROVING EMERGENCY MEDICAL SERVICES AND TRAUMA CARE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Labor Committee be discharged from further consideration of H.R. 1602, a bill to improve emergency medical services and trauma care and that the Senate proceed to its immediate consideration, that all after the enacting clause be striken and the text of S. 15, as amended, be inserted in lieu thereof, the bill be read a third time and passed; the motion to reconsider be tabled; that the Senate insist on its amendment and request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses and the Chair be authorized to appoint conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER appointed Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. PELL, and Mr. HATCH conferees on the part of the Senate.

AGE DISCRIMINATION CLAIMS ASSISTANCE ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Labor Committee be discharged from further consideration of H.R. 5794, a bill to amend the Age Discrimination Claims Assistance Act of 1988, that the Senate proceed to its immediate consideration, that it be read a third time and passed, and that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

So, the bill (H.R. 5794) was passed.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, every American should have a fair chance at his or her day in court. The Age Discrimination Claims Assistance Amendments of 1990 provide that fair chance. Two years ago, Senator MELCHER and I coauthored the Age Discrimination Claims Assistance Act. I was glad we were able to restore rights for older Americans, but angry that the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission had fallen asleep on the job, making our action necessary.

Now we have to bail out the EEOC again, for the second time in 3 years. This is an intolerable situation. The EEOC again has shirked its responsibilities, by failing to protect older workers and failing even to process their claims so they at least can protect themselves. The EEOC must not be allowed to continue its practice of negligently slamming the door on older workers and then expecting Congress to step in and restore their rights.

I am serving notice here that the EEOC must provide a permanent solution to this problem. If we do not see a permanent solution from the Commission within the next few months, I believe Congress will have to make significant changes in appropriation priorities and statutory direction for the agency. I hope that will not be necessary.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I am pleased to give my support to H.R. 5794, the Age Discrimination Claims Assistance Amendments [ADCAA] of 1990. Several months ago, as the Senate was considering the nomination of Clarence Thomas to be a Federal judge, I expressed concern that the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission [EEOC] documents submitted to the Judiciary Committee showed that over 1500 ADEA charges contracted out by the Commission to State fair employment practice agencies [FEPA's] for investigation had lapsed since ADCAA was passed.

The EEOC's defense for these lapsed cases was that the Commission has no control over the FEPA's. I said at that time that this is not a valid excuse. The EEOC contracts with FEPA's to investigate a range of employment discrimination cases filed at the State level. This contractual relationship presents a number of possible remedies for the EEOC if the FEPA's fail to perform. There is no reason why the EEOC cannot protect the rights of older workers whose claims are being handled by the FEPA's.

Mr. President, claimants who have lost rights under the ADEA because of the neglect of FEPA's or the EEOC deserve to have those rights restored. It is therefore essential for us to pass this important legislation and I am pleased to have given H.R. 5794 my full support.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator WILSON be recognized to address the Senate for 5 minutes, and that at the conclusion of his remarks, the Senate stand in recess under the order until 10:45 a.m. today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMENDING THE LEADERS

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I just want to commend the majority leader for his efforts during the day for what was a very tough process. I have watched him now. I serve with him on two committees. He is a splendid gentleman and there are many remarkable traits he possesses, but the greatest one is patience. He has ultimate patience. That serves him well in this remarkable arena.

I watched him today on an extraordinary measure. On our side of the aisle, we are very pleased to have participated in delivering one more than a majority, and on the Democratic side of the aisle 3 more than a majority. It is going to be very tenuous as we work on now, but I think the American people are expecting to see the final result. I think we can give that to them and it will be because of the Senator's skill and ability, and the skills of ROBERT DOLE, our minority leader. Both are to be gratefully commended for the splendid work today.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank my friend and colleague, the distinguished Senator from Wyoming, for his courteous remarks, his gracious remarks. I say that it was a pleasure working with him. I know he was very involved in the effort to get the votes necessary to pass this important legislation. I am very grateful to him for that. And now one more big hurdle and then we will have the job done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the order, the Senator from California is recognized for 5 minutes.

THE BUDGET PACKAGE

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, we have just taken action in the Senate to bring about deficit reduction. Notwithstanding the spirit of debate that has occupied many hours on this floor, there is no dispute from anyone on this floor as to the need for deficit reduction. We have been engaged in a heated debate about how it is best done.

And by a margin that has been noted as narrow, action has been taken that will allow the Senate to meet with House conferees, and it is still the hope of many that we will be able to see something that many can vote upon.

Again, the point is not the need for deficit reduction. That is beyond dispute. Our failure to achieve it costs us in many ways. The most obvious is that it costs money. It costs us increased debt service. But I have to say that the reason that many who are as fervent for deficit reduction as voted for it were prompted to vote against it has to do with the lack of pleasure that we see in the particular package and also the lack of certainty that it will lead to the kind of deficit reduction that is its expressed goal.

First of all, Mr. President, this package is, I am told, the largest tax increase in the history of the Senate. Despite all the talks about cutting spending, this package actually boasts spending by a minimum of $245 billion over the next 5 years. All of the so-called cuts are cuts in the projected increases over the next 5 years. The only real cuts, the only actual reductions are in defense spending.

Most notably, it will increase the tax on gasoline by 9.5 cents a gallon. This provision affects not only those who commute and use automobiles for work but even students who rely upon school buses. The National School Transportation Association estimates that the almost 10-cent increase would cost the Los Angeles Unified School District nearly $1 million a year.

This package includes taxes for men and women earning between $20,000 to $50,000 a year. The taxes will be raised by 3 percent. We have calculated that a police officer in Los Angeles earning $45,000 a year with a family of four can face about $2,900 in increased taxes over the period of 5 years as projected for this deficit reduction package.

I do not intend, Mr. President, to get into greater detail, but I think it is important to recognize where the impact actually will fall. Beyond that, I think we need to be assured, if we are going to increase taxes, they will in fact achieve the stated purpose of deficit reduction.

Mr. President, there are no assurances that Congress will not dip into the pocket of taxpayers to solve budget shortcomings in the future. Obviously, no Congress can bind a successor, but I have much more a concern prompted by our history. It does not allow me to be sanquine, that in fact, what we have done tonight will make the difference we all hope it will. All the tax hikes in the world will never balance the Federal budget unless some discipline, some restraint is imposed upon the congressional appetite for spending. That will be true even with the reforms, commendable reforms, to the budget process that have been added by this bill tonight. But otherwise without that check upon the appetite for spending, tax hikes will only encourage Congress to spend more and more. I look to history as an unhappy guide in that respect.

Congress told us in 1982 that a tax increase would give us new revenues to be used to reduce the deficit. We heard the same message in 1984 and in 1987 and in 1989, and yet each time Congress simply spent the extra money and the deficit grew and grew.

So I think we have to ask, Mr. President, why this year will be any different, though we all fervently hope it will.

If the budget of the Federal Government were an account with Visa or any other card issuer, we would find our credit long ago revoked. Congress has worked itself into a frenzy trying to figure out what little things are wrong with this budget, as if some minor adjustment could be made to turn this lemon into a plum.

We might ask, is not the proper question not what is wrong with this package but what is right? What is right is that the effort of many good people has gone into sincere, good faith efforts. In my judgment, they have not produced the correct formula. But even more important perhaps than that, Mr. President, is that there is a requirement that we not simply use new revenues for new spending—and there is no guarantee that will be the case.

I thank the Chair.

ORDERS FOR TOMORROW

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today it stand in recess until 10:45 a.m. Friday, October 19; that following the prayer, the Journal of proceedings be deemed approved to date; the time of the two leaders be reserved for their use later in the day; that there be a period for the transaction of routine morning business to extend not beyond 11 a.m. with Senators permitted to speak therein and with Senator BIDEN to be recognized for not to exceed 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, at 11 a.m., the Senate will return to consideration of the Foreign Operations appropriations bill, H.R. 5114.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Thursday, October 18, 1990

The House met at 10 a.m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

We acknowledge, gracious God, that our thoughts and actions should be as one and that our voices and our deeds should both reflect our values and our purposes. Yet we admit that we too often do not act as we say nor do our deeds follow our words. We pray, almighty God, that what we say with our lips we may believe in our hearts, and all that we believe in our hearts, we may practice in our daily lives. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MFUME] please come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. MFUME led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 3888. An act to allow a certain parcel of land in Rockingham County, Virginia, to be used for a child care center;

H.R. 5749. An act to amend the Act entitled "An Act to incorporate the American University", approved February 24, 1893, to clarify the relationship between the Board of Trustees of the American University and the General Board of Higher Education and Ministry of the United Methodist Church;

H.J. Res. 214. Joint resolution designating the week of October 22 through October 28, 1990, as "Eating Disorders Awareness Week";

H.J. Res. 566. Joint resolution acknowledging the sacrifices that military families have made on behalf of the Nation and designating November 19, 1990, as "National Military Families Recognition Day"; and

H.J. Res. 669. Joint resolution to salute and congratulate the people of Poland as they commemorate the two-hundredth anniversary of the adoption of the Polish Constitution on May 3, 1991.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2059) entitled "An act to establish the Weir Farm National Historic Site in the State of Connecticut."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2737) entitled "An act to require the Secretary of the Treasury to mint a silver dollar coin in commemoration of the thirty-eighth anniversary of the ending of the Korean War and in honor of those who served."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S.J. Res. 158) entitled "Joint resolution designating October 22 through 28, as "World Population Awareness Week."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 2362. An act to enhance the survivability and recovery of the insular areas from severe storms, and

S.J. Res. 154. Joint resolution to consent to certain amendments enacted by the legislature of the State of Hawaii to the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act, 1920.

MODIFICATIONS IN APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON S. 358, IMMIGRATION ACT OF 1990

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the authority granted on October 17, the Chair makes the following modifications in conferee appointment for the Senate bill (S. 358) to amend the Immigration and Nationality Act to change the level, and preference system for admission, of immigrants to the United States and to provide for administrative naturalization, and for other purposes.

The conferees from the Committee on Education and Labor are also appointed for consideration of section 104 of the House amendment.

Mr. MOAKLEY is appointed a conferee for consideration of section 324 of the House amendment, and modifications committed to conference.

EXPLANATION OF OBJECTION

(Mr. HAWKINS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, the night before last I objected to the Panetta motion that would have stricken and did strike Head Start, and certainly the part of the program which pertains to child care, from the reconcilation package.

The membership did not really understand the issue at that time. We had no opportunity to explain it. For that reason, I did not call for a vote.

However, the situation is that the House-Senate conference named by the House Members, named by this body, did reach accommodation, did agree on a conference which was never acted upon. The Senate put their version of that package into the reconciliation resolution, and the attempt of the House Committee on Education and Labor to do likewise was turned down by the Panetta amendment. It was for that reason I objected at that time.

In my opinion, the present effort to balance the budget principally by cutting out vital domestic programs is counterproductive. I think it is the wrong way to go. I think a budget is a matter of spending as well as revenues, and to cut education, employment, and training is counterproductive and is not the way it should go. We should stop and look at the merit of programs and do on a piece-by-piece basis based upon merit. For that reason, I acted as I did.

DEFEAT AGRICULTURAL LEGISLATION

(Mr. MARLENEE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MARLENEE. Mr. Speaker, shall we call it an agricultural bill? Shall we call it the Kansas Plan? Shall we call it a consumer bill? Shall we call it a foreign giveaway? Shall we call it unilateral disarmament? Shall we call it George Bush's give to agricultural?

No, I think we should call it the greatest disaster ever written, collectively put together by a trade representative posing as a Secretary of Agriculture. The Secretary of Agriculture Clayton Yeutter got it all wrong. Producers said a bushel of wheat for a barrel of oil, not a bushel of oil for a gallon of gasoline.

This agricultural legislation should be soundly defeated in the conference report.

SHAME ON THE PRESIDENT

(Mr. SMITH of Florida asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Speaker, the sorry spectacle of Richard Darman this morning on television trying to defend taxing the middle class by saying that a gas tax is good, but changing the rate so that the wealthy get taxed is bad, is absolutely unbelievable. If anybody in America needs any more proof, all they need to do is to see Mr. Darman, together with what happened on Sunday when the Vice President of the United States said, on television, in front of the American public in response to a question as to whether or not the President was opposed to taxing the wealthy by raising rates, the answer was, "Yes, he is."

It is right there, folks, for all the world to see. What a sorry display of nonleadership. For 10 years, the decade of the 1980's was the decade of the wealthy getting wealthier and the middle class getting squeezed, and now when the Democrats want to do something about it, the Republicans cannot come up with a plan, the President defends the wealthy not being taxed, and all of the puppets, the ones not elected by this country, say it is not fair to tax the wealthy without taxing the middle class, and then come here and attack Members because we want to do something like freezing indexing for 1 year, which costs $1.25 a person for 85 percent of the taxpayers in this country.

What a sorry spectacle. Shame on the Presidency.

ON TITLE X ALLOW AMENDMENT FOR PARENTAL NOTIFICATION

(Mr. SMITH of New Jersey asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr Speaker, surprise, surprise. With about a week to 10 days left in the session I have just learned that the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN] may bring up a 4-year reauthorization of the title X Domestic Family Planning Program, perhaps as early as Monday, under suspension of the rules. Mr. Speaker, consideration of this controversial program under suspension thereby precluding amendments to title X is absolutely unfair and does a grave disservice to every Member of this Chamber.

Mr. Speaker, on September 26, the Senate voted to approve parental notification on the companion bill. We can—and we should—do no less. Various polls show that over 80 percent of the American public support parental notification in cases of abortion for teenagers.

As a matter of fact a CBS-NY Times poll found that 83 percent of Americans support a law requiring "that at least one parent be told before a girl under 18 could have an abortion."

It is no secret, Mr. Speaker, that recipients of title X, including planned parenthood, perform counsel and refer for abortions for minors, without parental knowledge.

The number of abortions performed by planned parenthood is absolutely shocking and staggering. In 1 year alone, 1988, planned parenthood performed over 111,000 abortions, and referred young girls and women for another 100,000 abortions. Again, with no provision whatsoever for even parental notification.

Mr. Speaker, at a bare minimum, parents of minors should be aware that planned parenthood personnel and others are intending to do an abortion on their minor daughters.

Mr. Speaker, if H.R. 5693 is defeated on Monday, It will be because the bill's sponsors refused Members the right to amend it so as to include Senator ARMSTRONG's parental notification amendment.

WHY RAISE TAXES FOR ISRAEL GIVEAWAY?

(Mr. TRAFICANT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, any Congress that will raise more taxes on the back of the American people, then give it away to foreign countries does not deserve a pay raise. It is time to tell it like it is.

Israel is already getting $3 billion from the American taxpayers, but that is not enough. Hidden in this budget is another $15 million for new ports in Israel, $180 million for oil, $42 million for missiles, $700 million for weapons, and to boot, Israel is to get all of their cash in the first 30 days which means we have to go out and borrow it, while we are raising taxes on mom and dad, to give it to Israel, who will reinvest it and make another $60 million out of our taxpayers accounts.

Now, I am going to be called anti-Semitic and everything, but enough is enough. Any Congress that will raise taxes on mom and dad and allow this does not deserve a pay raise. We were not elected to the British Parliament and Israel Knesset. We are elected to the Congress.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION LIMITING REIMBURSEMENT BY THRIFT REGULATORS TO LARGE DEPOSITORS

(Mr. REGULA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Speaker, a recent report profiling the Nation's largest savings and loan failures indicates that nearly 20 percent of the deposits at defunct thrifts now being reimbursed by taxpayer dollars are over the federally insured amount of $100,000 at year end of 1989. In fact, at seven of the surveyed thrifts the average jumbo account, which is receiving full reimbursement, contained more than $1 million.

These numbers refute the belief that taxpayers are bailing out small savers.

It is not just the small savers who are being rescued. Instead it is often the very wealthy whose brokers were pumping dollars into thrifts that had previously financed their risky investments.

It is not the intent of Congress to cover the losses of wealthy speculators in high risk investments and we must not let tax dollars be used in such a manner.

Please join me in supporting legislation I am introducing today which will prevent thrift regulators from reimbursing large depositors above the $100,000 figure, per account, except in those situations where to do so is the lowest cost method of meeting the Government's obligations in liquidating or selling the thrift.

SENATE BUDGET PROPOSAL BACK TO BUSINESS AS USUAL

(Mr. POSHARD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. POSHARD. Mr. Speaker, my State of Illinois is the fifth largest State in the Nation. Think of all the things the fifth largest State in the Nation must provide: Education, transportation, conservation, welfare, everything, the fifth largest State in the Nation.

The budget of the State of Illinois this year is slightly in excess of $20 billion. The Federal deficit this year will require us to approach $200 billion in interest on our national debt.

Mr. Speaker, we could run 10 States the size of the fifth largest State in this Nation on just the interest we are paying on our national debt. That is criminal. That has to be stopped. It is time for deficit reduction, and the best option anywhere is the plan proposed by my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] and passed by this House 2 nights ago.

Please, I say to the President and the Senate, do not compromise this package. It is the fairest package for every single American.

HIGHER TAXES WOULD RAISE INTEREST RATES, GUARANTEE RECESSION

(Mr. BALLENGER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BALLENGER. Mr. Speaker, at this time of economic anguish here in the United States, on the verge of a recession, the worst thing we can do is raise taxes. Your reconciliation package includes $93.6 billion in tax increases that will shrink credit, raise interest rates, and guarantee recession.

With layoffs occurring everywhere in the United States, you would think this sacrifice asked of the American people would be supported by a decrease in the size of the Federal Government. With our troops in the field, the only cuts in the Democrat package are in defense. The rest of the Government continues to grow.

This is obviously the opposite of what the American voter wants. I hope the voters recognize this before the election and before the depths of the recession created by this package.

THE RIGHT THING TO DO ON THE BUDGET

(Mr. HUTTO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HUTTO. Mr. Speaker, there is much frustration throughout America and there is much frustration here in the Congress. We must get a budget. We started the process night before last, I think, with a good budget resolution.

When many of us voted against the resolution a week or so ago, and it went down overwhelmingly with votes on both sides of the aisle, two of the major points for voting against it were the hard hits on Medicare and our senior citizens, and also the onerous 10 cents a gallon on gasoline. We corrected that in the budget resolution which passed this House of Representatives night before last.

It appears that the other body does not want to do anything about the bubble and taxing the higher income and wealthier Americans.

I think most people feel that it is the right thing to do, to have an equitable distribution of this burden; so I hope that before we go home, that we will have done the right thing for all our constituents and place this burden where it belongs. None of us likes taxes, but we need to place it in the right places, and I believe this House has taken the right step in doing that. I hope the other body will follow through.

HOUSE REPUBLICANS SHOULD STAND TALL

(Mr. HEFLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HEFLEY. Mr. Speaker, there is a lot of finger pointing that goes on around here about who wants more taxes. Let us look at reality for just a moment.

Article I, section 7, clause 1 of the Constitution states "All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives," the same body controlled by the Democratic Party for the past 36 years.

When the President called for a budget summit this year, it was the Democratic leadership that demanded additional taxes be considered as a condition of their participation;

Chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, DAN ROSTENKOWSKI, has stated that raising income and excise taxes was the best solution he could find to balancing the budget;

Senator HOLLINGS, chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee, has called for instituting a 5-percent value added tax as a means of balancing the budget and getting our economy back on the right track; and TOM FOLEY, Speaker of the House, and GEORGE MITCHELL, majority leader of the Senate, have repeatedly and strongly endorsed raising taxes.

Apparently, congressional leadership has an obsession with increasing taxes. When they speak of tightening belts, making the tough choices, and showing political courage, they are not talking about cutting spending, they are talking about raising taxes. We need to remind them that it does not take courage to spend someone else's money.

Earlier this summer, I cosponsored the Armey no new taxes resolution that was overwhelmingly adopted by my Republican colleagues. In that resolution, we promised to oppose any tax increase, regardless of what form it took and regardless of how many concessions we received in return. I intend to keep that promise, and I call on the rest of my colleagues to do the same.

THE CIVIL RIGHTS BILL AND QUOTAS

(Mr. WASHINGTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Speaker, this morning the President has the civil rights bill on his desk. Under American law, there is a universal standard. Whomever claims something to be true must prove that thing to be true, not claim it, prove it. If the civil rights bill is a quota bill, then why do not those who claim it is a quota bill prove that it is a quota bill and stop hiding behind that?

If there is a veto of this bill, I think the President, Mr. Speaker, should send a clear message to the American people. It would only take three or four sentences to explain how and under what circumstances this wonderful bill is a quota bill. In plain English, they ought to be able to prove it.

Mr. Thornburgh and Mr. Gray have between them, Mr. Speaker, 61 years of experience in practicing law. Surely they can come up with more than conclusions that this is a quota bill. Surely they can come up with three or four sentences, Mr. Speaker.

They are giving the President bad legal advice. There is no in between. There is no crying wolf.

The President has said, Mr. Speaker, that we should read his lips. He said he wants to sign a civil rights bill. There is only one man in the mirror, Mr. Speaker. His mouth moves so fast I cannot hear him, but I can see what he does, and what his actions do say that he does not want a civil rights bill, and what he does speaks so loudly, Mr. Speaker, I cannot hear what he says.

CORRECTING THE SYNAR AMENDMENT ON GRAZING

(Mr. RHODES asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, I hope the Chair and the House do not mind if I change the subject for at least a brief moment.

On Monday the House considered the Synar amendment which affected grazing fees charged to graze cattle on BLM lands. I think many Members of this House based their vote on representations of fact that were inaccurate. Among the things that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SYNAR] used to press his argument were figures relating to grazing fees charged by States to allow grazing on State-owned lands, and among the States the gentleman quoted was the State of Arizona, where he said the State of Arizona charges $5.99 per animal unit month to graze on State lands.

Mr. Speaker, I am today inserting in the RECORD a letter from the commissioner of the Arizona State Land Department which states that in fact in 1990 the fee charged is $1.39 per animal unit month, and the highest fee ever charged since 1950 was $1.43.

I do not think the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SYNAR] deliberately misleads us. He ought to check into who gives him the facts that he represents to us.

INTRODUCTION TO DISAPPROVE ARMS SALE TO SAUDI ARABIA

(Mr. OBEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I take this time to simply notify the House that the gentleman from California [Mr. LEVINE] and I are today introducing legislation which would disapprove the administration's arms sale for Saudi Arabia, or at least significant portions of it.

I think there are two problems with the administration's sale. No. 1, the way it is designed, it will unquestionably fuel the arms race in the Middle East to an unprecedented degree.

Second, the administration, frankly, does not have a clue as to what its long-term plans are for dealing with the escalation of military weaponry in the Middle East. They have no idea of what the pressures are going to be on the foreign aid bill for additional increases in spending over the next 5 years because of that sale. Under those circumstances, I think it ought to be scaled back.

The focus of the items which we will try to disapprove will be on the items that have nothing whatsoever to do with the Desert Shield operation, weapons which will not even be delivered for a significant period of time after next year.

Mr. Speaker, I would urge Members to take a look at it and affix their signatures as cosponsors if they so desire. We have a very short period of time in which to try to disapprove that sale.

WHO IN AMERICA WILL BE FORCED TO CUT SPENDING?

(Mr. GUNDERSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to take just a moment this morning to show you two houses in America; one is the house of the typical American family of four and the other is the House of Representatives.

The budget debates in this town going on at this time can be boiled down to one basic question: Who in America will be forced to cut spending? The American family of four or the House of Representatives?

The fact is that earlier this week Congress decided that we needed to cut the spendable income of the American family of four by $639 a year so that the Congress of the United States could continue spending. How much? At least $132 billion in domestic discretionary spending.

What is that? That is the money where we parcel out the money we want for special projects in our districts.

We are going to have an election very soon. In that election I hope the American people decide it is time that this House, the House of Representatives, quit its drunken spending spree so that the American family can have income to spend on itself.

HOW MUCH BELT TIGHTENING WILL THERE BE?

(Mr. GIBBONS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to engage the gentleman who just spoke on that question.

Yes, these are big figures. Yes, all of this is about belt-tightening. In order to ensure a $500 billion deficit reduction in the next 5 years, all of us are going to have to tighten our belts.

He brought out the average American family of 4. Well, the average American family of 4 will have to tighten its belt too. But it will only be by eight-tenths of 1 percent; eight-tenths of 1 percent of their take-home income after taxes.

You know, these are not scary figures. The lowest one-fifth of all of our people will do no belt-tightening. The top 1 percent who have $428,000 of taxable income, take-home income after taxes, will have to tighten their belts by 2.4 percent.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the American people will realize that all belt-tightening by everybody in our society will only be nine-tenths of 1 percent or less than 1 cent per dollar.

WAIVING CERTAIN ENROLLMENT REQUIREMENTS WITH RESPECT TO ANY RECONCILIATION BILL OR CONTINUING RESOLUTION FOR THE REMAINDER OF THE 101ST CONGRESS

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration in the House of the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 676) waiving certain enrollment requirements with respect to any reconciliation bill or continuing resolution for the remainder of the 101st Congress.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MFUME). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution as follows:

H.J. RES. 676

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, SECTION 1. HAND ENROLLMENT AUTHORIZATION.

(a) WAIVER OF CERTAIN LAWS WITH RESPECT TO PRINTING OF ENROLLED BILL OR JOINT RESOLUTION.—The provisions of sections 106 and 107 of title 1, United States Code, are waived with respect to the printing (on parchment or otherwise) of the enrollment of any reconciliation bill or continuing resolution of the One Hundred First Congress hereafter to be presented to the President.

(b) CERTIFICATION BY COMMITTEE ON HOUSE ADMINISTRATION.—The enrollment of the bill or joint resolution shall be in such form as the Committee on House Administration of the House of Representatives certifies to be a true enrollment.

SEC. 2. SUBSEQUENT PREPARATION AND CERTIFICATION OF PRINTED ENROLLMENT.

(1) IN GENERAL.—If a reconciliation bill or continuing resolution is presented to the President in the form of a hand enrollment pursuant to the authority of section 1 of this resolution, then upon the enactment of that bill or joint resolution the Clerk of the House of Representatives shall prepare a printed enrollment of the bill or joint resolution as in the case of a bill or joint resolution to which sections 106 and 107 of title 1, United States Code, apply.

(2) LIMITED STYLISTIC CORRECTIONS.—A printed enrollment prepared pursuant to paragraph (1) may, in order to conform to customary style of printed laws, include corrections in spelling, punctuation, indentation, type face, and type size and other necessary stylistic corrections to the hand enrollment. The printed enrollment shall include notations (in the margins or as otherwise appropriate) of all such corrections.

(b) TRANSMITTAL TO PRESIDENT.—A printed enrollment prepared pursuant to subsection (a) shall be signed by the presiding officer of each House of Congress as a correct printing of the hand enrollment and shall be transmitted to the President.

(c) CERTIFICATION BY PRESIDENT; LEGAL EFFECT.—Upon certification by the President that such printed enrollment is a correct printing of the hand enrollment, such printed enrollment shall be considered for all purposes as the original enrollment of the bill or joint resolution and as valid evidence of its enactment.

(d) ARCHIVES.—Such printed enrollment certified by the President under subsection (c) shall be transmitted to the Archivist of the United States, who shall preserve it with the hand enrollment. In preparing the bill or joint resolution for publication in slip form and in the United States Statutes at Large pursuant to section 112 of title 1, United States Code, the Archivist of the United States shall use the printed enrollment certified by the President under subsection (c) in lieu of the hand enrollment.

(e) HAND ENROLLMENT DEFINED.—As used in this section, the term "hand enrollment" means the enrollment, as authorized by section 1, of a bill or joint resolution for presentment to the President in a form other than the printed form required by sections 106 and 107 of title 1, United States Code.

(f) RECONCILIATION BILL DEFINED.—As used in this section, the term "reconciliation bill" means a bill to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 4 of the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 1991.

(g) CONTINUING RESOLUTION DEFINED.—As used in this section, the term "continuing resolution" means a joint resolution making continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1991.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DEMOCRATS—THE PARTY OF TAXES

(Mr. DELAY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, the time for Democrat rhetoric is over. This week in Omaha, NE, the President said, and I quote:

> We are fighting against the majorities, the liberal majorities that control both Houses. We are fighting the entrenched tax-and-spend philosophy on Capitol Hill.

He was talking about the Democrats who control Congress. This week it was the Democrats who passed a huge tax bill on the working men and women of America.

This week the Democrats in Congress had a choice to either cut spending or raise your taxes; they chose to raise your taxes. This week the Democrats in Congress had a choice to either cut spending or cut Medicare; they chose to cut Medicare.

Let there be no mistake or confusion, the Democrats have always been the party of raising taxes. They always have been and always will be. Raising taxes was their goal from the beginning of the budget summit. Now they have gotten outright blatant and greedy in their desire to see Washington fattened, with the hard earned wages of all honest, working Americans.

We on the Republican side of the aisle take heart in our President who declared his intention of vetoing the Democrats tax and spend budget package.

Mr. Speaker, it is time that politicians in Washington get their hand out of the pockets of middle America. And let us stress again for the record that it was the Democrats who passed the tax budget with 228 votes. It was the Republicans by a vote of 164 who were against a tax bill. Let us be honest about which party is the party of taxes—the Democrats.

THE TAX PACKAGE WAS A TAX AND CUT SPENDING PACKAGE

(Mr. JACOBS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Speaker, the budget package that passed was not a tax and spend package, it was a tax and cut spending package. Three-fourths of it cut spending and one-fourth taxes.

Mr. Speaker, this is the education administration. At least I have learned something. I pored over the Constitution and I cannot find that passage that says when there is a budget crunch you lay off nonessential personnel. That raises the question if they are nonessential what were they doing on the payroll in the first place?

One of the things the President found to be unessential was for the tourists to use the rest rooms a couple of weekends ago. I guess that is all right. That is a value judgment.

But could this possibly come from the same group who thinks that a toilet seat is worth $660?

Now weigh that and give it a little bit of thought. But when you come right up to it, closing down the Government, the bills are not due until the end of the month. It is not payday Tuesday. It is a Presidential weapon, not a Presidential duty.

THE BUDGET PACKAGE INCREASES TAXES OF MIDDLE INCOME FAMILIES

(Mr. SAXTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, the day before yesterday when this tax bill was passed, I stood at the podium and made the point that this is in fact a tax on the middle class. A working family with 2 children, this plan will cost $450 per year just in the increase in the income tax.

But you do not have to just believe me, listen to what the National Taxpayers Union had to say just this morning.

> The tax increase aimed at middle class taxpayers in the Democratic alternative would be caused by a one-year delay of the annual inflation adjustment of the personal exemption and the tax rate bracket amounts. It would cut the 1991 personal exemption from $2,200 to $2,050. the 28 percent tax rate bracket would begin at $32,450 of taxable income, instead of the $34,250 required under current law. Millions more middle class taxpayers would find themselves in the 28 percent tax rate bracket.

That is not fair, Mr. Speaker.

FIGHTING FURLOUGHS

(Mr. RICHARDSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, time is running out. Another deadline is fast approaching. Come Saturday morning the Government might be shut down again. I am prepared to state right here that I will support the conference report that will emerge in the next 2 days. The reason is that our Government is in crisis. And I hope that everybody bites the bullet.

It is not going to be to all our liking, but the time has come to seriously stop some of this partisanship and think about the country. It is important too that President Bush be engaged in these negotiations.

Why is it so easy for him to negotiate with Gorbachev and not with the leaders of the Congress?

We have to deal with domestic budget issues. It is critical.

In my State of New Mexico, 23,000 Federal employees will be furloughed if we do not reach agreement. Countless others will lose their jobs.

Let us stop this partisanship, let us deal with the deficit, let us bite the bullet and most importantly, let's go home.

THE NEED FOR TAX INCREASES IS PERCEIVED DIFFERENTLY IN VARIOUS PARTS OF THE COUNTRY

(Mr. THOMAS of Wyoming asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. THOMAS of Wyoming. Mr. Speaker, we have been embroiled in a budget controversy here for a very long time, too long. This decision should have been made last spring.

I rise to share the response that I have had overwhelmingly from the people of Wyoming whom I am proud to represent.

The people of Wyoming want less government, not more. They want a budget program that controls the growth in government, not to guarantee growth by added taxes.

The need for massive tax increases is perceived differently in different parts of the country, particularly here within the beltway.

There are four groups that influence our thinking the most, it seems to me. One is agencies who do not believe they can possibly live another moment without a 10-percent increase each year.

Second, other groups have come to town specifically for the reason of raising the budget. They are the ones we see here within the beltway.

Third is the media which is offended by any sort of change in new building programs.

Finally, Members of this Congress who perceive that their political influence is improved by growing programs and increasing the size of government.

Mr. Speaker, we need less government, not more. We need to control growth, not increase taxes.

LET'S GO HOME

(Mr. BATES asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BATES. Mr. Speaker, Thomas Wolfe wrote, "You can't go home again." I hope that is not the case for this House of Representatives.

I urge the budget conferees to support the Democratic plan put forth to them which does not cut Medicare and which taxes the rich. I urge the President to stop flip-flopping on his position, and I say, "Let's go home."

Mr. Speaker, if we do not do those things, I am afraid we are in for a long, cold winter.

BUDGET PROCESS REFORM ACT WILL MAKE AMERICANS PROUD OF CONGRESS ONCE AGAIN

(Mr. COX asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, it is today, October 18, half a month into our new fiscal year, and we still have not completed our budget process. The law requires that we have our budget here on the floor by April 15. It requires that our 13 appropriations bills and our reconciliation process be finished by the end of June.

Mr. Speaker, the reason we are in this budget mess is that the Congress is breaking the law. As a Republican, there is very little that I can do about this. The Speaker of the House and the Democratic majority have total control over what comes to the floor of this body, so what can we do? Can we arrest the Speaker and the chairman of our Democratic committees, put them in jail for violating the budget law? Can we appoint an independent counsel?

Over 100 Members of the House of Representatives have a better idea. We are original cosponsors of a bill that will be introduced within the next 24 hours, the Budget Process Reform Act of 1990. We will put teeth and enforcement in our deadlines and in our spending limits. We will put an end to Government shutdowns, last-minute continuing resolutions, and the embarrassing Keystone Kops handling of our Nation's finances. We will make the American people proud of their Congress once again.

THE FIGHT IS ABOUT FAIRNESS

(Mr. ESPY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ESPY. Again, Mr. Speaker, it looks as if we are headed for a Government shutdown. Now none of us really wants that to happen, but the American people really ought to understand that this is a 5-year package, and this debt reduction plan takes us well into the year 1995.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, they ought to understand that this is a fundamental clash of principles between the two parties over how people will be treated over that period of time.

Now the Democrats do not want a shutdown, but neither, Mr. Speaker, do we want a shutout, shutout of the elderly, of the middle-income earners, under a regression tax plan that continues to favor the wealthy who have seen their taxes drop by 10 percent over the last 10 years while the tax burden on almost everyone else has increased over the same period of time by 28 percent.

So, Mr. Speaker, this is not about handouts, because two-thirds of this Democratic plan comes from spending reductions, but it is about handups. It is not about Government shutdowns, but it is about, rather, opening doors for the shutouts. This fight is about fairness, and that is what this fight is all about.

CHECK YOUR WALLET AND COUNT YOUR SPOONS

(Mr. ROHRABACHER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Brace yourselves, America. The Democrats are talking about tax the rich, and, when that kind of rhetoric is heard coming out of the Democrats, I say to my colleagues, "It's time to check your wallet and count your spoons."

Who do they mean by the rich? They mean anybody who earns over $20,000 because that is what is going to be paying the bill. They mean the people who are earning 30, to 35, to $40,000 because those people, the middle class, are going to be paying the largest portion of the $175 billion in new taxes the Democrats are trying to foist off on the American people.

Mr. Speaker, it is time to control spending. It is time to jump-start our economy and have some new wealth produced in our country because we have a growing economy, not to tax our country and tax our middle class into recession.

WE NEED TO TALK ABOUT LITTLE JESSICA

(Mr. SERRANO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I had the unfortunate task of speaking to two parents, Mr. and Mrs. Guzman in my district to tell them their little daughter, Jessica, was in my prayers and in the prayers of all the Members of the House. Today's newspaper indicates that Jessica becomes the fourth child in my district found dead in the last 4 years, but we will spend the rest of this day and this week talking about budget deficits, interest rates, bonds, and trickle down economies, and we will not talk about Jessica. We will not have the courage to reopen the budget negotiation and put back every penny we took out of education and out of child care so that children like Jessica may live.

We have to wake up, my colleagues, with all due respect. This is the real America. This is the forgotten South Bronx. These are the poor who do not have an opportunity to grow up. Let us talk about deficits after we talk about the memory of Jessica.

DEMOCRATS SHOULD NOT TALK ABOUT FAIRNESS

(Mr. ARMEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, I will have to say for this Member, who generally has a high regard for and appreciation of the quality of workmanship of the Members on both sides of the aisle, that I am sick and tired of hearing the Democrats in this body talk about fairness. Any group of people that use their majority status to blatantly, callously, and maliciously deny the right to participate to the minority have no right to talk about fairness. It is a sense of common decency that is lacking and which made it possible for them to maliciously manipulate the rules and keep a no-tax alternative out of consideration on this floor and away from the view and the analysis of the American public while they rammed through a proposal that allowed them to tax all Americans more and to continue the spending programs that help them retain their majority.

For my money, Mr. Speaker, the next time a Democrat in this body talks about fairness, DICK ARMEY is going to stop listening.

SACRIFICING OUR CHILDREN TO PROTECT MILITARY-INDUSTRIAL COMPLEX

(Mrs. UNSOELD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. UNSOELD. Mr. Speaker, on October 16 a New York Times writer, William A. Niskans, wrote that at a meeting with some war hawks recently he was told that "We owe Saddam Hussein a favor. He saved us from the peace dividend."

Mr. Speaker, my heart cries out for the soul of this Nation. Is our military-industrial complex so greedy for taxpayers' dollars that we are willing to sacrifice our brave young men and women shipped to the Persian Gulf in order to protect their appropriations?

Mr. Speaker, at what cost is the Nation selling its children?

BITE THE BULLET?

(Mr. JAMES asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, $450 on a family of two increases in taxes; you are kidding, and then the plea is said: "Bite the bullet," when we are giving ourselves a 15-percent increase on our own staff, a 15-percent increase for our own staff.

I say, "Are you kidding? Do you realize we're on TV?"

I mean, Mr. Speaker, people do see what we say and remember some of what we say, and it is quite easy to look at our own budget and find that we are giving ourselves and our staffs more money for that purpose.

Incredible? Bite the bullet? Fifteen-percent increase on administrative staffs? Bite the bullet? That is unconscionable to stand up here and suggest that and then to suggest that the average taxpayer can bite the bullet and pay more taxes.

Just a few days ago it was submitted that the average taxpayer was not paying any taxes, and that is admitted by all. There is a tremendous tax increase on Mr. and Mrs. Middle Income. Tremendous.

DETERRENCE, ECONOMIC BLOCKAGE, NOT WAR, ARE TRUE OBJECTIVES OF SAUDI ARABIA MISSION

(Mr. KENNEDY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, there has been increasing talk about the use of force to dislodge Saddam Hussein out of Kuwait. Even the Secretary-General of the United Nations alluded to the necessity for this type of action yesterday. These statements, however, bring into question the true objectives of the multilateral mission to Saudi Arabia.

As a deterrent force, the deployment was supposed to enhance the defensive capabilities of our allies in the region. It was supposed to promote a blockade that would work to economically weaken Iraq enough to compel the aggressor out of Kuwait. But by initiating military action to pressure Iraq, the potential use of force goes well beyond the original mandate of our presence in Saudi Arabia.

The American people do not want to go to war unnecessarily. Our troops and equipment make up over 80 percent of the multinational force structure, and when the bullets start to fly, 80 percent of the multinational casualities will be our young men and women. We are not there to instigate conflagration, we are there to deter aggression. There is no reason to catalyze the effects of an economic blockage by using force. Firing first without first being fired upon would only cause needless bloodshed.

A NIGHT OF INFAMY

(Mr. PURSELL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PURSELL. Mr. Speaker, it was a night of infamy last Thursday, October 4, when the budget summit resolution came to this House at 1:15 a.m., in the middle of the night. The Democratic budget resolution followed on October 7, 2:30 a.m., in the middle of the night.

The rule that would not allow consideration of the Pursell-Kasich Republican budget plan, was voted out of the Committee on Rules on October 15, at 1 a.m. in the middle of the night. The Democrats passed their own rule for their own plan, in the middle of the night.

So we have a World Series going on here in which we play only by the Democratic rules, in which they have waived the rules for the Budget Act 62 times in the 101st Congress.

We demand the same rules as the Democrats, just like the Cincinnati Reds and the Oakland A's must use in the World Series. The Democrats cannot even play fair and square on the same day that the civil rights bill is debated on the floor of the House. Can you believe that, America?

AMERICA CANNOT AFFORD COST OF CONGRESS' WASTEFUL SPENDING

(Mr. WALKER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, yesterday Democrats on this floor admitted that their budget plan would raise the tax of a $35,000-a-year family by $2000 over 5 years, or $400 a year. That is $400 a year more on a two-earner family, where each earner is making $17,000.

Several Democrats indicated that $400 was not too much of a burden on that middle class family. Everyone should pay the cost of Government spending, they said.

In most families, $400 is a lot of money. In case some Members have forgotten, on our $95,000-a-year salaries, $400 is more than one-half of 1 week's pay on a $35,000 income.

The Democrats seem to think that middle America can afford to hand over half of the money they make this week to the Federal Government. Mr. Speaker, most families do not think they can afford the cost of Congress' wasteful spending.

INTRODUCTION OF THE AIRPORT SYSTEM PLANNING ACT OF 1990

(Mr. PACKARD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Speaker, today I, along with Congressman NORM MINETA and several colleagues, will introduce the Airport System Planning Act of 1990.

Enactment of this legislation will improve our national airport system capacity through enhanced cooperation in the planning process. Currently, the Federal Aviation Administration [FAA] formulates aviation policy behind closed doors with no input from State and local governments, airport operators, private entities, and private citizens. We seek to change that to ensure that all interested parties are involved in the process.

A central theme of the bill is the development of performance measures so that we may accurately determine how our Nation's airports are functioning. All other modes of transportation are subject to performance review, it is time for the collection of adequate, accurate data on how our aviation system actually performs. Collection of this data will help identify where our system bottlenecks are. As we identify these bottlenecks, we can work to solve them.

We require, in an open door process, the formulation of two new airport system planning documents to replace the current [NPIAS] national plan for integrated airport systems. A strategic 20-year plan and a short range 5-year capital improvement plan [CIP] will be developed. These plans will identify needs and offer solutions to solve our Nation's capacity problems.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join me as original cosponsors of this vital legislation.

REMOVAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS CO-SPONSOR OF H.R. 188

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have my name removed from cosponsorship of the bill, H.R. 188.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MFUME). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

DEMOCRATS SUPPORT SPENDING HABIT WITH TAXES

(Mr. DOUGLAS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Speaker, the tax package that was passed on Tax Tuesday in the House proves that the Democrats are the ones who want to raise your taxes. We had a choice to either cutting Medicare or reducing spending, and what did they do? They cut Medicare.

Middle income America, this week the Democrats had a choice of cutting spending or raising your taxes, and what did they do? They chose to raise your taxes.

We Republicans tried to bring to the floor a package that would not tax the economy into a recession, but would cut at the heart of the deficit problem, which is excess spending by the Democratic-controlled Congress.

The Democrats are addicted to spending, and they are supporting their habit with your tax dollars, middle America.

IN MICKEY LELAND'S MEMORY

(Mr. WASHINGTON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be the first to commend the Republic of Niger for their noble and selfless act of commemorating an individual who was not only a friend of mine but a member of this esteemed body. The person I refer to, of course, is my predecessor, the late Mickey Leland. The Republic of Niger will present the Order of Merit of Niger, the highest honor an individual may receive from the Republic of Niger, posthumously to Mickey at the Mickey Leland commemoration ceremony this fall. I have proudly agreed to join the list of honorary chairpersons for this commemoration ceremony.

The Government of Niger has also commissioned the Mickey Leland commemorative stamp which will recognize Mickey's work. Further, the Embassy is donating proceeds from the sale of the stamp to the Leland Foundation, which will continue to fight hunger and malnutrition throughout Africa and in the United States.

I have had the pleasure of meeting Ambassador Moumouni Adamou Djermakoye of Niger serveral times. Following each meeting, I left with the impression that the Government of Niger is a nation devoted to the strengthening of a meaningful and fulfilling two-way relationship with the United States. The presentation of the Mickey Leland commemorative stamp and the support of the Leland Foundation solidify this belief.

As a further example of how the Republic of Niger has made the improvement of relations with the United States a top priority, on September 11, the Embassy of Niger presented the Order of Merit of Niger to Ambassador Joseph Verner Reed, Chief of Protocol of the U.S. Department of State. The Republic of Niger and Ambassador Djermakoye remember Joseph Reed as the highest United States representative to the United Nations who became a true Africanist and brought the issues of concern to Africa to the attention of the United Nations and the United States. Ambassador Reed continues his support for Africa in biweekly briefings with the African diplomatic corps, and he is in constant communication with the African Ambassadors regarding United States-African policy issues.

Mr. Speaker, the Republic of Niger wants to give recognition and thanks to the individuals who have contributed so much to Africa. I welcome this spirit of recognition in an age where too often the nations of Africa are portrayed and misunderstood as coming with their hands out. This, most certainly, is not the case of the Republic of Niger.

DOES AMERICA WANT TO GO BACK TO JIMMY CARTER DAYS?

(Mr. BURTON of Indiana asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, if you oppose new taxes, you are partisan. Partisan; "We must bite the bullet; we must tighten our belts."

Does that sound like Jimmy Carter or Jimmy Carter's days? This kind of rhetoric is designed to mask what the Democrat Party is doing. They want to increase taxes in the bill they just passed 2 nights ago by $180 billion, the largest tax increase in American history, a 5-percent increase on a person making $21,000 a year, a 6-percent increase in taxes on a person and his wife making $34,000 a year, and a $650 increase in taxes on a family of four making $43,000 a year.

That does not sound like a tax on the rich, does it? Do we really want to go back to the Jimmy Carter days? My colleagues, do we really want to go back to the Jimmy Carter days?

DEMOCRATS ROB THE RICH AND ROB THE POOR TO GIVE TO GOVERNMENT

(Mr. HANCOCK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, everyone has read the story of Robin Hood and his merry men. He made a reputation on taxing the rich and giving to the poor.

Washington, DC, is now the Sherwood Forest of the Potomac, except the Democrats are going to tax the rich and the poor, and keep it, to spend on the expansion of government and continue to take the very freedoms of the American taxpayers.

The American people are not stupid. They have read the other fairy tales, and they know the emperor has no clothes. The Democrat package is one of the largest tax increases in history on middle income taxpayers, and the voters know it.

DISAPPROVING EXTENSION OF MOST - FAVORED - NATION TREATMENT TO PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MFUME). Pursuant to House Resolution 485 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 647).

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 647) disapproving the recommendation of the President to extend nondiscriminatory treatment—most-favored-nation treatment—to the products of the People's Republic of China with Mr. MCNULTY in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the joint resolution is considered as read the first time.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] will be recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI].

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to yield 15 minutes of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RUSSO], and that he control that time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to yield 15 minutes of my time to the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL], the ranking Republican on the Budget Committee and a member of the Ways and Means Committee, and that he be allowed to control that time in opposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, House Joint Resolution 647 would rescind China's nondiscriminatory most-favored-nation status, effective 60 days after enactment. I urge my colleagues to oppose the resolution.

I understand the desire of Members of the House to send a strong message to the leadership of China—that we condemn the actions taken by those leaders against their own citizens in June 1989 and since. However, I do not believe that cutting off China's MFN status hurts the leaders of China. They do not rely on trade with the United States for their livelihood. They do not rely on contacts with Americans to know what the world is like beyond the walls of their compound. Rather, the students and workers of China whose paychecks and knowledge of Western ways comes from contacts with American businesses and institutions would be hurt by such an action. It is no coincidence that those countries in Eastern Europe with the closest trade and economic ties with the United States and other Western countries—Poland, Hungary, and East Germany—were the first to overthrow their Communist regimes and push for market-oriented economic systems. Let us not isolate the people of China from America and its influences by cutting off vital trade and investment links with their country.

My colleagues will recall that last year, Congress approved a package of sanctions, many of which remain in effect today. Those carefully targeted sanctions have had an effect. China has released nearly 900 political prisoners; has lifted martial law; and has taken other steps to modestly improve the human rights climate. I will be the first to say that these steps are not enough. But I firmly believe that we have a much greater chance of pushing for change if we remain engaged in China. Cutting off China's MFN status will end once and for all the ability of the United States to have an impact on Chinese behavior.

I urge my colleagues to vote against House Joint Resolution 647 and preserve America's influence in China.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 6 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, my bill, House Joint Resolution 647 would terminate most-favored-nation trade status for the People's Republic of China 60 days after the date of enactment.

Mr. Speaker, if the President believes a restoration of MFN is justified, he can so recommend to Congress in June of next year.

So what are we talking about? We are talking about taking away China's MFN trade status for a period of 6—perhaps 8—months, no more. Then the issue can be reconsidered. So this joint resolution hardly represents a radical move on our part, but it would send a necessary message to the angry old men who are hiding out in the so-called great hall of the people.

Mr. Chairman, I noted during the debate on the rule that the Jackson-Vanik amendment to the Trade Act of 1974 established a direct linkage between a country's human rights record and the normalization of trade relations between that country and the United States. There has never been a more important time than now to reinforce that linkage—China has been let off the hook for too long.

Mr. Chairman, for most of the past 10 years I served on the Foreign Affairs Committee, and I carried the water for President Reagan. I have carried the water for President Bush for many years, and I have supported both of these Presidents as they have sought to build bipartisan support for an American foreign policy that stresses self-determination, freedom, and human rights for all people of the world. I greatly respect President Bush, and I know just how hard he has worked at this, and what an expert he is on diplomacy. I know that he is in fact trying his best to get the Chinese Government to respect the freedom and rights of the Chinese people by extending to it the carrot of continued American trade privileges.

I also know, however, my colleagues, that while the President offers this carrot to the Communist Chinese to get them to improve their behavior toward their citizens, someone has to show that there is a stick out there in case they do not. And the fact is that they have not improved their relations at all with their own people.

They have violated the Jackson-Vanik amendment. As a matter of fact, a recent Associated Press story referred to the front page editorial in the People's Daily, the main paper in China, which essentially declared that the world was growing less and less concerned over the massacre conducted by the Chinese Government just a little over a year ago. It clearly applauded the Chinese ability to wait out the world's indignation without changing their own behavior or their own politics at all.

What a sad comment on that government's attitude toward what it did to hundreds if not thousands of its own unarmed citizens.

Many of us here in America are familiar with the old good cop-bad cop phrase. It describes an approach used by police agencies to get a criminal to admit that he is guilty. Well I stand before Members today to say that you and I on both sides of this aisle need to be the bad cop. We need to get the Communist Government of China to take a long look at itself, to admit to itself, to its people and to the world that yes, it did commit crimes and yes, the Chinese Communists today continue to commit unconscionable crimes, and yes, it must stop, and it must stop now; we can do it.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot stand by while thousands of Chinese people are imprisoned and hundreds are executed just because they want to be free like you and I. We cannot ignore the reports compiled by organizations like Asia Watch and Amnesty International.

My colleagues, read this. It will turn your stomach. It will make you cry over what is happening there.

I have here in my hand a recent report of the Asia Watch group which lists at least 1,000 Chinese citizens who were arrested after the Tiananmen Square and who are still imprisoned. Have we forgetten that? My fellow Members, have we so soon forgotten the feeling of injustice and tyranny that overwhelmed us as we saw films of tanks and troops mowing down and literally crushing innocent civilians who stood unarmed, pleading with their own army not to kill them?

The Chinese people have not forgotten, Mr. Chairman, and we should not forget either.

Neither should we stand idly by while the Chinese Government presents itself to the world as a reasonable partner in the effort to halt Saddam Hussein's aggression in the Middle East, but then turns around and secretly sells Iraq the chemicals it needs to manufacture nuclear weapons, missile fuel, and poison gas that could very well be used against our sons and daughters, American men and women, serving in the Persian Gulf and in Saudi Arabia today.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, China itself is engaged in long-term efforts to wipe out the independence and the culture of a smaller nation it invaded many years ago, just like Saddam Hussein invaded Kuwait.

I remind my fellow Members that Tibet and its people have suffered terribly under Chinese Communist repression.

Particularly in the last 2 years, hundreds of Tibetans have been killed for their courage in standing up for freedom for their long-oppressed nation.

Mr. Speaker, now is the time to pass this resolution, when the Chinese Government acts as it does now, imprisoning and executing protestors, cutting arm deals with Iraq, and patting itself on the back for outfoxing the rest of the world. How will it act when yet more time has passed and world attention is even less focused? Think of the crimes that took place last year in China, I guarantee Members that it will not respect democracy any more than it does now, and that would be a shame for the Members and a tragedy for all of China.

Join me in being a bad cop today, in a good cause, a very important cause. That cause is freedom and human rights for decent people. I urge Members to support the resolution.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RUSSO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARKEY], one of the coauthors of the resolution of disapproval.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the resolution of disapproval as a partner with the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON], and to basically make the point that this is not a liberal or conservative issue. This is not a Democrat or Republican issue. This is a fundamental human rights issue. This is a fundamental issue of what does the United States of America stand for? What do we believe in?

For many years, our country has been playing the China card. We have been turning a blind eye to activities going on inside of that country because we needed that country to isolate the Warsaw Bloc countries, to isolate Hungary and Czechoslovakia, or in East Germany and Poland and the Soviet Union. Now, in the 1990's when we turn over the China card, it is a deuce. We do not need any longer to tolerate the activities which have been going on in that country which violate the fundamental principles of our country in terms of who we engage in trading activities with, which we engage in activity with regard to military weapons.

So this time it is time for Members to take a stand, and this is the moment. The old era is gone. The cold war is over, and China, the China of despots of Tiananmen Square, the China tearing down the Goddess of Democracy in Tiananmen Square is the China of today, and we have to recognize that in our principles. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] and I have agreed over all these years on Jackson-Vanik on all the issues of human rights. These are not issues which have divided this body along Democrat and Republican lines. They are not issues to divide our country along liberal versus conservative lines. These are the issues that our country are united upon, and China does not deserve the respect, does not deserve the trade benefits which other countries in the world who abide by these principles deserve.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCHULZE], the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FRANK], the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ROSE], and I and many others have joined together in a bipartisan fashion to bring this resolution on to the floor. There is a very good reason for it. We should not be cozying up to the Chinese. We should start playing the Soviet cards against the Chinese by working with the Soviet Union and other nations to promote peaceful democratic change in China and to isolate the aging dictators in Beijing. We should be working with the Soviets and our European and Asian allies to bring China into the nuclear noproliferation regime, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] said, and we should demonstrate the same kind of leadership that we are showing in the Persian Gulf by taking the initiative to put pressure on China to reform, and in pressing the rest of the world to join Members in doing likewise.

Right now, we have a totally inconsistent policy on MFN despite the fact that nearly 16,000 Soviet Jews are leaving the Soviet Union every month, every month 16,000. The U.S. still has not granted the Soviets MFN status because they have not formalized the legal structure which guarantees the right of freedom immigration which is required by Jackson-Vanik. In contrast, we waive Jackson-Vanik for the People's Republic of China, a country which does not permit its citizens to freely immigrate, which invalidated all passports and exit visas after Tiananmen Square, and which currently requires any Chinese citizen seeking to travel abroad to account for their performance during the events at Tiananmen Square. That is the standard.

I say it is time that we eliminated the inconsistency in United States application of Jackson-Vanik principles, let Members not hold to the Soviets for one standard and then waive that standard for the Chinese. Let Members be consistent and principled in our defense of free immigration and freedom of speech. By denying the extension of MFN status to the People's Republic of China, we demonstrate that America will no longer tolerate business as usual while the legitimate democratic aspirations of the Chinese people continue to be brutally and systematically suppressed. By dramatically raising tariffs on Chinese exports to the United States, reducing the People's Republic of China's access to hard currency and isolating China internationally, a denial of MFN status would put maximum pressure on the Chinese Government to institute a program of political reform and democraticization. We should not side with the butchers of Beijing. We should not equate them with the Havels of Czechoslovakia, with the Walesas of Poland. It is time for the United States to reform our policy, to be a more realistic reflection of the world as it exists today in 1990, and as we hope the 1990's to be. It is time for the United States to begin to crack down on the Chinese, and to begin to push the cause of democracy, freedom of immigration, freedom of speech within that country. It is within our power to do so. The world expects no less from the United States.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in very strong opposition to House Joint Resolution 647 which would disapprove the President's extension of MFN for China. I can understand the Members' desire to express their objection to actions at Tiananmen Square and elsewhere in the People's Republic of China. Obviously, the conduct of the Government of China is not something of which we approve, and many Members are going to be anxious to show just how much they disapprove of it by voting for this particular resolution.

However, I think we have to know that this is not a free vote for human rights which has no other consequences.

Over the years, Members of this body have ralled about increasing American exports and improving American competitiveness around the world, and at the same time have inflicted on our country such statutes as the Export Administration Act, and have tried to deny from time to time MFN to other countries.

The effects of these kinds of denials and restrictions of exports have tended to make America less competitive, to reduce American jobs in America, and to reduce American exports. What Members will do today when we vote for this has an important consequence. It is going to reduce American exports, reduce American jobs, and reduce American commercial opportunities abroad in a variety of ways.

Now, history has shown that these kinds of economic boycotts have never been successful. I would refer, first of all, to our invocation of Jackson-Vanik against the U.S.S.R. Since things have changed there and in Central Europe, the Russians have been operating essentially an open immigration policy. Certainly more open than it was previously. Yet, although they have been offered our MFN, they have not gotten around to accepting it yet, for which they only have to ratify the policy they now operate in law. It is quite obvious that MFN did not have any effect on that particular situation.

Another example, I think, is Romania, in which the closing down of MFN did not change the politics nor the policies in that particular country. In fact, it is true today, as it has been invariably historically true, that the only country in the world that shoots itself in the foot in order to tell the world how it feels about human rights, is the United States.

Consider our competitors in the Far East or in Europe. They pass fervent resolutions telling how much they abhor the Chinese conduct and how much they favor human rights, and then they immediately move into the countries in which we have declared embargoes, as this would try to do with China, and they laugh off the business that is now denied to America.

We are the only country in the world that has to prove how much we are for human rights by shooting American business, American labor, and American exports in the foot.

Mr. Chairman, this is a most unwise policy. In simply driving a wedge between the United States and the People's Republic of China, we are not going to change the deportment of the People's Republic of China Government. We have a far better chance of changing Chinese conduct by negotiating and leaving our market relatively open to the Chinese as it is now.

We make an enormous mistake to close off our trade relationship. We make a mistake indeed also for the people of Hong Kong whom we claim we are trying to protect. Instead, what we will do is to deny the use of Hong Kong as an entrepot for China, and therefore only increase the uneasiness and concern of the people of Hong Kong.

Our friends in the business community have also pointed out that the strongest advocates of reform in China have been the provincial governments of south China. Those are the ones that are going to be most hurt if we foolishly, frivolously, improvidently and counterproductively pass the resolution of the distinguished gentleman from New York.

Mr. Chairman, I urge defeat of the resolution.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 four minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCHULZE], a member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. SCHULZE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of House Joint Resolution 647, and in opposition to granting most-favored-nation trading status for the People's Republic of China.

MFN trade benefits are reserved by law for countries that maintain or are moving toward free and open emigration policies. China's policy was never free and open, and has become even more restrictive since the Tiananmen Square massacre. On this basis alone, China's MFN status should be revoked.

First, China's Constitution does not even address the issue of the right of its citizens to emigrate. A May 1990 Library of Congress report states—and I quote:

> That Chinese citizens do not enjoy such a right under the Constitution, given the fact that it does not even accord them the right to freedom of residence.

Such a protection was guaranteed under the 1954 Constitution, but removed from the 1975, 1978 and 1982 Constitution, but removed from the 1975, 1978 and 1982 Constitutions.

On June 19, 1989, 2 weeks after Tiananmen, all previously issued exit permits and passports were simply invalidated by the Chinese Government. Then, reapplication and reissuance procedures were made more stringent to help police screen and apprehend suspected prodemocracy movement supporters.

Next, there are the two reports—a new requirement since Tiananmen—which must be filled out by exit permit and passport applicants. These reports describe the applicant's performance during Tiananmen and are expected to be confessional in nature. As confessional reports are leading to imprisonment, torture, and execution, rather than permission to leave China, this procedure is yet another way for the Chinese police to persecute prodemocracy supporters. Further, it clearly hampers free emigration and makes a mockery of our trade law.

The May Library of Congress report also notes the dramatic decrease of approvals of visa applications in Beijing and Shanghai. According to this report—and I quote: "The rate of rejection is the worst it has been in a long time." Between January and March of 1990, some 19,512 citizens of Beijing and Shanghai applied to leave the country. Only 15,085 people were granted approval to go abroad, which means that close to 25 percent were denied permission. Let me repeat—The rate of rejection of visa applications is the worst it has been in a long time. Do we really want to reward China for this?

And, how about the so-called cultivation fee that must be paid to the Government by students wishing to go abroad for self-financed graduate studies? Given that this fee amounts to what the average Chinese college graduate earns over 8 years, this obviously precludes free movement and open emigration.

Clearly, China's overall emigration policy contradicts freedom of emigration requirements set forth in our statutes even worse, China's harsh tactics simply do not reflect a nation that even cares about having a Jackson-Vanik consistent policy.

You will hear some people credit China for filling its annual United States immigration quota allotment. However, given that China has 1.1 billion inhabitants, filling a 20,000 immigrant visa quota is hardly proof of a free and open emigration policy.

In fact, having over one billion people allows the Chinese Government to keep pro democracy supporters imprisoned at home, while permitting less strident and relatively innocuous citizens to leave China. Then, ruthless Chinese leaders turn to the United States and say: "See, we filled your quota allotment. This proves we have free and open emigration." For the sake of those continuing their fight for freedom and democracy in China, I hope and pray that you, my colleagues, can see right through this.

We must pass this motion of disapproval and convince the Chinese leadership that Tiananmen Square, and the harsh emigration policies that keep the horror of Tiananmen alive, have not been forgotten in America.

Even if the President vetoes this measure, and we fail to override, at least the Chinese Government will understand that the ground it stands on in the eyes of Americans is very, very shaky. That is precisely the message Chinese leaders must be forced to see, and the kind of leverage we need to exert.

Please, in the name of democracy in China, in the words of our own 4th of July speeches and out of respect for those fighting to achieve it, vote for House Joint Resolution 647.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ALEXANDER].

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the committee chairman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this resolution which changes the most-favored-nation trade status of the People's Republic of China. In my judgment, it is not in the best interests of our Nation to distance ourselves from the Chinese just as they are emerging from a 40-year transition from a feudal society ruled by emperors to a modern state governed by pluralism. Time is required for such sweeping revolutions.

Like all freedom-loving Americans, I watched the carnage in Tiananmen Square last year. It repulsed me, the same as I am sure it appalled most Americans. That kind of brutality brings forth an emotional response—the complete rejection of China's authoritarian regime.

But President Bush's policy is a more reasoned one. I don't often agree with the President, but he is correct in his position toward China. His experience as the first American Ambassador to China and his role in the normalization of relations between the two countries has taught him the value of continuing dialog and commerce with the People's Republic of China.

One must visit China in order to fully understand the importance of this relationship. About 10 years ago, I had the opportunity to travel to the People's Republic of China on four separate occasions. Prior to my travel, I had little or no knowledge of the orient. When I arrived there, I found it such a contrast to the Untied States that I was reminded of the statement by Mark Twain that "East is East and West is West."

The American Revolution set the western world on a road toward democracy pretty quickly. China's revolution has taken a lot longer. In 1949, the Chinese first turned to communism as a vehicle for breaking with the corrupt and obsolete feudal regime that prevented China from entering the twentieth century.

A few decades later, they recognized the failure of communism—long before the Soviet Union—and turned toward the West to embrace a market-oriented economy.

But we must recognize after living under a feudal system for thousands of years, China cannot change overnight. Ten years, twenty years, or even fifty years is just a blink of the eye in Chinese history.

The Chinese are good business people, and some of their economic ventures over the past decade have been profitable for both the People's Republic of China and American companies. However, the Chinese have had little experience with the ideals of a democratic society. Their contact with American businesspeople, teachers, and public officials gives them exposure to the economic and political ways of the West.

China needs time to develop a political system that is more compatible with the values we subscribe to in democratic societies. The events in Tiananmen Square were tragic, but they did not shut the door on political transformation in China. It is in the best interest of both the United States and those pushing for change in China for us to maintain communications, to keep the door open for trade and dialog with the People's Republic of China. That opening will nourish these seeds of freedom that were sown during the last decade.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN], a member of the Committee of Foreign Affairs who has been very active in this for many years.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the resolution offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON]. And I want to commend him for his continuous outstanding leadership in calling attention to the atrocities in the People's Republic of China and Tibet. House Joint Resolution 647 calls for the disapproval of the recommendation of the President to extend nondiscriminatory treatment—most-favored-nation treatment—to the products of the People's Republic of China.

Mr. Chairman, the matter before us is not complex—it poses three questions that lead us to the same conclusion.

Question No. 1: Do we want business as usual with a country that has recently attempted to flagrantly violate the embargo against Iraq by entering into a secret deal to sell it 7 tons of a rare chemical lithium hydride, that, according to a recent Washington Post article, will enable it to make atom and hydrogen bombs, fuel for ballistic missiles and process poison gas?

Question No. 2: More than 150,000 American men and women are in the Saudi desert, a great many of them no more than 18 years old. Do we want business as usual with a nation that would turn its resources against them?

Question No. 3: The People's Republic of China has occupied Tibet for 40 years. The reports coming out of Tibet are grim. Tibetans are being shot at the border trying to come out. According to Asia Watch, the Chinese authorities have institutionalized a policy of merciless Tibetan repression. In a world adrift in violent so-called liberation movements, the Dalai Lama, a man of peace and the winner of the 1989 Nobel Peace Prize, has told his followers to pursue the path of nonviolence. Will we abandon this man of peace?

I hope my colleagues response to these questions is a loud "No." I know my colleagues understand the seriousness of what it means to continue to support the People's Republic of China.

If war breaks out in the Persian Gulf and there are American casualties, what do we say to our loved ones when they ask you why it was so important to grant most-favored-nation status to China? To a nation, supplying weapons and chemcials to our ememy—Saddam Hussein.

As far as the economic side of things are concerned, those of us here who sought severe sanctions in the past were told that the prodemocracy movement in the People's Republic of China and Tibet would be jeopardized and that the economic reforms and our opening up to the People's Republic of China had in fact had much to do with the movement. However, if this is true, then why aren't these same voices now telling us to block most-favored-nation status? After all the Wall Street Journal, the New York Times, Business Week, the Far Eastern Economic Review, the Washington Post, and other authoritative sources tell us that authorities in Beijing have recentralized banking, credit, production planning, material allocation, foreign trade and other important elements in the ecomony.

Accordingly, I urge my colleagues to support this measure to close the loop hole that will allow business as usual with the butchers of Tiananmen Square and the oppressors of Tibet.

Mr. RUSSO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOSI].

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I commend the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] for bringing this resolution to the floor today. By his hard work and his leadership on this issue he has given us an opportunity once again in the House of Representatives to stand up as a bastion of democracy throughout the world.

Last year, at the beginning of this year when we had our fight to override the veto on the Chinese students legislation, the House of Representatives stood alone in sending a signal to the world that human rights were important to us and that people who fight for democracy will never be forgotten by us.

Mr. Chairman, we spend a great deal of money sending a message by Voice of America into China. When we do that, we lift people's hopes. Why do we do that if when they respond and speak out for democracy we then would turn our backs on them and say, "In a few years things will be okay and the government may change and trade will make it happen"?

Well, to those who say that trade will make it happen, I must say that I have not been one who has advocated isolating China. That has not been my goal. But I do not want the occasion to pass without responding to that, by saying for the past 10 years we have traded with China. In 1989 China crushed its children, its students in the streets simply because they had a dream, simply because they spoke up for democracy.

Frankly, Mr. Chairman, I thought it was going to be very difficult to come to this floor to disagree with the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, a person whose policies I support and for whom I have enormous support. But I shudder to hear him say that China had made progress since Tiananmen Square, that they had lifted martial law.

I thought have we not educated the Congress and our colleagues enough to know that they have not lifted martial law? Everybody who knows anything about China knows that was cosmetics, and bad cosmetics at that.

But there are other reasons why we should be denying Most Favored Nation status to China. They are based on our own policy and not really exlusively on the events of the past year.

First of all, most-favored-nation status goes to those countries which have a free market economy can only work in China if the Beijing Government allows it to.

Over the past year, however, Beijing has demonstrated its intention to weaken the free market and to silence calls for political reform.

MFN is not supposed to be extended to centralized economies unless that country has freedom of emigration. We are very strict about it when it comes to the Soviet Union.

Why is China any different?

We say to the Soviet Union, "Unless you have freedom to emigrate and not only in practice but that that freedom to emigrate is codified by your law, then you are not entitled to Most Favored Nation status," for China. There are those who say if we are to harsh with China, they may unilaterally cut off MFN with us. I do not think so. They have a $6 billion trade advantage in trade with us this year, moving up to $10 billion with the United States.

They enjoy the benefits of our trade. We should at least be able to live up to our principles.

Mr. Chairman, more on this debate later as we proceed into the other legislation affecting our trade.

I want to close, though, by specifically praising Mr. SOLOMON for his leadership on this issue, and also my colleagues who have come to the floor today to speak out for some consistency in our policy when it comes to most-favored-nation status.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished minority leader, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL].

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this resolution which would deny extension of most-favored-nation trade status to China.

I do so not because I condone human rights practices of the Chinese Government. Those practices are indeed reprehensible. They fly in the face of the movement toward freedom and democracy which has swept across most of the other Communist-bloc nations around the world. If I thought the denial of MFN status would bring about democracy in China, I would be leading the charge in favor of the resolution.

Unfortunately, history shows that when the United States does something unilaterally like this, it very seldom works. It may make us feel good at the time, but it does not change the other country's policy. Only unless there is a coordinated worldwide action is there any chance for success, and there is certainly none of that in this case.

What would happen, instead, if we deny MFN status is that we would deprive ourselves of about 6 billion dollars worth of business with China.

I have maybe a parochial interest in that because I have one of the really fine firms making the finest heavy machinery mining equipment in the world in Caterpillar Tractor Co. It averages maybe between $50 million a year in sales to China. That accounts for about 500 jobs currently.

It is noteworthy too that Caterpillar sales quadrupled after MFN first went into effect back in 1980, when we were expecting great things from China. As the distinguished gentleman from Arkansas pointed out, when we were there, there was much more of a move, much earlier, than the Soviet Union toward a private—or at least some semblance of a—market economy as distinguished from that of the Soviet or Communist system.

Mr. Chairman, MFN status indicates stability. Stability is essential for a good trading relationship. Every time the United States changes its trade policy for political purposes, we undermine our position as a reliable trading partner. As such, we not only lose business with the nation in question, but we also weaken our credibility overall, and the tragedy of it all is that other nations then come in and fill the void, and then we are cutting off our nose to spite our face.

Once markets are lost, it is hard to get them back. We imposed sanctions against the Soviet Union in the early 1980's as punishment for its policies against Poland; again, I must refer to parochial interests at home because Caterpillar lost the Russian market to Komatsu of Japan which sold pipe layers in abundance. I nearly lost my election because of the number of Caterpillar workers, 15,000, that were laid off, not because of that one sale, but because of the economic conditions at the time. But now we have better relations with the Russians, but Caterpillar has yet to recoup that market.

Now there is yet another reason to extend MFN status for China. The worst thing we can do for the cause of freedom in China is to isolate Chinese democrats from the influence of the United States. In isolation they can be smothered by the Communist hard liners. But if we stay in contact, the cause of democracy will be strengthened.

I expect that we will eventually see a new set of Chinese leaders and a greater respect for human rights in China, regardless of what we do on MFN, but if we deny ourselves the Chinese market now, it is likely to take much longer to get back into the ball game, so to speak, and we, the United States, are again going to be the big losers.

So, I would certainly want to encourage opposition to this resolution, but I am going to include with my remarks a letter from the Secretary of State, but I think one paragraph might very well be cited here in which he says:

A permanent member of the U.N. Security Council, China provided essential support for resolutions condemning Iraq and authorizing a trade embargo. China is also playing a constructive role in reaching a peaceful settlement in Cambodia. Actions which threaten important Chinese economic interests risk weakening Chinese cooperation on broader issues of interest to the U.S.

So, I think, as I indicated, I would hope Members would join some of us in opposing this ill-timed resolution.

The letter in its entirety is as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington, DC, October 16, 1990.

Hon. ROBERT H. MICHEL,
House of Representatives.

DEAR BOB: I am writing to express the Administration's strong concerns about two House bills dealing with China's MFN status, H.J. Res. 647 and H.R. 4939. If enacted, these bills could seriously damage U.S. economic, human rights and other foreign policy interests, including our interest in reaching a peaceful settlement in the Persian Gulf and Cambodia.

The withdrawal of China's MFN status, as mandated in H.J. Res 647, would have severe consequences for U.S. business, those Chinese who are working for a moderizing China open to the West, and Hong Kong's capitalist, free market economy, which depends heavily on the continuation of U.S.-China trade and investment. MFN provides the basis for everyday trade and not concessional treatment. It is essential for maintaining the commercial link in our bilateral relationship. The most powerful means we have for promoting positive change in China are to maintain the broadest possible range of people-to-people contacts. MFN helps us do that. For these reasons, if Congress passed H.J. Res. 647, the bill would be vetoed.

The Administration also opposes the enactment of H.R. 4939. We share the human rights objectives of the bill's authors. We are concerned, however, that explicit public linkage of MFN to human rights would harden China's posture and make it more difficult to achieve further progress. Our current approach has yielded significant positive results, including the lifting of material law, the release of almost 900 political detainees, and the depature of Fang Lizhi and his family. At a time when political tensions appear to be easing in China, it is all the more important for the President to have flexibility in determining how best to encourage further progress.

H.R. 4939 would also add new uncertainty to an already difficult commercial relationship with China. Additional MFN criteria invitably place U.S. companies at a competitive disadvantage with competitors in Europe, Japan and other industrial countries, which do not extend MFN on such a conditional basis. Furthermore, uncertainty about the U.S.-China commercial relationship would affect confidence in Hong Kong, where 50,000-60,000 residents are emigrating each year because of concerns about the territory's future.

The amendments to H.R. 4939 proposed by Representatives Pelosi, Wolf, Porter and Miller would only worsen the impact of the bill. The Administration opposes all four of them. If H.R. 4939 was made more restrictive by the addition of any of these amendments, the bill would be vetoed.

While aimed at addressing trade and human rights issues, H.J. Res. 647 and H.R. 4939 have implications for U.S. global interests as well. A permanent member of the U.N Security Council, China provided essential support for resolutions condemning Iraq and authorizing a trade embargo. China is also playing a constructive role in reaching a peaceful settlement in Cambodia. Actions which threaten important Chinese economic interests risk weakening Chinese cooperation on broader issues of interest to the U.S.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES A. BAKER III.

Mr. SOLOMON, Mr. Chairman, I only have 2 minutes left, and I think I have the right to close, so I would reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] has 2 minutes remaining, and the Chair is advised by the Parliamentarian that the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS] has the right to close since he is representing the Chair of the committee that reported the bill to the floor.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] for yielding, and, given the fact that the administration has not agreed yet to any conditions on extension of MFN to China at this time, I reluctantly rise in support of the gentleman's resolution.

Mr. RUSSO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT].

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, after World War II, we gave the Japanese and the Germans tours of our factories. We then gave them the blueprints and the photographs to take home with them. We did not stop there. We gave them big loans, and then listen to this: We later would forgive those loans. Free. Now Japan and Germany have the factories and the jobs, and America has photographs and unemployment.

What is wrong. And where is this trade policy.

The only most-favored-nation status that should be debated at this day and age in America is the battleship called USS America, period. Not China.

Now I heard about opening up all these new markets with China. Who is kidding who? They pay wages of 17 cents an hour. That is like saying to the American corporations, "Come on over here and hire the Chinese. Leave America, like you've done with all the other tax laws of this country."

Mr. Chairman, this trade policy is like a revolving door; foreign imports in, American jobs out.

I am for this bill, and I am not for any more most-favored-nation talk at all, unless it is talk about America.

In addition, I would advise Congress to maybe think about that before the battleship America gets swallowed up on some rough seas. We cannot control the depths of that ocean and the power of those waves, but we could have our battleship in good order, and I think it is time to start thinking that way.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LEACH], a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, while China has recently taken steps to improve relations with the United States and the international community, such as by cooperating on Cambodia and Iraq and in allowing leading dissident Fang Lizhi to leave the country, all Americans nevertheless remain morally outraged by the wanton brutality of Tiananmen. Likewise, we are all profoundly troubled with the high level of internal repression maintained by Beijing. By putting the brakes on reform, China's leaders have disappointed President Bush, the U.S. Congress, and the American people. As importantly, they have profoundly disserved the people of China.

Thus the larger issue confronting Congress in the debate over the extension of most-favored-nation status [MFN] to the People's Republic of China is not whether the aim of American policy should be to help promote a humanely governed China that plays a constructive role in world affairs. We are all agreed on that basic premise. The issue is one of means, not ends.

But here on Capitol Hill the question of how to achieve U.S. objectives has become symbolized for some by the President's decision to again extend the principle of nondiscrimination in trade, misdescribed by the misnomer "most-favored-nation," to China.

Extension of MFN status to China does not confer on Beijing a new and extraordinary benefit. China has enjoyed MFN trade status for a decade. Fully 178 other countries, including apartheid South Africa, all share this same status. In fact, the United States has never used revocation of MFN as the linchpin instrument of its global human rights policy. Rather, it has been a sanction of last resort.

Here it should be clearly understood that the sanctions imposed against China, such as the suspension of arms exports and the restrictions on lending from international financial institutions, are still in force. And the international free market also continues to apply the functional equivalent of economic sanctions against Beijing, as tourism and outside investment diminishes from a cataract to a trickle.

If the Congress narrowly looks at the precision of the Jackson-Vanik amendment and its emphasis on freedom of emigration, as well as the legislative history relating to the importance of observing fundamental human rights, a credible legal case could be made to terminate MFN.

On the other hand, if we examine the overarching purpose of the law, which is to move oppressive, nonmarket societies toward greater openness, then one would have grave doubts about revoking MFN at this time.

As President Bush has emphasized, however much we may be dissatisfied with the pace of reform in China, nobody wants to punish the Chinese people for the excesses of their government. Yet termination of MFN for China would have the perverse effect of most severely impacting on those elements we most want to support: the politically progressive and free enterprise sectors of China's society and economy.

Politicians in Washington too frequently assume that a bettering of world relations is likely to stem from government-to-government ties. Actually, businessmen and women, unelected people of commerce, are doing more to advance American values and to bring the world closer together than elected officials.

In an historically closed society like Communist China, the opening up of the economy has tended to open up politics, by importing Western values as well as people, while revoking MFN might close Beijing's door down even more firmly on political reform.

Indeed, revocation of MFN at this time would be counterproductive virtually across the board. It would torpedo the economy and scuttle the foundering confidence of Hong Kong. The 10 billion dollars' worth of American investments and exports to China would be jeopardized. In addition, our action would be dangerously unilateral. After all, no American ally is prepared to follow our lead.

In an era when the anxieties of geopolitical rivalry are becoming supplanted by the rigors of commercial competition, a quixotic policy of economic self-abnegation in the world's most populous country would appear to be of extraordinarily dubious strategic interest to the United States.

Revocation of MFN would also undermine the American objective of building a durable framework of relations with Beijing, whose foundations may yet be preserved at China's current leadership finally passes from the scene.

After all, if one asks what has differentiated American diplomacy toward China from others over the last 100 years it is that, with one abberrational break during the height of the cold war, we were the country that always stood for the open door to China and the Chinese people. As embodied in the historic open door notes, that policy meant fair trade with China and not letting a Western power be dominant or a group of Western powers be dominant. To the extent the open door resonates now in American foreign policy, it means trying to turn out China in a Chinese kind of way.

If we retract MFN, we will be replacing our "open door" policy with a "bolted door" approach, unilaterally opening China to the dominant influence of others or moving the world's largest country in an autarkic direction.

With regard to the ongoing power struggle in Beijing and the future of reform, we cannot confidently predict how revocation of MFN would affect Chinese leadership dynamics. But we might want to reflect soberly on one quotation from Mao Zedong. Chairman Mao once said, "To have an enemy in front of us, to have tension, is to our advantage."

In other words, as both Moscow and Washington have come to understand, foreign economic pressure on China strengthens the nationalist credentials of the Communist regime in Beijing and helps engender a xenophobic reaction on the mainland.

It is an indisputable fact of international politics that the United States does not possess the power to unilaterally compel progressive change in China. But it is a profound question of judgment whether it is wise for this Congress—perhaps seized by institutional hubris or forgetting that America is strongest when it respects the limits of its power—to take action that appears to validate hard-line Chinese propaganda against us.

In this regard, some critics of United States policy are advocating a "worse is better" approach to China. That is, ignoring George Kennan's axiom that "the greatest law of human history is its unpredictability," they glibly suggest the United States ought to strive to make things worse for Beijing so the Chinese people will overthrow the current regime and presumably be better off.

An historical analogy of some relevance here relates to a revolutionary circumstance in 1905, when a self-styled vanguard elite—led by Vladimir Lenin—gleefully agitated in favor of exacerbating the economic chaos in Russia because worse would be better for the Russian people. Russia was of course then governed by an autocratic, incompetent tsarist regime, for which few Americans brooked even a scintilla of sympathy.

But the question is, did it get better for the Russian people? For the last 75 years, worse got "worser" for the peoples of the Soviet Union. And so the Congress must ask itself: do we advance the march of human progress in China by deliberately making conditions worse for its 1.1 billion people and, in particular, worse for those free enterprise elements driving Chinese modernism?

In China today a taste for free enterprise economics has wetted Chinese appetites for a taste for free political advocacy. Modern economics is the basis for a profound challenge to medieval politics. Let's not reverse gears and allow medieval politics to become mirrored again in medieval economics, jeopardizing Chinese and world living standards.

Finally, and importantly, for those concerned with geopolitics, the Chinese have begun to move in an impressive, progressive direction, cooperating with the United States an Cambodia and in our Persian Gulf strategy, both circumstances involving security council cooperation where the Chinese hold veto power.

It would not be an exaggeration to suggest that straining United States-Chinese relations at this critical geostrategic juncture where the President wants to advance a "new world order" jeopardizes the Asian lives in Cambodia and United States lives in the Persian Gulf.

In addition, in recent months China has moved to seek normalcy, more pacific relations with Indonesia, Saudi Arabia, Singapore, the ASEAN alliance, and in particular has reversed diplomatic gears and begun to seek a diplomatic solution to the Spratly Islands dispute.

These foreign policy initiatives can not be ignored in the context of this resolution, however they, too, have enormous human rights implications.

I therefore support the President's extension of MFN to China not because it may be perceived to vindicate Chinese leadership, but because it helps the people against that very leadership. America's door to China mustn't be allowed to be slammed shut by a narrow ideological gerontocracy.

The President has made it abundantly clear that he would veto this legislation if passed. I urge its defeat.

Mr. RUSSO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. YATRON], and I understand the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] was to yield him 1 minute, also.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to my good friend and former chairman of my subcommittee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. YATRON].

□ 1140

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlemen for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I strongly support the passage of House Joint Resolution 647. I commend the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] and the other sponsors for their leadership on this initiative.

Mr. Chairman, this is one of the most important pieces of human rights legislation we will consider this session. Since Iraq's invasion of Kuwait, China has escaped public scrutiny of its repressive human rights record. This resolution sends a clear message to Beijing that the American people have not forgotten Tiananmen Square or the massive human rights violations that followed.

For those who contend that denying most-favored-nation status will cause China to retreat into isolation, thereby making it difficult to promote reforms, I submit that our current policy of economic engagement has not deterred China from being one of the worst human rights violators in the world.

Mr. Chairman, this resolution says economic reforms must go hand in hand with democratic reforms. As the chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Subcommittee on Human Rights and International Organizations, I believe the passage of House Joint Resolution 647 would be entirely consistent with the policies our country has advocated over the years with respect to other human rights violators including the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe. In every one of those cases, U.S. policy was a success.

Mr. Chairman, anything less than continued economic pressure against the dictatorship in Beijing would be a blow to those who aspire to freedom in China, and I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. HOUGHTON].

Mr. HOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, this is the classic purist versus the practical argument. If there were not a human rights issue, there would be no argument at all. So the human rights issue is the key, and the question is how to get at it.

The United States has gotten at it in a variety of ways. Arms exports have been suspended; high level contracts are restricted; World Bank lending is down; high tech exports have been screened and are down; and deferred departure date for Chinese nationals to the United States has been extended.

There is one simple fact that we are dealing with here; there is a constant, regular, preordained history of failure using trade sanctions as an individual nation, unless the whole world does it.

A perfect example is South Africa. Unilaterally it does not work, unless the whole world does it, and they do. As far as Iraq is concerned, the reason they are working there is because everyone does it.

In the early 1980's, sanctions on exports of oil drilling took place against the Soviet Union. They just bought from the Europeans.

After Afghanistan, the same thing happened with agriculture. They just brought elsewhere.

MFN is a trade term, nondiscrimination. If we cut this, the Chinese cut us out. They want to deal with us. They do not want to deal with the Japanese, but they will.

The question is how much leverage does this give us with them? It gives us none, the reason being that we do not have anything special. They can buy anything they want from any other place in the world, and that will end our relationship with them and do us naught in our whole relationship, with an extremely important long-term friend.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GUARINI].

Mr. GUARINI. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to the resolution to disapprove the extension of most favored nation status to China and I am talking about what is best for America.

With one-quarter of the world's population, China is an enormous market for the United States. It is our 10th largest trading partner. Since most favored nation was granted to China in 1980, our trade with China has grown fourfold—reaching $18 billion in 1989.

Hundreds of United States companies have invested billions of dollars in China. Their presence in the coastal provinces and in cities such as Shanghai has brought jobs for millions of Chinese workers, and fostered a growing spirit of entrepreneurship.

Revoking most-favored-nation status for China would not hurt the conservative elements of the Communist Party that are responsible for the human rights atrocities at Tiananmen Square. Rather, it would strengthen the repressive factions who have not supported an open door policy. It would hurt the very elements in China's society that have embraced economic reform.

If most favored nation were revoked, China would turn inward. In a closed society, there is little opportunity for reform. Through trade with China, we allow the exchange of ideas that lead to reform. We bring our countries closer together, we build greater trust, and we understand. We gain greater influence over political, economic and human rights policies.

If you look at Eastern Europe, those countries—Poland, Hungary, Czechoslovakia—which had the strongest ties with the West—were the first countries to shed their Communist shackles and embrace economic reforms. China will do likewise if we are patient.

We cannot dismiss lightly the atrocities which occurred at Tiananmen Square. But we should not be moving to isolate China. Rather, we should watch China more closely. We should make the extension of most-favored-nation conditional on the protection of human rights.

I strongly oppose this disapproval resolution, and I support the passage of H.R. 4939. That legislation conditions the extension of most-favored-nation status on China's reversal of its past pattern of human rights violations, the end of martial law, the easing of restrictions on the press, and the release of prisoners detained during the nonviolent protests in Tiananmen Square. These are the conditions that we should be supporting, not the end of most favored nation which would remove all of the leverage that we have to encourage the protection of human rights, and the development of freer economies and more democratic political systems.

I urge you to oppose this resolution.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AUCOIN].

Mr. AUCOIN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I urge the defeat of the Solomon resolution. We can never as Americans forgive the atrocities of Tiananmen Square, but we serve no constructive purpose today, my friends, by passing the Solomon amendment.

This resolution would hurt those who have the greatest stake in United States-China relations, the individuals and the businesses in southern China, which are the most reform-minded in that country. There are reform minded peoples who yearn for a better day, and I think we do them no service by playing into the hands of the hard liners, and I think the Solomon amendment unwittingly would.

Second, the gentleman from New York has made a very good point, and I want to repeat it for Members today, as someone who led the first Members from the House on a trade mission to China in 1979. The point the gentleman from New York made was simply this: if you look at what has happened in Eastern Europe, it was those countries who had the closest economic link with the United States that were first to throw off communism and totalitarian rule. You cannot introduce free market economics without liberalizing the political system of a country. Europe has taught us that; 1989 was a lesson in history on this point, and we will be breaking that lesson of history if we cut off relations with China in this way. Do not use this chopping block. Do not take this step. Defeat the Solomon amendment.

Mr. RUSSO. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RUSSO] is recognized for up to 3 minutes.

Mr. RUSSO. Mr. Chairman, China does not deserve MFN status because of its restrictive emigration policies. Asia Watch and Amnesty International have both said that its emigration policy has become even more restrictive since the massacre last year at Tiananmen Square.

The Chinese Constitution does not guarantee freedom of emigration. It is ironic that this administration has asked the Soviet Union to codify an emigration law before it is granted MFN status. What does Gorbachev have to do to get MFN status, massacre his own citizens in Red Square like the Chinese did?

That is wrong. That is wrong.

To this day the Chinese Government continues to carry out secret executions of political prisoners. There are 10,000 or more political prisoners now being held in Chinese jails. There are numerous procedural and monetary barriers to the emigration of Chinese students and other groups. One requirement, a so-called cultivation fee, would require students to pay the equivalent of 8 years of pay in order to go abroad for self-financed graduate studies. That is how much they want their students to emigrate to the Western World.

My colleagues, religious persecution continues. Buddhist monks and nuns are being imprisoned and expelled.

China uses the 20 million prisoners in its jails to provide forced, unpaid labor to Chinese businesses, and some of the fruits of their labor reach American ports.

By supporting this corrupt regime in Beijing we tacitly endorse this practice.

I ask my colleagues to vote in favor of this resolution of disapproval, and I commend my good friends, the gentlelady from California [Ms. PELOSI], the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON], and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARKEY] for a job well done.

Mr. Chairman, I yield whatever time I have left to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARKEY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARKEY] is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, let me make this point: The Jackson-Vanik provision worked in the Soviet Union. It contributed mightily to bringing the Soviet economy to its knees and its political system to its senses.

Even today in China they occupy the country of Tibet, committing atrocities that far exceed anything that the Soviet Union ever did in Lithuania. Even today the Chinese are still engaging in relations with the Iraqis, helping them in their chemical weapons program. We cannot allow that to continue. They have had an ongoing program of cooperation with the Iraqis in the development of the Islamic nuclear bomb which could be used against all civilization, the Israelis and the American soldiers.

As the gentleman from Illinois pointed out, they have continued to repress their country, executing over 500 people just in the last year for political purposes.

This is not liberal-conservative, it is not Democratic-Republican. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] is correct, and he should deserve and receive our support on the floor today.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Chairman, I intend to close on our side and I reserve the balance of my time to close debate.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTON].

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of House Joint Resolution 647.

Over two centuries ago, Patrick Henry uttered the phrase for which he is most famous, "Give me Liberty or give me Death." In June 1989, thousands of Chinese students asked for liberty. The Communists gave them death.

Since that time, the Chinese Government has made a show of complying with international pressure to correct its system of human rights violations. The release of Fang Lizi, the Government's cooperation with and support of United Nations sanctions against Iraq, and the release of some prisoners have been calculated efforts at convincing the international community to return to business as usual with China.

But it is precisely because China has returned to business as usual in its internal affairs that it should not be allowed to return to business as usual in its international affairs. Just last month, a total of 1,508 suspects were rounded up by Beijing public security personnel under the pretext that they were trying to sabotage the Asian games. Of these, 250 were college students. Additionally, large numbers of public security personnel were sent onto Beijing University and Qinghua University to report on student activity.

Beijing is trying to appease Western opinion by meting out lenient treatment to well-known intellectuals, but its basic policy of using strong-armed tactics to snuff out dissent remains intact.

Until the current Chinese leadership can show that it is improving its record of gross human rights violations, I do not believe they deserve most-favored-nation trade privileges. I urge support for H.R. 647.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] is recognized for 1½ minutes.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Chairman, let me just say that China enjoys a $6 billion trade surplus with this country, which will move to $10 billion before next year is out. Revoking MFN status to China does not stop trade with this country. It simply reduces the favored treatment that they get.

Do Members know who enjoys favored-nation treatment with the United States of America? Iraq. I have a bill in now, would you believe it?, to revoke favored-nation status for Iraq.

We have an obligation to uphold the law of this land, which is the Jackson-Vanik amendment, and by voting yes for this resolution we are simply delaying most-favored-nation status to China for 6 or 8 months. If we do not think that will get their attention, Mr. Chairman, nothing will.

I would just like to say to the gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOSI], that she was a tremendous help in getting this legislation to the floor, and we should pay special tribute to her and to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCHULZE] and certainly my good friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. MARKEY], who has been so active in support of human rights all of these years.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SOLOMON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding and congratulate him.

This is something that the Members of the House should be able to support on a bipartisan, nonpartisan basis, continuing along with the Jackson-Vanik tradition that has worked so well in the Soviet Union. Now it is time for us to turn attention to China.

Mr. SOLOMON. I thank the gentleman for his statement, and I urge bipartisan support for this resolution.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Chairman, in the time I have remaining, it is not possible to refute all of the things that have been said here on the floor, but they need refuting.

First, on human rights, I take my hat off to no one in this room, in this Congress, or within the sound of my voice on human rights. I am just as prohuman rights as they are. And while most of them were making speeches, I have put my life on the line numerous times for human rights. Let us dismiss that argument.

The whole question is what is best for America and what is best for the world. We cannot expect anybody to improve if we do not ask them to improve.

If we pass the Solomon resolution, all we will do is walk out of China, and there will be no one there to ask them to improve, not a soul. No other Western nation on Earth puts any kind of human rights condition on their trade policy.

As to Jackson-Vanik, I was a Member of Congress, I was a member of the subcommittee that met over there in room 208 with Mr. Vanik when we put Jackson-Vanik together. As recently as 2 days ago, I discussed again with Mr. Vanik what was the intention of his amendment. His amendment dealt entirely with immigration. If Members do not believe me, ask him. He does not support this approach.

I plead with Members to support the President in this stand. The President has said that it is in the best interests of America to waive the Jackson-Vanik provision. Mr. Vanik says that too.

We should move ahead, continue our pressure upon the Chinese, because no one else does and we do. We are severely limiting now all international loans to them. We have strict embargoes on many sensitive products for them. We have quotas on many of the other products, and we are putting pressure on them—economic, financial, and social pressure. The Chinese are responding. They have supported every move that we have made in the United Nations in the Iraqi situation.

There is no evidence at all, and I challenge anybody to say to the contrary, there is no evidence at all that the Chinese are helping the Iraqis.

Mr. AUCOIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIBBONS. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. AUCOIN. Mr. Chairman, is it not true that Human Rights Watch and Asia Watch, the two human rights organizations, oppose the Solomon amendment and support the Pease bill? Is that not correct?

Mr. GIBBONS. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. AUCOIN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. GIBBONS. We have the interests of America at heart—what is best for human rights, what is best for America. The action of the President I think is best. China does not measure up to any of our standards.

But unfortunately China's history has been a tragic one. For more than 6,000 years they have never had human rights. Most of them do not know what it is. They can only learn it from us, because we are the only Western power that insists upon better human rights, and if we pass Solomon today and it becomes law, then Americans will be thrown out of China. There will be no migration of students from China to this country.

The American Government will tell you, if you ask them, that every Chinese student who can come in under our own quota has been admitted to this country. There is no diminution of their ability to come to this country and to study and to learn and to emigrate.

I was with Mr. Vanik when he talked with the Chinese leaders about his amendment, and they did not say anything other than, "Mr. Vanik, how many Chinese will you take?" The reason why we cannot get Chinese into this country is not because of the Chinese Government, it is because of our own national policy that prohibits them from coming in here.

Vote "no".

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. BILBRAY].

Mr. BILBRAY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the resolution. I always remember those kids in that square, and I hope everybody else does.

Mrs. LLOYD. Madam Chairman, I rise in support of House Joint Resolution 647 which disapproved the extension of most-favored-nation status to China.

Since the Tiananmen Square massacre, the administration has sought to avoid confrontation with China. China should not be isolated, the administration has argued, by rash actions on the part of the United States. An isolated China would only make matters worse. The administration adopted a policy which sought to softly coax the Chinese Government away from the harsh, repressive policies adopted in the aftermath of Tiananmen Square. The United States has spoken softly for over a year now and little has changed in China; it is time to brandish a stick.

The Chinese Government continues its war against those who sought greater democracy and freedom in China. Political education camps established by the Chinese authorities to reeducate the protesting students remain in place. Thousands of people remain imprisoned without charges. Chinese students living in the United States are still being harassed. The pattern of gross violations of human rights that began following the Tiananmen Square massacre has not ended.

Unfortunately, rather than recognize that real change is not occuring in China, the administration has pointed to cosmetic changes to suggest that United States policy is achieving results. For example, in December 1989, the Chinese Goverment announced that it would permit a new Voice of America correspondent to replace the one expelled earlier in the year. The administration followed this important reversal in Chinese policy with a decision to waive sanctions that prohibited Export-Import Bank lending to China. One month later, the Chinese Government imposed new and tighter restrictions on foreign journalists. What is the significance of permitting a Voice of America reporter to enter China if the reporter is prohibited from doing his job?

This pattern of one step forward and two steps back continues to this day. Clearly, the Chinese Government is not responding to the gentle persuasion of the present United States policy. It is time to get tough with China. A clear, unequivocal message must be sent to the Chinese Government that the United States will not tolerate continued human rights abuses in China and that the repression of those who seek greater democracy and freedom in China must come to an end. Refusing to grant China the privilege of most-favored-nation status will send just this type of signal. Just as importantly, refusing to grant China most-favored-nation status will signal to the people of China that the United States strongly supports their struggle for democracy and freedom and opposes those who seek to deny the Chinese people these basic rights.

Madam Chairman, the time for gentle persuasion and a soft voice is over. Repression in China continues. By refusing to grant China most-favored-nation status, we would be sending the Chinese Government a message that we will no longer tolerate its intolerable behavior.

Madam Chairman, it is time to brandish a stick. I urge my colleagues to support House Joint Resolution 647.

Mr. LANTOS. Madam Chairman, I rise today in very strong support of House Joint Resolution 647, which disapproves the President's waiver of existing freedom of emigration requirements for 1990 and thus grants most-favored-nation [MFN] trade status to the People's Republic of China beginning in July 1991. The effect of adopting this legislation will be to deny MFN trade status to China.

Madam Chairman, I would like to acknowledge the efforts of our colleague from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] in introducing this legislation and working for its passage in the House. My distinguished colleague from Illinois, Congressman JOHN PORTER, who is cochairman with me on the Congressional Human Rights Caucus, introduced other variations on this same legislation to disapprove the President's extension of MFN status to China. I am delighted that the House today will have the opportunity to vote to disapprove the President's decision.

Madam Chairman, President Bush's decision to extend MFN status to Chinese exports was unfortunate and it was wrong. In view of the repeated, willful, and egregious violations of human rights by the octogenarian oligarchy in Beijing, granting MFN to China is contrary to our own democratic principles and will discourage democratic reform in China.

Our Government revoked MFN status for Poland in 1980 for infinitely less serious human rights violations than what were perpetrated in China since the Tiananmen massacre in June 1989. The results of our principled policy toward Poland are obvious now as we see the dramatic democratic change that has taken place there and throughout Eastern Europe.

By extending MFN trade status to China, we are not supporting the Lech Walesas and Vaclav Havels of China. We are not supporting the freedom-loving people who share our democratic values. We are only legitimizing the bankrupt and repressive butchers of Beijing. At a time that freedom and democracy are in the ascendance in Eastern Europe, we are hitching our wagon to a failing star by granting MFN to China.

Madam Chairman, I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this important resolution. The democratic forces in China must know of our strong and steadfast support for their struggle to bring freedom to their country.

Mr. LEVINE of California. Madam Chairman, I rise in strong support of the resolution of my colleague from New York, Mr. SOLOMON, to deny most-favored-nation status to the People's Republic of China.

President Bush's kow-towing to the Chinese leadership has failed to deliver any meaningful improvements in the People's Republic of China. The human rights climate has grown worse, not better.

Its been well over a year since the Tiananmen massacre and still there has been no meaningful improvement in the human rights situation in China. If anything, the situation continues to deteriorate. Untold thousands who participated in the democracy movement remain in prison. Asia Watch reports as many as 10,000 to 30,000 are still jailed, under appalling conditions, for their role in the demonstrations. All reformist government officials have been purged, and a national campaign of repression continues unabated.

The latest outrage was reports that the Chinese just recently sold Iraq large quantities of a chemical used in the manufacture of nuclear weapons and missile fuel. This sale went through in September, in violation of the United Nations sanctions against Bagdad. So much for the vaunted Chinese support for our policy against Saddam Hussein.

Obviously, the so-called sanctions implemented by the President after Tiananmen Square have done nothing, absolutely nothing, to encourage the hard-line Chinese government to change its ways or to make it pay for using lethal force to squelch the democracy movement. All the evidence is in now, and it's clear that the soft touch, conciliatory approach won't work, that it has no change of fostering moderation in the People's Republic. The Chinese have responded to the President's mild response with utmost contempt. I urge my colleagues to recall the words of Jiang Zemin in an interview with Barbara Walters last May: He described the massacre of thousands of demonstrators in Tiananmen Square as "much ado about nothing."

What's more, even the very limited sanctions in place have since been substantially loosened by Presidential waivers to permit Exim financing to China, to allow the export of three telecommunications satellites, and to proceed with the sale of Boeing Jets and even to permit continued work on an upgrade system for Chinese fighter aircraft. The President has also resumed support for World Bank loans and vetoed legislation to protect Chinese students in the United States.

And then, just in case the Beijing leadership didn't get the message that the United States would ignore the killings, repression, and continued persecution of dissenters, the administration called for a renewal of most-favored-nation status for the People's Republic of China in June.

Section 402 of the Trade Act, also known as the Jackson-Vanik amendment, permits the extension of MFN only to nonmarket economies that do not restrict emigration. Clearly, China does not meet that test. Emigration and travel outside of China have always been tightly restricted by the Chinese authorities, and have become substantially more restrictive since the crackdown last year. Passports and exit permits are routinely denied, particularly if there is any evidence, even a false confession extracted under duress, of participation in the democracy movement. Students must now work for 5 years before they may gain permission to study abroad. Anyone caught trying to leave the country may be sentenced to a reeducation camp.

In view of the lack of progress on human rights in China over the past 1½ years, it is also difficult for the administration to argue that a waiver of the Jackson-Vanik emigration requirement will lead to the achievement of freedom of emigration objectives. We've already tried this approach, and it has failed.

We should not permit privileged trading status for the People's Republic of China until the thousands of political prisoners are unconditionally released, freedom of emigration is granted, forced labor is halted, the de facto martial law in Tibet is lifted, and religious and political persecution is stopped.

To do any less would be to condone the continued egregious human rights violations in China, and to further delay any progress toward reform, liberalization, freedom, and democracy for the people of that country.

Mr. LANTOS. Madam Chairman, I rise today in very strong support of H.R. 4939, which requires the President to take into consideration new human rights objectives in deciding whether or not to grant most-favored-nation [MFN] trade status to the People's Republic of China beginning in July 1991.

First, I would like to pay tribute to several of our colleagues in the House who have played a key role in this legislation. The distinguished gentleman from Ohio, Mr. PEASE, has provided excellent leadership on this important issue, and I welcome his approach of establishing in law the human rights conditions that China must meet in order to receive MFN next year.

I would also like to pay tribute to others of our colleagues who have proposed amendments, which I support, that improve and strengthen this bill:

My good friend and neighbor from San Francisco, Ms. PELOSI, who is an executive committee member of the Congressional Human Rights Caucus. Her excellent amendment makes an important contribution in strengthening the human rights conditions of H.R. 4939.

Our colleague from Virginia, Mr. WOLF, who is an executive committee member of the Congressional Human Rights Caucus, whose amendment requires progress toward ending religious persecution in China before MFN can be extended.

My distinguished friend and colleague from Illinois, JOHN PORTER, who is the cochairman with me of the Congressional Human Rights Caucus, has introduced an amendment to assure that democracy and the observance of human rights are conditions that are observed by the People's Republic of China relative to Hong Kong.

And our colleague from the State of Washington, Mr. MILLER, who is also a member of the executive committee of the Congressional Human Rights Caucus, has introduced an amendment providing a list of human rights principles for United States businesses operating in China.

Madam Chairman, I urge the adoption of this significant legislation and adoption of all of these important amendments.

Madam Chairman, the entire world was outraged by the appalling and tragic events that took place in the People's Republic of China last year. The callous disregard of elementary human rights as well as the brutal and vicious attacks against unarmed students has dismayed friends of freedom and democracy around the globe. Furthermore, human rights abuses are rampant in Tibet. Not only does torture and execution of political prisoners continue, but also freedom of the press, free speech, the right of assembly, and freedom of religion are nonexistent.

Existing legislation provides that any Communist country which received most-favored-nation [MFN] status for its trade with the United States must permit its citizens the right or opportunity to emigrate. It is clear, Mr. Chairman, that much more than this ought to be required.

Trade with the United States at the most-favorable-tariff rates is not a right that a country ought to receive simply because it wants to trade. It is a privilege that should be given only to countries who observe the minimum levels of decency and respect for the international community. Chinese actions since June 1989 have clearly placed China and its current leadership outside the pale of civilized, law-abiding nations.

There is no evidence that the Chinese are improving their human rights record. In fact, there is strong evidence that the opposite is taking place. The Chinese only undertook a bit of window-dressing last May and June, on the eve of the President's decision to grant China MNF status for another year.

It is essential that the leaders of China understand our Nation's commitment to human rights, and the adoption of this legislation will make this clear. There must be no confusion or misunderstanding on the part of the Chinese—or our own executive branch—about where the Congress stands on this issue of the observance of human rights.

Madam Chairman, I urge my colleagues to support the amendments that are being offered to this bill, and I urge my colleagues to vote for this critical legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

Pursuant to the rule, the joint resolution is considered as read for amendment under the 5-minute rule.

The text of the joint resolution is as follows:

H.J. RES. 647

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Congress does not approve the extension of the authority contained in section 402(c) of the Trade Act of 1974 recommended by the President to the Congress on May 24, 1990, with respect to the People's Republic of China.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to section 152(D) of the Trade Act of 1974, no amendment to the joint resolution is in order.

Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. WHEAT) having assumed the Chair, Mr. MCNULTY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 647) disapproving the recommendation of the President to extend nondiscriminatory treatment—most-favored-nation treatment—to the products of the People's Republic of China, pursuant to House Resolution 485, he reported the joint resolution back to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WHEAT). Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the joint resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

Messrs. GAYDOS, MATSUI, ROSTENKOWSKI, DELAY, and KASTENMEIER changed their vote from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. DORNAN of California, Mrs. LLOYD, and Messrs. HAYES of Illinois, BARNARD, SCHAEFER, LEHMAN of California, McCOLLUM, PERKINS, TAYLOR, HUCKABY, BOEHLERT, McMILLEN of Maryland, RICHARDSON, and TORRICELLI changed their vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the joint resolution was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, on the last recorded vote, roll No. 483, I was mistakingly recorded as having voted "No." Because I intended to vote against the extension of most-favored-nation treatment to the People's Republic of China, my vote should have been entered as "aye."

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the RECORD reflect that I intended to vote "no" on the final passage of House Joint Resolution 647, to disapprove MFN for China in 1990, and that I had inadvertently registered a "yes" vote on the mechanical device.

PERMISSION TO FILE CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 5158, DEPARTMENTS OF VETERANS AFFAIRS AND HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT, AND INDEPENDENT AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1991

Mr. TRAXLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the managers may have until midnight tonight, October 18, 1990, to file a conference report on the bill (H.R. 5158) making appropriations for the Departments of Veterans Affairs and Housing and Urban Development, and for sundry independent agencies, commissions, corporations, and offices of the fiscal year ending September 30, 1991, and/or other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MURTHA). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on House Joint Resolution 647, the joint resolution previously passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5311) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of said District for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1991, and for other purposes, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the actions agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

FEDERAL FUNDS

DEPARTMENT OF ADMINISTRATIVE SERVICES

Amendment No. 1: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which appropriates a special Federal contribution of $1,000,000 to partially restore the department's budget to the fiscal year 1990 level. This department serves as the nerve center of the District government and provides essential government-wide services to all District agencies such as the Metropolitan Police Department which many times has had to wait as long as a year or more for the Department of Administrative Services to process police procurements because of a shortage of trained personnel caused by funding shortfalls. The appropriation of this $1,000,000 from the District treasury is accomplished in amendment number 11.

BOARD OF EDUCATION

Amendment No. 2: Appropriates $15,080,000 as a Federal contribution to the public school system as proposed by the Senate instead of $12,080,000 as proposed by the House. The increase of $3,000,000 above the House level is discussed in amendments numbered 3 and 5.

Amendment No. 3: Earmarks $2,000,000 for renovations to public school athletic and recreational grounds and facilities as proposed by the House instead of $1,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 4: Deletes word "and" as proposed by the Senate to accommodate amendment number 5.

Amendment No. 5: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following: $1,000,000 shall be for expansion of the early childhood program, $1,000,000 shall be for teacher pay raises, and $1,000,000 shall be for the Anacostia Project in Southeast Washington.

FIRE DEPARTMENT

For a Federal contribution to the District of Columbia for the Fire Department, $1,141,000

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

Public schools.—The conference agreement earmarks $1,000,000 to expand the early childhood program, $1,000,000 for teacher pay raises, and $1,000,000 for the Anacostia Project in Southeast Washington instead of $1,000,000 to expand the early childhood program and $3,000,000 for teacher pay raises as proposed by the Senate. The reduction of $2,000,000 in the allocation for teacher pay raises is reallocated to amendment number 3 for renovations to public school athletic and recreational grounds and facilities ($1,000,000), and in amendment number 5 for the Anacostia Project ($1,000,000). Negotiations are under way on a new contract for teachers which will include pay raises that may exceed $30,000,000. While the conferees do not want to presuppose what those negotiations may conclude, they agree that the level of pay for the District's public school teachers is a priority and note that the Council of the District of Columbia has stated that it is "committed to fully fund pay raises that are negotiated by the Board of Education. . .".

Fire Department.—The conference action also inserts a new heading for the Fire Department and appropriates $1,141,000 to fund the administrative assistants to eight Battalion Fire Chiefs in the Firefighting Division on a 24-hour basis, 365 days a year. According to reports received by the conferees, the Administrative Assistants (Aides) perform duties that are essential to the orderly and efficient operations of their respective battalions, and in addition, are an integral part of the fireground command structure.

SUPERIOR COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Amendment No. 6: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: , of which $80,000 shall be available to the Social Services Division of the Superior Court of the District of Columbia for other youth screening and diversion programs

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conference agreement appropriates $160,000 for the After School Kids Program as proposed by the House instead of $160,000 for the After School Kids Program, $860,000 for the Social Services Division and $400,000 for counsel for Child Abuse and Neglect Program fees as proposed by the Senate. The conference agreement also includes language that makes $80,000 (of the $160,000) available to the Social Services Division for youth screening and diversion programs other than the After School Kids Program. This language gives the Social Services Division sole discretion to determine the use of the $80,000 within its screening and diversion program. With respect to the balance of $80,000 for the After School Kids Program, the conferees believe that these funds should cover the costs for a minimum of 50 youth completing the program and that a process/impact evaluation of the program by an outside, independent evaluator or consultant certified by the National Institute for Corrections should be conducted at a cost not to exceed four percent of the appropriation. At a minimum, the evaluation should include the following:

(1) A profile of program participants such as conviction charge, prior record, educational level, family structure, etc.

(2) Frequency and type of contact with program participants.

(3) Type of problem areas for which the youths were referred.

(4) Extent to which program was implemented as planned.

(5) Measure of educational gains for each youth through use of standardized tests to assess gains in academic problem areas, school advisory grades, etc.

(6) Changes in self esteem based on pretest and posttest results.

(7) Adjustment of youths at school and at home based on such measures as school attendance, school behavior, completes assigned household chores, etc.

(8) Incidence of illicit drug use by youths during the program.

(9) Incidence of youths involvement with the criminal justice system and severity of the involvement.

(10) Any other factors relevant to process/impact evaluation.

The conferees request that the evaluation be performed in a timely manner and transmitted to the House and Senate Subcommittees on District of Columbia Appropriations by May 30, 1991.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

Amendment No. 7: Deletes heading and Federal appropriation of $100,000 for the preparation of an environmental impact statement relating to the expansion of the Lorton landfill proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate. The conferees have been advised that action was taken on September 17, 1990 by elected officials of the jurisdiction where the Lorton landfill is located mandating that an environmental impact statement be prepared prior to proceeding with expansion of the landfill. The environmental impact statement is to be completed by March 1992 and will be paid for from dumping or "tipping" fees. The conferees were further advised that the environmental impact statement required by the local officials can be implemented and completed more quickly than one mandated by Congress. Amendments number 22 and 58 relate to the Lorton landfill expansion.

DEPARTMENT OF HUMAN SERVICES

Amendment No. 8: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert:

DEPARTMENT OF HUMAN SERVICES

For a Federal contribution to the District of Columbia, $3,041,000, of which $350,000 shall be to develop a program for boarder babies and children of substance abusers, $500,000 shall be to develop a residential aftercare program for pregnant substance abusers, $1,500,000 shall be for outpatient aftercare for pregnant substance abusers and the general recovering addict population, $500,000 shall be for a program for early detection of breast and cervical cancer to be conducted by an independent organization or institution of national prominence, and $191,000 shall be for security fences and security lighting at the Oak Hill Juvenile Detention Facility and security lighting at the Cedar Knoll Facility.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA INSTITUTE FOR MENTAL HEALTH

For a Federal contribution to the District of Columbia Institute for Mental Health to provide professional mental health care to low-income, underinsured, and indigent children, adults, and families in the District of Columbia, $1,000,000.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

Department of Human Services.—The conference agreement appropriates $3,041,000 as a Federal contribution to the Department of Human Services and $1,000,000 as a Federal contribution to the District of Columbia Institute for Mental Health instead of $2,850,000 as a Federal contribution for the Department of Human Services as proposed by the Senate. The allowance recommended by the conferees will provide (1) $350,000 to develop a program for boarder babies and children of substance abusers, (2) $500,000 to develop a residential aftercare program for pregnant substance abuses, (3) $1,500,000 for outpatient aftercare for pregnant substance abusers and the general recovering addict population and, (4) $500,000 for an early detection program for breast and cervical cancer as proposed by the Senate. The conference action also provides a federal contribution of $191,000 for security fences and lighting at the Oak Hill and Cedar Knoll juvenile detention facilities. See amendment number 19 for the payment of these funds from the District Treasury.

D.C. Institute for Mental Health.—In addition, the conference action inserts a new heading for the District of Columbia Institute for Mental Health and provides a direct one-time appropriation of $1,000,000 to assist the Institute in providing low-cost professional mental health care to low-income, underinsured, and indigent children, adults and families in the District of Columbia. The conferees were advised that the greater part of the Institute's client population is severely disturbed and predominantly classified as indigent and working poor with combined family incomes of $10,000 or less and nearly 40 percent of the patient population being uninsured or underinsured. The conferees were further advised that with successful treatment, the Institute's clients often move from welfare and other forms of public assistance to gainful employment, increased educational achievement and greater self-sufficiency.

The conferees request a report by April 15, 1991, from the Institute concerning the use of these funds and the level of services provided to District residents.

CHILDREN'S NATIONAL MEDICAL CENTER

Amendment No. 9: Deletes language proposed by Senate which provided payment of this appropriation to the District of Columbia for subsequent payment to the Children's National Medical Center for a cost-shared National Child Protection Center. The conferees agree that the payment should be made directly to the Children's National Medical Center rather than through the District of Columbia government.

Amendment No. 10: Appropriates $3,000,000 as proposed by the House instead of $4,000,000 as proposed by the Senate for a direct Federal contribution to the Children's National Medical Center for a cost-shared center focused on children and substance abuse prevention, trauma emergency medical care, pediatric AIDS/HIV treatment, critical care in newborn, pediatric and adolescent patients, pediatric medical research and other related specialized programs. The center is estimated to cost $50,000,000 with most of the funds provided by private and other sources.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA FUNDS

GOVERNMENTAL DIRECTION AND SUPPORT

Amendment No. 11: Appropriates $113,879,000 as proposed by the Senate instead of $115,279,000 as proposed by the House. The conference allowance of $113,879,000 reflects an increase of $1,000,000 above the House allowance after adjusting the House figure of $115,279,000 as printed in the bill to reflect two reductions made on the House floor in Federal funds but not reflected in the District funds appropriation. The increase of $1,000,000 above the revised House allowance will provide the Department of Administrative Services with a total budget of $27,253,000 as proposed by the Senate instead of $27,853,000 as proposed by the House. This department serves as the nerve center of the District and the conferees are concerned with what seems to be an effort by District officials to reduce the department's budget year after year—from $30,264,000 and 493 positions in fiscal year 1987 to $28,631,000 and 448 positions in fiscal year 1990 to $26,253,000 and 439 positions requested in the fiscal year 1991 budget. The conferees believe it is unreasonable to expect the department to operate properly without adequate resources. The conferees request quarterly reports from the department on its efforts to improve operations.

PUBLIC SAFETY AND JUSTICE

Amendment No. 12: Appropriates $920,464,000 instead of $919,323,000 as proposed by the House and $920,583,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Fire Department.—The conference agreement provides $103,043,000 instead of $101,902,000 as proposed by the House and the Senate. The increase of $1,141,000 is provided to fund the administrative assistants to the department's battalion chiefs on a three-shift basis to the extent possible for the fiscal year. The conferees have been advised that the administrative assistants are essential to the orderly and efficient operations of their respective battalions and are an integral part of the fireground command structure.

Metropolitan Police Department.—The conference agreement appropriates $257,242,000 which is $7,201,000 above the fiscal year 1990 appropriation. Language carried in last year's Act is continued this year to allow $17,630,000 of the Department's funds to remain available until expended. District officials are directed not to use these carryover funds to replace part of the base in the department's fiscal year 1992 budget. Nor is the department to absorb a disproportionate share of mandatory increases, such as pay costs, than other District agencies.

The situation with crime in the District has worsened, and in order to provide police officials with maximum flexibility in managing the department in its efforts in the war on crime, the conferees once again direct that the drug emergency funds of $17,630,000 shall be available exclusively to the department with the first priority given to the hiring of new police officers to bring the level up to the authorized strength of 5,133. If not expended for personal services, the funds may be used to purchase goods and services in the non-personal object classes including support and other materials as well as capital items.

The conferees request that quarterly reports be provided to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations showing the amounts obligated and expended and the purposes, in detail, for which funds were obligated and expended.

A summary of the number of sworn officers authorized and funded for fiscal year 1969-1991 follows:

METROPOLITAN POLICE DEPARTMENT—UNIFORMED (SWORN) POLICE OFFICERS

Fiscal year	Number authorized	Number funded
1969	4,100	3,341
1970	5,100	4,295
1971	5,100	5,013
1972	5,100	4,727
1973	5,100	4,974
1974	5,100	4,909
1975	4,750	4,700
1976	4,630	4,567
1977	4,470	4,333
1978	4,150	4,096
1979	4,120	4,120
1980	4,242	4,096
1981	4,025	3,880
1982	4,121	3,880
1983	3,958	3,880
1984	3,958	3,845
1985	3,958	3,845
1986	3,958	3,845
1987	3,958	3,855
1988	3,958	3,855
1989	4,133	4,055
1990	5,133	5,055
1991	5,133	5,055

District-wide contracting.—The conferees remain interested in the District's progress in fully implementing the District of Columbia Procurement Practices Act of 1985. Accordingly, the conferees request that the District provide quarterly reports on the following information regarding contracting by all agencies, boards, commissions, and entities, independent or otherwise that receive any funding, directly or indirectly, through this Act:

(1) progress in completing the regulations of the final four chapters of the Act;

(2) the number and dollar value of sole source contracts the District enters into;

(3) the number and dollar value of contracts being carried out with no written contract on file;

(4) the number and dollar value of contracts pending before the Department of Human Services which have been renewed outside of the competitive bidding process.

Superior Court.—The conference agreement provides $65,850,000 instead of $66,192,000 as proposed by the House and $67,110,000 as proposed by the Senate. The conference action reflects a technical adjustment transferring out eight court reporter positions and $342,000 to the Court System. The conferees have not approved the increase of $860,000 for the Social Services Division and the additional $400,000 for fees for counsel in child abuse and neglect cases proposed by the Senate. The conferees were advised that $2,966,000 is in the budget for the Guardianship and Protective Proceedings program which will not be fully operational in fiscal year 1991. As a result, possibly half of the budget may be unobligated and could be made available to other high priority programs such as the special probationary teams for child abuse cases.

D.C. Court System.—The conference action provides $22,600,000 as proposed by the Senate instead of $22,258,000 as proposed by the House and reflects a technical adjustment transferring in eight court reporter positions and $342,000 from the Superior Court.

Amendment No. 13: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate that allows the Metropolitan Police Department to make small purchases up to $500,000 without going through any other District agency including the Department of Administrative Services. The limit for the department is presently $10,000 although the limit for some agencies is up to $1,000,000. The conferees agree that the increase in purchasing authority for $10,000 up to $500,000 will insure that the Metropolitan Police Department will be able to independently and expeditiously procure the goods and services it requires to fulfill its mission. The conferees further agree that the administrative requirements for the department's increased procurement authority of up to $500,000 be those presently governing procurements made under the small purchase authority so that no new or creative bureaucratic hurdles will be imposed on the department. The Department should view this increase in direct purchasing authority as a pilot or model that will be reviewed during next year's budget hearings to determine whether the Department's procurement situation has improved.

Amendment No. 14: Delete language proposed by the Senate which would have made funds appropriated for the Guardianship, Protective Proceedings, and Durable Power of Attorney Act of 1986 available until expended rather than available only during the fiscal year in which they are appropriated.

PUBLIC EDUCATION SYSTEM

Amendment No. 15: Appropriates $738,240,000 as proposed by the Senate instead of $735,240,000 as proposed by the House. The conference action reflects an increase of $4,600,000 above the House allowance after adjusting the House figure of $735,240,000 as printed in the bill to reflect the reduction of $1,600,000 made on the House floor in the allocation to the University of the District of Columbia but not reflected in the appropriation for "Public Education System". The increase of $4,600,000 above the revised House allowance will restore the $1,600,000 for the University of the District of Columbia as proposed by the Senate and will allocate the $3,000,000 in Federal funds appropriated under amendment number 2. The $3,000,000 will provide $1,000,000 for expansion of the Early Childhood Development Program as proposed by the Senate, $1,000,000 for teacher pay raises instead of $3,000,000 as proposed by the Senate, and $1,000,000 for the Anacostia project in southeast Washington which will focus on the improvement and extension of mathematics, science and technology for the District's public school system. This project is discussed under amendment number 16.

Amendment No. 16: Allocates $529,764,000 instead of $526,764,000 as proposed by the House and $530,764,000 as proposed by the Senate for the public schools of the District of Columbia. The increase of $3,000,000 above the House allowance will provide (1) an additional $1,000,000 as proposed by the Senate for expansion of the Early Childhood Development Program, (2) $1,000,000 for the Anacostia Project in Southeast Washington which is discussed later, and (3) $1,000,000 for the projected teacher pay raises instead of $3,000,000 as proposed by the Senate. Negotiations are under way on a new contract for teachers which will include pay raises that may exceed $30,000,000. While the conferees do not want to presuppose what those negotiations may conclude, they agree that the level of pay for the District's public school teachers is a priority and note that the Council of the District of Columbia has stated that it is "committed to fully fund pay raises that are negotiated by the Board of Education . . ."

Excessive administrative costs.—The conferees are deeply concerned at the pattern of spending in the District's public schools. It is not the case that the total amount per pupil being spent is low; in fact, it is among the highest in the Nation. The problem is that the funds are being misdirected with excessive funds going to administrative overhead and all too little going to the instruction of students. The conferees hope that the new administration will address the misdirection of resources.

Anacostia Project.—The conference agreement includes $1,000,000 for the development and implementation of the renewal of the Anacostia Project in Southeast Washington. In 1974, the District established Ballou High School in Southeast Washington as the mathematics and science school for the city. A renewal of this project will focus on school-based staff development, school analysis for accountability, a new curriculum integrating technology into the classroom with staff development and training in the most up-to-date teaching techniques and strategies (including Integrative Learning) which emphasize preparing students for work, college and citizenship in the 21st century by focusing on science, mathematics and technology as well as values education and multicultural heritage and legacy.

According to many businesses and government leaders, the United States must develop bolder visions and provide more aggressive leadership in at least three areas: economic revitalization, educational reform and community renewal. This project is an attempt to address these national needs as well as those of minority students who along with women will represent over 85 percent of the new work force by the year 2000. Programs such as those being developed by the National Science Center Foundation (NSCF) are attempting to address these priorities. The NSCF believes that the Nation's educational failures center on two issues, one of which is a decline in student test scores in mathematics and science and the second is the current shortage of well prepared teachers in the fields of mathematics and science for the Nation's schools. The Foundation is developing a computer-based system in an effort to make an impact on the teaching of mathematics. According to NSCF, the use of these technologies not only benefits the teaching of these subjects but is necessary if we expect to overcome the current and projected shortage of qualified mathematics and science teachers.

The conferees are encouraged by these initiatives and direct that the $1,000,000 approved for this project be used to continue the planning and development of this urban demonstration model in mathematics, science and technology for the District in Southeast Washington. These funds are to be used to upgrade and expand the Ballou Mathematics and Science School and the Friendship Educational Center, which was recently renamed the Patricia Roberts Harris Educational Center, and for additional programs focused on mathematics, science and technology. Learning Logic computer laboratories are to be installed in these two schools to serve as urban demonstration sites for the Foundation's comprehensive computer-based mathematics program for all students in algebra through calculus. Model pilot programs will be established for (1) improving mathematics, science and computer learning opportunities for students in pre-kindergarten through high school including a Tech-Prep 2+2 Program; (2) extended day and year-round programs using computers with a mathematics and science focus; and (3) parent and community support programs.

Funds are also provided to begin a year-round, school-focused, research based staff development center dedicated to improving and upgrading the teaching of mathematics, science and technology in the District's public schools. This facility is to be located in the newly named Patricia Roberts Harris Educational Center and will provide for the strengthening of the relationship and collaboration of the District's public schools with the National Science Center Foundation, Howard University, the University of the District of Columbia, the Naval Research Laboratory, and other agencies and organizations.

The conferees have been advised that the necessary first step toward the implementation of this project is to air condition the Ballou High School for a year-round mathematics and science program. Accordingly, the conferees direct that the necessary funds within the public schools capital outlay program be made available to air condition the Ballou High School and modernize and improve the necessary science laboratories at Ballou for the mathematics and science school.

The conferees request comprehensive biannual reports on the implementation and progress of the Anacostia Project. The reports are to be provided on May 1, 1991, and November 1, 1991, by the Board of Education to the House and Senate Subcommittees on District of Columbia Appropriations. A time line with goals and accomplishments should be included in the annual report.

ACCORD Program.—The ACCORD Program is a 5-year model demonstration project established to provide high school students with necessary skills to obtain entry level career employment. The program is a partnership between the business and civic communities, government agencies and the public schools with job opportunities provided in both the private and public sectors to students who receive training through seminars, on-the-job training, internships, and direct assistance from volunteer mentors. This program was first funded in fiscal year 1988 at a level of $800,000 of which $200,000 was contingent upon the receipt of $200,000 in private sector contributions for a total program level of $1,000,000.

The conferees request that detailed quarterly reports be provided within 20 days after the close of each quarter directly by the Board of Education to the House and Senate Subcommittees on District of Columbia Appropriations on the ACCORD Program setting out the progress made from the previous reporting period as well as a comparison of the program's goals and objectives with the accomplishments.

Options School.—The conferees have included $600,000 within the funds provided to the Board of Education for the Options School program. The program is an alternative full-day program for youths 12 to 15 who are functioning at least two years behind grade level and are drop-out risks. The students are given courses in basic skills, computers, science and technology. While in the program 86 percent of the students attended school 80 percent of the time, 37 percent had two or fewer absences, and 25 percent had perfect attendance. On standardized tests 65 percent progressed two grade levels in reading and math. Students can stay in the program for up to one year. This initiative has been a success by any measure, and the conferees encourage school officials to consider expanding its use.

The conferees request that the $180,000 increase above last year's level be used to supplement the base operations and to expand the Options School by adding such programs as a summer session, performing arts, an evaluation which may be used as a basis for national replication, and enhancement of the curriculum as well as other related program development.

Amendment No. 17: Allocates $22,000,000 as proposed by the House instead of $21,000,000 as proposed by the Senate for pay-as-you-go capital projects for the public schools. The conference action provides $2,000,000 as proposed by the House instead of $1,000,000 as proposed by the Senate for renovations to athletic and recreational grounds and facilities in the public school system.

Amendment No. 18: Allocates $76,913,000 as proposed by the Senate instead of $75,313,000 as proposed by the House for the University of the District of Columbia. The conference action restores the $1,600,000 reduction that resulted from a House floor amendment offered because $1,600,000 was proposed to be borrowed on the municipal bond market by the District government to be repaid from the District's local tax revenues to renovate the Carnegie Library to exhibit "The Dinner Party" art work. This amendment was adopted by the House even though there were no funds in the bill related to the art work. The artist subsequently withdrew her offer to donate the art work to the University.

HUMAN SUPPORT SERVICES

Amendment No. 19: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: $876,431,000.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conference agreement appropriates $876,431,000 instead of $873,390,000 as proposed by the House and $876,240,000 as proposed by the Senate. The increase of $3,041,000 above the House allowance includes $350,000 as proposed by the Senate to evaluate program alternatives for addressing the District's boarder babies and children of substance abusers. These funds will enable the District to evaluate the few existing alternatives, select the most promising strategies amenable to local conditions, educate and train necessary personnel, and begin implementation. The conferees intend that the District explore with national and local organizations, such as the District of Columbia Institute for Mental Health which was recently awarded a Federal grant for this purpose, various ways to combat this growing problem. The conferees have also included $500,000 as proposed by the Senate for a program to establish residential aftercare for new mothers and their newborn infants in a drug-free environment until they are self sufficient. In addition, the conference agreement includes $1,500,000 as proposed by the Senate to expand outpatient aftercare for pregnant and general population substance abusers. The need for such care is so great that existing programs are overwhelmed. Aftercare is essential if the recovered substance abuser is to maintain a drug-free lifestyle and not have a relapse.

In order to expedite the delivery of services, the conferees direct that each of these programs be handled through the issuance of contracts to groups providing the services.

The conference action also provides (1) $500,000 as proposed by the Senate for grants to nationally known independent public and private non-profit entities for the purpose of screening for breast and cervical cancer by conducting a physical examination, a mammography, and a pap smear for women who are not currently receiving such services under existing District programs, private insurance, or Federal health benefits programs; and (2) $191,000 for the Youth Services Administration for perimeter fencing and security lighting at the Oak Hill and Cedar Knoll juvenile detention facilities. See amendment number 20 for a further explanation on the use of this $191,000.

Federal funds appropriated to the District in amendment number 8 are appropriated from the District's treasury by this amendment.

Amendment No. 20: Restores language proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate earmarking not less than $191,000 of the Human Support Services appropriation for the Youth Services Administration for perimeter fencing and security lighting at the Oak Hill and Cedar Knoll juvenile detention facilities located in Laurel, Maryland. The conferees direct that these funds not be released for obligation by the department until a comprehensive plan for security improvements at Oak Hill and Cedar Knoll is transmitted to the House and Senate Subcommittees on District of Columbia Appropriations. The conferees reiterate their strong interest in the Oak Hill and Cedar Knoll facilities, especially in view of the continuing security problems. The conferees request that District officials prepare a long-term plan for resolving the outstanding security, program, staffing and other problems at the facilities and be prepared to testify during the fiscal year 1992 budget hearings on the steps the department will take to implement these plans.

Amendment No. 21: Restores language proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate which prohibits the use of the Hurt Home located at 3050 R Street, Northwest, as a treatment facility until final adjudication by the relevant courts and clarifies the proviso by citing the specific court case that was filed with the District of Columbia Court of Appeals on August 8, 1988 (Speyer v. Barry, Appeal No. 88-958). The conferees believe that this provision should not delay occupancy, which is scheduled for the summer of calendar year 1991, since the case should be decided soon.

The Hurt Home was purchased in 1987 and will become the city's first community-based residential center for emotionally disturbed children, youth and their families. The program is designed to serve 24 emotionally disturbed boys and girls, aged 8 to 12 years who are in need of 24 hour intensive therapeutic services in a residential setting. The facility is not intended for children and youth who present a likelihood of serious harm to others, or who have a primary diagnosis of mental retardation, developmental disability or substance abuse. Currently, more than 200 of these children are located in out-of-state treatment facilities in Colorado, Texas, Florida, and Georgia at an annual cost in excess of $24,000,000. The District government is currently renovating the facility at an estimated cost of $2.7 million which will cover work necessary to meet both programmatic and code requirements. Completion of the work is expected during the summer of 1991.

Nothing in this provision should be construed to prohibit the District from performing any activities not expressly prohibited by the order of the Superior Court of the District of Columbia dated June 23, 1988.

PUBLIC WORKS

Amendment No. 22: Deletes language proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate which would have allocated not less than $100,000 from the District treasury for an environmental impact statement for the proposed expansion of the Lorton landfill. The conferees have been advised that action was taken on September 17, 1990, by elected officials of the jurisdiction where the Lorton landfill is located mandating that an environmental impact statement be prepared prior to proceeding with expansion of the landfill. The environmental impact statement is to be completed by March 1992 and will be paid for from dumping or "tipping" fees. The conferees were further advised that the environmental impact statement required by the local officials can be implemented and completed more quickly than one mandated by Congress. Amendment numbers 7 and 58 relate to the Lorton landfill expansion.

CAPITAL OUTLAY

Amendment No. 23: Appropriates $324,322,000 as proposed by the House instead of $323,322,000 as proposed by the Senate. The increase of $1,000,000 above the Senate allowance is earmarked in amendment number 24 for the public school system.

Amendment No. 24: Provides $22,000,000 as proposed by the House instead of $21,000,000 as proposed by the Senate for pay-as-you-go maintenance improvements and emergency repairs to public school facilities. Included in the $22,000,000 allocation which will be financed from general fund operating revenues is $2,000,000 as proposed by the House instead of $1,000,000 as proposed by the Senate for renovations to public school athletic and recreational grounds and facilities.

GENERAL PROVISIONS

Amendment No. 25: Provides an employment ceiling for fiscal year 1991 of 39,262 as proposed by the Senate instead of 40,037 as proposed by the House and deletes language proposed by the Senate concerning solid waste disposal. The conferees agree that the employment ceiling of 39,262 for fiscal year 1991, which is the same as the ceiling in the fiscal year 1990 Act, applies to all departments, agencies, activities, commissions and boards funded directly or indirectly through this appropriations Act. The conferees also agree that District officials are not to use this position ceiling to restrict the hiring of personnel by the Metropolitan Police Department, the Fire Department or the Department of Corrections since the approved fiscal year 1991 level of employment in those departments was not increased above the fiscal year 1990 level.

Amendment Nos. 26 through 50: Technical renumbering of sections to provide consecutive section numbers following conference action on amendment number 25 which deleted a new section 111 proposed by the Senate. With the new section 111 deleted, the section numbers revert to those in the House-passed bill.

Amendment No. 51: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

Restore the matter stricken by said amendment amended to read as follows:

SEC. 136. (a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) ATTORNEYS.—Section 906 of the District of Columbia Government Comprehensive Merit Personnel Act of 1978 (section 1-610.6, D.C. Code) is amended—

(A) in subsection (a), by striking "Notwithstanding" and inserting "Except as provided in subsection (c) and notwithstanding"; and

(B) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(c) Subsections (a) and (b) shall not apply to any person applying for or accepting any position in the Excepted Service as an attorney, and such person shall be covered by the provisions of section 801(e).".

(3) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—D.C. Law 3-36 is amended—

(A) in section 4(a)(4) (section 9-603 (a)(4), D.C. Code), by striking the colon at the end of the second sentence and all that follows and inserting a semicolon; and

(B) in section 11 (section 9-610, D.C. Code), by striking "titles V and XVII" and inserting "titles V and XVII and section 801(e)".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsection (a) shall take effect as if included in the enactment of the Residency Preference Amendment Act of 1988.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conference action inserts language which extends the residency preference system to attorney positions and employees of all independent agencies, boards and commissions of the District of Columbia. The language proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate extended the residency preference system to attorney positions. The residency preference system for employees of the District government was enacted in Public Law 101-168 approved November 21, 1989 (103 Stat. 1276, 1277), and was intended to apply to all persons employed by the District government except those in the Excepted and Executive Services. However, attorney positions were excluded because they were exempt from the Comprehensive Merit Personnel Act which is the act that was amended by Public Law 101-168. In addition, the conferees learned that some independent agencies, boards, and commissions likewise are not subject to the Comprehensive Merit Personnel Act and therefore not subject to the residency preference system. The conference action amends the House language as well as applicable sections and provisions of D.C. law and the D.C. Code to extend the residency preference system to all independent agencies, boards, and commissions of the District of Columbia.

The conferees believe that all employment with the District government should be covered by the residency preference system with the exception of those individuals in the Excepted Service and Executive Service hired after December 31, 1979, who will continue to be required to live in the District of Columbia for the duration of their employment in the Excepted and Executive Services as required under current law.

These amendments are permanent law and as such continue beyond this fiscal year into perpetuity.

Amendment No. 52: Restores language proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate which prohibits the District of Columbia from using funds in this Act for salaries, expenses or other costs associated with the offices of United States Senator or United States Representative under section 4(d) of D.C. Law 3-171 (sec. 1-113(d), D.C. Code).

Amendment No. 53: Deletes language proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate which would have reduced the Federal funds in this bill by 2 percent or $10,812,360. The conferees note that the total Federal funds recommended in this bill are within the revised 302(b) allocations in both budget authority and outlays. The conferees further note that the Federal payment has remained at the same level of $430,500,000 for four years and is $14,000,000 below the fiscal year 1987 appropriation when it reached $444,500,000. The reduction of $14,000,000 reflects a 3.1 percent cut in nominal dollars and a loss of 22 percent in real dollars since fiscal year 1987. During the same period, the Federal payment has fallen from a total of 18.3 percent of the District's total operating budget to 13.3 percent in this Act.

Amendment No. 54: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following:

SEC. 138. (a) The proviso under the heading "Public Works" in the Dire Emergency Supplemental Appropriation for Disaster Assistance, Food Stamps, Unemployment Compensation Administration, and Other Urgent Needs, and Transfers, and Reducing Funds Budgeted for Military Spending Act of 1990, approved May 25, 1990 (Public Law 101-302; 104 Stat. 241), shall remain in effect until September 30, 1991.

(b) Chapter IX of title II of the Dire Emergency Supplemental Appropriations for Disaster Assistance, Food Stamps, Unemployment Compensation Administration, and Other Urgent Needs, and Transfers, and Reducing Funds Budgeted for Military Spending Act of 1990, approved May 25, 1990 (Public Law 101-302; 104 Stat. 241), is amended in the item relating to "Public Safety and Justice" by striking "current operating revenues collected during fiscal year 1991 and not from".

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conference action extends to September 30, 1991, the effectiveness of a provision in Public Law 101-302 concerning the safety barriers on the Duke Ellington Memorial Bridge as proposed by the Senate and inserts language that amends a provision in Public Law 101-302 that allows the District government to repay $10,000,000 with proceeds of borrowed funds instead of from current operating revenues since the borrowings are from construction funds for the District's new Correctional Treatment Facility and were used to pay the Federal Bureau of Prisons and various state governments for housing District of Columbia code violators. The conferees do not condone this financing arrangement and call on District officials to avoid such requests in the future.

Amendment No. 55: Deletes language proposed by the Senate prohibiting the use of funds in this or any other Act for lobbying expenses related to District of Columbia Statehood or for "shadow representatives." Amendment numbers 52 and 55 both involve the same subject matter and the conferees agreed to accept amendment number 52 and delete amendment number 55.

Amendment No. 56: Reported in disagreement.

Amendment No. 57: Deletes language proposed by the Senate which would have exempted the Perinatal Abstinence Project located at 3551 Sixteenth Street, Northwest, from the requirement to obtain a certificate of occupancy.

Amendment No. 58: Deletes language proposed by the Senate that would have prohibited the use of any funds in this Act for expansion of the Lorton sanitary landfill until completion of an environmental impact statement and agreement to a cost-sharing arrangement for payment of the study. The Senate language would have also imposed restrictions upon the transport of any output of the municipal waste system of the District. The conferees have been advised that action was taken on September 17, 1990, by the elected officials of the jurisdiction where the Lorton landfill is located mandating that an environmental impact statement be prepared prior to proceeding with expansion of the landfill. The environmental impact statement is to be completed by March 1992 and will be paid for from dumping or "tipping" fees. The conferees were further advised that the environmental impact statement required by the local officials can be implemented and completed more quickly than one mandated by Congress. Amendment numbers 7 and 22 relate to the Lorton landfill expansion.

Amendment No. 59: Deletes language proposed by the Senate which would have amended the District of Columbia Human Rights Act with respect to participation of persons in program or activities involving juveniles under 18 years of age.

Amendment No. 60: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the section number "143", insert "140".

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conference action allows for the retirement of not to exceed 75 police officers currently on extended limited duty, where the prognosis for return to full police duty is not good, and states that their retirements are to be excluded from the computation of the rate of disability retirement under subsection 145(a) of the District of Columbia Retirement Reform Act of 1979 (Public Law 96-122). This rate of disability retirements is used to determine whether to reduce the authorized Federal payment to the Police Officers and Firefighters' Retirement Fund. A number of officers are in a limited or light duty status or on extended sick leave. The police chief has stated that it is important to replace these individuals with able-bodied police officers who can perform on the street.

Prior to the enactment of subsection 145(a) of Public Law 96-122, there was concern that the District's retirement system was being abused with excessive disability retirements. In some years, disability retirements accounted for 99 percent of all police and fire retirements. In order to address the situation, the Congress approved subsection 145(a) as part of the District's Retirement Reform Act to provide some incentive to District managers to reduce the percentage of disability retirements. The conferees believe the District has responded favorably and has included this language which will allow these individuals to retire without reducing the authorized Federal payment to the retirement funds and will permit the Metropolitan Police Department to hire police officers, or civilians if the position is a civilian post, to fill the vacated positions. The conferees direct that these retirements, while exempt from the computation of the rate of disability retirements, be subject to all of the rules and regulations of the District's Board of Surgeons as well as the Policemen and Firemen's Retirement and Relief Board and meet all of the criteria for retirement.

The language agreed to by the conferees requires the Mayor to engage an enrolled actuary to determine the financial effects of this change on the retirement fund and to comply fully with sections 142(d) and 144(d) of Public Law 96-122. The language also requires that if any of the 75 positions that may become vacant because of retirements under subsection (a) are filled, a civilian employee or an officer or member of the Metropolitan Police Department shall be hired to fill that position. The objective of this section is to ensure that the objectives of the Mayor and the Metropolitan Police Chief to hire more able-bodied officers for street duty are carried out.

Subsection (d) states that the limited duty policy of the Metropolitan Police Department shall be that in effect prior to July 8, 1990, unless ordered by the relevant court. The conferees have been concerned about past abuses of the department's limited duty policy and encourage the Department to use the authority granted by this provision to modify its recent practice and retire those who will not be returning to full duty.

In Special Order 80-20, issued April 2, 1980, which implements a settlement that resulted from earlier court action, the Chief of Police stated that "Female members who become pregnant shall be eligible for limited duty assignments in accordance with policy set forth in this order."

The order also states that "Assignments to limited duty shall be for a specific period of time, depending on the prognosis for return to full duty set forth by the Board of Surgeons physician." The conferees believe that these provisions are clear and should be adhered to until the matter is either negotiated by the parties or adjudicated by the court.

Amendment No. 61: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

SEC. 141. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Task Force on Substance Abusing Pregnant Women and Infants Exposed to Maternal Substance Abuse During Pregnancy shall report no later than March 29, 1991.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conference action extends the reporting and termination date of the Task Force on Substance Abusing Pregnant Women and Infants Exposed to Maternal Substance Abuse During Pregnancy by four months to March 29, 1991, as proposed by the Senate. The Task Force was established in last year's appropriations Act and was to submit its report and terminate within one year after the date of enactment of the Act which was signed by the President on November 21, 1989.

Amendment No. 62: Deletes language proposed by the Senate which would have amended the District of Columbia Human Rights Act with respect to the participation of adult homosexual and bisexual persons in programs or activities involving juveniles under 18 years of age.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MURTHA). The gentleman from Texas [Mr. FROST] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. QUILLEN] for the purpose of debate only, pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 510 waives all points of order against consideration of H.R. 5399, the legislative appropriations bill for fiscal year 1991.

The rule also waives points of order against certain provisions of the bill. clause 2 of rule XXI, the rule which prohibits consideration of unauthorized appropriations or legislative provisions in general appropriations bills, is waived against specified provisions of the bill. The precise provisions of H.R. 5399 for which these waivers are provided are detailed in the rule.

Mr. Speaker, the resolution makes it in order to consider en bloc the amendments numbered one in the report accompanying the rule, to be offered by Representative FAZIO or his designee, debatable for 20 minutes, equally divided and controlled. If adopted, the amendments en bloc will become orignal text for the purpose of further amendment under the 5-minute rule.

The resolution also makes it in order to consider the en bloc amendments numbered two in the report, to be offered by Representative FAZIO or his designee, to be debated for 40 minutes, equally divided and controlled. Clause 2, rule XXI is waived against the en bloc amendments numbered two in the report.

The en bloc amendments numbered one and two shall not be subject to amendment, or to a demand for a division of the question in the House or in the Committee of the Whole.

The resolution makes in order the amendment numbered three in the report, to be offered by Representative FAZIO or his designee, to be debated for 1 hour, equally divided and controlled. Clause 2, rule XXI is waived against said amendment. Further, said amendment shall not be subject to amendment.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 5399 is the last of the 13 appropriations bills that the House will consider. This measure provides funding for the legislative branch, which includes congressional operations, and related agencies such as the Library of Congress, the General Accounting Office, and the Government Printing Office.

Approval of H.R. 5399 today will allow us to take a step closer toward completing the business of this Congress. I urge adoption of this rule and passage of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume, and I rise in support of the rule.

Mr. Speaker, the able gentleman from Texas has explained its provisions.

I am reminded of the frustration we went through last evening when the House spent several hours on one amendment. I do not favor an extended debate on this rule. I think it is time that this Congress got down to business, passed this rule, debated the legislative appropriations and finished our business. I do not favor taking 2 or 3 hours on anything that we bring before the House when we are in a crisis and time is short.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. LEWIS].

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker I rise in support of this rule. I had been concerned that the rule would be closed and restrict a number of amendments which would normally be in order to appropriations measures. However, that is not the case.

The rule does protect three amendments that have been worked out with the bipartisan leadership. The first, which will be the McCandless-Synar amendment cuts $26 million from various accounts to bring our bill under the revised 302 (b) allocation.

The second amendment is a compromise that Congressman STEARNS was able to work out with Chairman FAZIO and others. This amendment would reduce the clerk hire account by $16 million—the increase for each Members staff. I am pleased that the Rules Committee saw fit to provide the House an opportunity to vote on this item and exercise fiscal restraint here in our own offices.

Finally the rule protects the Fazio-Frenzel amendment which will bring to this body the opportunity to implement real franking reform for the House of Representatives. This reform amendment is the product of months of careful negotiations by the Michel task force on franking reform and represents a compromise. Clearly it does not reflect everything Republican members would have liked in a reform amendment, however, a compromise seldom does. Without the assistance and protection of the Rules Committee this amendment would not be in order. Consequently our bill would reflect "business as usual" and we would not have enough money to pay the postage bill.

Finally, this open rule allows any other appropriations type reductions amendment be in order at the appropriate section in this bill. I am pleased that the Rules Committee provided a modified open rule and ask my colleagues to support it.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JACOBS].

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Speaker, under well-established rules of the House, it is impossible to enact legislation on an appropriations bill. This appropriation bill, however, does have in section 311 legislation on an appropriation bill. Consequently, I went to the Committee on Rules and asked if the amendment relating to compensation for Members of Congress could not be waived as legislation on an appropriation bill. In effect, I said, "You don't tell on me and I won't tell on you."

The Committee on Rules decided not to make the amendment in order. It does seem to me, in fairness, that I should be given an opportunity to amend the rule, and that is up to the fate of the rule, whether I am permitted to do that or not.

When I pointed out to my friend from California that the appropriations for the legislative branch are two-tenths of 1 percent of the Federal budget, he added that 90 percent of the rhetoric is about two-tenths of 1 percent of the budget.

Mr. Speaker, I do not characterize any procedural vote as a direct vote on the question of compensation for Members of Congress. I have no window to look into other people's motives, and there are lots of reasons for voting as people do on procedures.

I would appreciate the opportunity to offer the pay amendment because I do believe we lead best by example.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTON].

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong opposition to the rule. Tuesday, I sought to have made in order an amendment to implement a random, mandatory, drug testing policy for all Members of the House of Representatives. This rule before us today does not allow for consideration of my amendment. I therefore urge its defeat. On September 15, 1986, President Reagan issued Executive Order No. 12564 which required that all executive branch agencies develop random drug testing programs for Federal employees in sensitive positions. Agencies are currently in the process of putting these plans into operation. It is estimated that over 345,000 Federal employees will be affected by this order.

The purpose of Federal drug testing is threefold. First, it is meant to locate and hopefully rehabilitate drug abusing employees. Second, it is meant to provide an example to the Nation that drug testing is a valuable tool in our fight against drug abuse. Last, and most importantlly, drug testing is meant to be an enforcement mechanism for providing a drug-free workplace.

The same reasoning used in mandating drug testing for Federal employees in sensitive positions is applicable to drug testing for Members of the House. Members of the House are certainly in sensitive positions. Some, very few perhaps, may have drug problems that will only be addressed when they are confronted with a positive drug test result. Obviously, since the U.S. Capitol and its surrounding buildings are our workplace, and the Nation's showplace, every effort must be made to make it as drug free as possible.

The case for drug testing of representatives is stronger than for Federal employees. Congress is in a better position to set an example for the American work force. How can Congress sanction stronger drug enforcement, including drug testing in the workplace, and yet once again exempt itself? There is perhaps no other position as sensitive as a Member of the U.S. Congress. Furthermore, voters who rely on a Member for representation have a right to know if that representative is drug free.

A 1988 ABC poll found that 88 percent of Americans favor drug testing for Federal employees involved in national security. In 1987, a USA Today poll, found that 89 percent of Americans would agree to be drug tested themselves. My own district favors drug testing by 86 percent.

According to Gallop, 85 percent of Americans say drug testing deters illegal drug use. Drug testing has proven to be a valuable management tool to improve efficiency, productivity, and safety in the workplace.

The rule before makes several amendments in order by waiving House rule XVI clause 2, pertaining to germaneness. I ask for the same consideration. My amendment deserves an up or down vote. If you believe Congress should lead by example, vote against the previous question and pending that, against this rule.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF MOST-FAVORED-NATION TREATMENT TO THE PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

Ms. SLAUGHTER of New York. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 503 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 503

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 1(b) of rule XXIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 4939) regarding the extension of most-favored-nation treatment to the products of the People's Republic of China, and for other purposes, and the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and which shall not exceed two hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means, the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Ways and Means now printed in the bill as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the five-minute rule and said substitute shall be considered as having been read. No amendment to said substitute shall be in order except the amendments printed in the report of the Committee on Rules accompanying this resolution. Said amendments shall be considered in the order and manner specified in the report of the Committee on Rules, and shall be debatable for the period specified in the report, equally divided and controlled by the proponent and a Member opposed thereto. Said amendments shall not be subject to amendment except as specified in the report. All points of order against the amendments printed in the report are hereby waived. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MURTHA). The gentlewoman from New York [Ms. SLAUGHTER] is recognized for 1 hour.

Ms. SLAUGHTER of New York. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON], and pending that, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 503 is a modified open rule providing for the consideration of H.R. 4939 regarding the extension of most-favored-nation treatment to the products of the People's Republic of China.

The rule provides for 2 hours of general debate to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Further, the rule makes in order the Ways and Means Committee amendment in the nature of a substitute now printed in the bill as an original bill for the purposes of amendment.

No amendments to the substitute are to be in order except those printed in the report of the Committee on Rules. The amendments are not subject to amendment except as specified in the report, and all points of order against the amendments printed in the report are waived.

Finally, the rule provides for one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

Mr. Speaker, we enter into the debate on H.R. 4939 and MFN status for China because we cannot forget last year's massacre in Tiananmen Square and because thousands of Chinese citizens whose only crime was peaceful demonstration are still imprisoned in China. H.R. 4939 levies important economic pressure on the Chinese Government to ease its repressive policies. The bill makes clear that the U.S. Congress will not support continued preferential trade status to Beijing without significant improvement in that country's human rights record.

China's recent cooperation in international sanctions against Iraq and the weakening of Chinese support for the Khmer Rouge, at last bringing some hope for peace in Cambodia, are both encouraging signs. We hope that these gestures signal a real turning point in Chinese policy toward freedom and peace. Despite these steps forward, we cannot forget that thousands of innocent Chinese citizens still sit in prison facing an uncertain fate.

A September editorial in the New York Times said, "Step by step, Washington moves to give Beijing more respectability, trade and credits. Power talks; the dead do not." Today, the House decisively acts to disprove this notion that the massacred Chinese demonstrators do not matter. H.R. 4939 makes clear that U.S. foreign policy cannot be separated from economic policy. Ours is a nation which champions democracy, freedom, and human rights on all fronts.

Mr. Speaker, this rule will allow consideration of four amendments by Representatives PELOSI, WOLF, PORTER, and MILLER of Washington, or their designees, to modify and strengthen the seven human rights conditions currently required by the bill. I ask my colleagues to support the rule so that we may proceed with consideration of the merits of this important legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join the gentlewoman from New York [Ms. SLAUGHTER] in supporting this rule. We have before us a modified open rule which, in my view, is slanted more toward open, rather than toward modified; and, more than that, it is agreed to by the leadership on both sides of the aisle, and that is the way it should be if we are going to have any kind of modification or anything other than a fully open rule. It will make in order consideration of all four amendments to this bill which were presented to the Committee on Rules by both Democratic and Republican Members. Mr. Speaker, the House just passed my resolution which disapproves most-favored-nation status for China, and, should that bill for some reason not make it through the Senate or be vetoed by the President, this kind of legislation, H.R. 4939, is badly needed.

Mr. Speaker, this bill would make renewal of China's most-favored-nation trade status next July conditional upon improvements by the Government of China in its respect and protection for the basic human rights of its people. Many of us feel that the conditions set forth in H.R. 4939 are not strong enough, and, accordingly, four Members will be presenting amendments to this bill.

The gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOSI], who was so active on the previous bill that just passed, has proposed a tougher set of conditions overall, and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOLF] has proposed adding the issue of religious freedom to those conditions, something which is terribly important. In addition, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PORTER] has an amendment concerning the future of Hong Kong and the need to respect the essential human rights of the 5½ million citizens of Hong Kong. Finally, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER] has an interesting amendment setting forth some guidelines for conduct by American businesses operating in China today.

The rule makes in order consideration of all four of those amendments. I commend all four of the Members for their amendments. They are good amendments, and adoption of the amendments will certainly make the bill something we can all support.

I also thank the Committee on Rules and the leadership of the House for opening up the process on this particular bill. Nobody is being gagged on this very, very important subject. We have four well-reasoned and worthwhile amendments to vote on.

So, I strongly support this rule, and I see no reason for a recorded vote.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. SLAUGHTER of New York. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOSI].

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from New York [Ms. SLAUGHTER] for yielding.

I, too, want to add my support for the rule and commend the Committee on Rules for their sensitivity on this issue of importance to Members of Congress. Because of the hard work of the Committee on Rules we are able today to bring to the floor four amendments which I believe will be a vast improvement to the Pease bill. The Committee on Ways and Means worked very hard on the Pease legislation. I think it is good legislation. I think it could be better, and those of us who are not members of the Committee on Ways and Means will be today given our opportunity to present some additional strengthening amendments to the Pease bill.

Mr. Speaker, I think, when that is accomplished and the House of Representatives votes overwhelmingly in favor of the Pease bill, we will, in addition to the statement that was made earlier today, be sending forth a very good package of two options to be considered in our trade policy with China.

I know the rule is not controversial. I do not want to take up any more of the House's time, but I do thank the committee again, as far as my own amendment is concerned, and also I commend the good work of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOLFE], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PORTER] and the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER] in crafting their amendments to this bill which I believe will make a big improvement to it.

Ms. SLAUGHTER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Ms. SLAUGHTER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MAZZOLI). Pursuant to House Resolution 503 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 4939.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 4939) regarding the extension of most-favored-nation treatment to the products of the People's Republic of China, and for other purposes, with Mrs. BYRON in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the bill is considered as having been read the first time.

Under the rule, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] will be recognized for 1 hour, and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] will be recognized for 1 hour. The majority time will be under the control of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS].

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS].

Mr. GIBBONS. Madam Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Chairman, this is essentially a replay of the last vote we had. This is just a little different. Let me try to explain the difference.

This bill, if it becomes law, will put additional burdens upon the President in granting MFN to China next year, not this year.

In the Committee on Ways and Means and the Subcommittee on Trade, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PEASE], a very distinguished member of our committee, took it upon himself working with others on the committee to draft what he thought was a sensible imposition of additional human rights requirements upon the Government of China.

The administration worked with us, expressing concern all the time about making this bill so tough that no one could comply with it.

There are some real problems in China. All Members know that. I thought when we wrote the Pease bill, adopted it as a committee bill and brought it to the floor, that perhaps we had reached an agreement with the President that he would sign the bill.

Now, all Members who have been around here any time know how every President plays his power. He does not tell you point blank yes or point blank no. He prefers to play his cards as they come to him.

When I appeared before the Committee on Rules seeking a rule for this bill, I had received, and so had all Members of the Congress received, a statement from the White House about this bill.

As in all statements you get from the White House on subjects like this, you get a rather ambiguous statement. But this statement was very clear in one point. It said if this bill were toughened, if this bill were toughened and made harsher, the President would be advised by his senior advisers to veto the legislation.

In effect, I took that to mean if it is toughened beyond what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PEASE] and the committee think it should be, that the bill has no chance of becoming law.

I think all Members saw from the last vote that there are not enough votes in this Chamber to override the veto of the President. I think that is in the best interest of America. China will not become free if we walk away from it, nor if we impose upon it restrictions that they cannot possibly meet.

I am no expert on China, but I have been there more than most Americans have, and I have studied their history and culture and talked to their people. When you study their history and culture, you will know that for 6,000 years of civilization they have had a violent history and a violent past.

Their past in the last 100 years has been most violent. They were oppressed by the Japanese for about 40 years, plunder, pillage, and rape. The rape of Nanking by the Japanese goes down as one of the most dastardly acts in human behavior.

Prior to that, all of the Western Powers, with the exception of the United States, carved out spheres of influence in China and tried to impose their will upon them, and even propagated the dastardly trade in narcotics, until the Chinese themselves had to take pretty severe action to cut off that trade.

So China has had a history of mistreatment from the outside, a history of mistreatment from the inside, but yet they constitute one-fifth of all the people on Earth. One-fifth of all the people on Earth are crowded in a very narrow agrarian area. Yes, China looks big on the map, but most of the territory you see is uninhabitable. It is mountainous or desert. Most of them live near the coastline, and they live in desperate conditions, conditions that really are not conducive to human rights.

So we must consider all of that as we look to the future. Yes, we need to demand a better standard. None of us in this Chamber, none within the sound of my voice, condone what happened in Tiananmen Square. It was violent, it was unacceptable, but it happened.

Since that time, the Chinese behavior has been much better. We have worked with them. We have talked with them. We do not want to cut off contact with the Chinese people.

We are the only people in the Western World, the only people on Earth, who are talking to them in a civilized manner about expanding freedom, about expanding human rights. If we walk away from China, there will be no one to talk to them. They will be taken over again by the Japanese, as they almost were during the 1940's and in the 20 years prior to that.

Let us keep America's presence in there. It is in the best interest of every American, and it is in the best interests of every Chinese citizen. We need to keep working with these people in a sensible, humane manner. Let us not in our zeal to impose our ideals and our standards upon one-fifth of the people on Earth let our zeal carry us away.

I do not measure my zeal for freedom in any lesser terms than any Member in this Chamber. I had the responsibility of risking my life for human rights. I do not think we ought to be comparing each other's patriotism or human rights zeal. We need to talk about practical ways that we can solve the problem of intolerance, of the lack of human rights by our standards in China.

Madam Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FRENZEL. Madam Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Madam, Chairman, this bill is not quite as drastic as the one the House just dispatched. It seeks to modify the existing Jackson-Vanik law to provide that until the People's Republic of China does some wonderful things that we would like to have it do, they will be in jeopardy of losing MFN.

Madam Chairman, it seems to me that the resolution of disapproval was the right way for those who were interested in human rights to crack the whip over China. I thought it was wrong, but it made more sense than this bill. It would have disrupted our trading relationships for years into the future and hurt American consumers and hurt American jobs, nevertheless, that was the direct way to approach it.

This bill messes around with Jackson-Vanik. If we pass it, we will set a precedent that this House and this country and this world will come soon to regret.

What we will do is that we will decide that every time another country in the world is guilty of some conduct that we find offensive, we will change the Jackson-Vanik law and potentially deny them the benefits of normal trading relationships.

This House went through an interesting little game earlier this week in which we tried to decide how we were going to finance certain aspects of the arts through the National Endowment. Some of us thought certain conduct was reprehensible and unacceptable; others of us thought it was a simple exercise of freedom.

I can see in the future, if we pass the Pease bill, that the successor to it will be to penalize, by denying MFN to those countries who decide that their definition of art is different from ours. That is the direction in which the Pease bill leads us.

Trade is something that binds the countries of the world together. We need to separate our commercial relationships from our definitions of what is good conduct by other countries. When we do attempt to sever our commercial relationships and when, in fact, we do sever them, we simply lose our ability to influence those countries which we would like to influence.

As a matter of fact, since the incident in Tiananmen Square, which we will abhor and regret, and which we all criticize with the same amount of vigor, the People's Republic of China has tried to respond to the United States' initiatives. The PRC has not done nearly as well as we would have liked it to do. However, in the crisis in the Persian Gulf, the Chinese have responded in exactly the way that we would like them to do. They have joined in the embargo. They have denounced Saddam Hussein and Iraq for the unlawful occupation. And they have, although it has been denied on this floor, stopped their military shipments to Iraq.

A previous speaker on the previous resolution suggested that the Chinese were in process of sending military equipment to Iraq. There has been no proof of that, no evidence presented other than speeches on this floor.

There was another speaker here who indicated that the PRC may be helping Iraq to make nuclear weapons. The Chinese have assured us that their one contribution, the shipment of lithium hydride, has been suspended. We believe that it has.

I think we must all remember that during the Iran war lots of people sold arms to Iraq. Certainly United States arms flowed rather freely into that war on the side of Iraq as well.

What we have to determine is we are going to have either a normal commercial relationship or we are going to declare, across the board, this kind of embargo. That would be exceedingly unwise and would cost the American consumers dearly and cost American jobs. There is not a good reason to do this.

I, along with other Members of the House, do not condone the human rights violations. I hope we will see them pass, but I think we need to continue our efforts to influence the Chinese and continue our trading relationships with them.

One other speaker on an earlier bill concerned me, and that was one Member's statement that Jackson-Vanik brought the Russian economy to its knees. Madam Chairman, what brought the Russian economy to its knees was rust, and not Jackson-Vanik.

Madam Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Madam Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Chairman, every Member in this Chamber knows what happened on June 4, 1989, in Tiananmen Square in China. The events of that day sharply altered the image of China's leaders in the United States and other countries. The unprovoked massacre of hundreds of peaceful demonstrators, and the jailing of many more, was an action that no civilized society can justify or excuse.

We are considering today a measure, H.R. 4939, which is intended to respond to the violent actions of the Chinese leadership last year and their failure over the past year to rescind the repression that has followed. I urge my colleagues to vote for the bill and to oppose the four amendments which will be offered.

H.R. 4939 adds seven new objectives, relating to the overall human rights situation in China, to the freedom of emigration objectives which must be taken into account when the President decides whether or not to extend China's most-favored-nation status in 1991. Among the objectives called for are a reversal of the pattern of gross violations of internationally recognized human rights dating from June 1989; an accounting for citizens detained or accused as a result of the nonviolent expression of their political beliefs; and the termination of fees or restrictions on foreign travel by students or other citizens.

This bill is not perfect. It does not go as far as some Members would like to force the President to cut off China's most-favored-nation status if China fails to adhere to each and every goal set out by the United States Congress. But the bill is a good bill. It represents a positive middle ground on a highly controversial issue. It sends a strong message to the Chinese Government that the status quo is not acceptable. It puts the President on notice that, unless tangible steps are taken by the Chinese Government to improve human rights, the Congress is not likely to approve future designation of China for MFN eligibility. Yet, it provides the President with sufficient latitude and flexibility to maximize his leverage in dealing with the Chinese Government and the human rights of its citizens.

Some of my colleagues would like to toughen the conditions of H.R. 4939. I appreciate the sincerity of the Members who would like to add additional conditions to this bill. I even support some of the concepts that are being discussed. However, I am opposed to any modifications to H.R. 4939 because I believe it is preferable to enact a meaningful bill that sends a strong message to the administration and the Chinese Government. Adoption of the amendments being proposed today in all likelihood will result in a Presidential veto of this bill. I urge my colleagues to vote for H.R. 4939 and to oppose all amendments.

Madam Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SCHULZE. Madam Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON].

Mr. SOLOMON. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time.

Madam Chairman, let me just say something to my good friend, one of the most important and effective Members of this Congress, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL], whom I have the greatest respect for. He said that there was no proof at all that China was selling chemicals to Iraq that could help make nuclear missiles, chemical weapons, et cetera. May I just for the RECORD submit two articles, one from the London Sunday Independent, and the other from the Washington Post, which discuss these sales.

The articles referred to follow:

CHINESE ARMS DEALERS FLAUNT U.N. EMBARGO—CHINA SHIPS VITAL NUCLEAR CARGO TO IRAQ

(By Tim Kelsey)

In flagrant breach of the United Nations embargo, China has sold Iraq large quantities of a rare chemical used in the manufacture of nuclear weapons and missile fuel. The Independent on Sunday has learned that, in a secret deal 10 days ago, a subsidiary of North China Industries Corporation (Norinco), a Chinese state company, agreed to supply about seven tons of lithium hydride to Baghdad.

The revelation is likely to have grave diplomatic repercussions, since it jeopardizes Peking's attempts to remove the stain of Tananmen and to improve its reputation in the West. As a permanent member of the UN Security Council, China has aligned itself with the West on a number of crucial votes, including resolution 661 in August, which banned trade with Iraq. It is possible that the central government in Peking may not have been made aware by Norinco of the deal.

Intelligence reports relating to possible sales to Iraq by Norinco have already aroused concern in Washington. Earlier this week, the US embassy in Peking advised the Chinese of US anxiety over the company's activities. It is not known if this related to the lithium hydride deal.

The sale has shocked and alarmed scientists and weapons proliferation experts. "In view of its potential nuclear applications, it is very serious indeed," said Frank Barnaby, a former Aldermaston scientist and author on military technology.

The most frightening, but in an Iraqi context least likely application of lithium hydride, is in hydrogen bombs. Only five countries, including China and Britain, have tested hydrogen bombs and scientists agree that Iraq will not have the know-how to build such a weapon for at least a decade. But defense experts say that Saddam Hussein is stockpiling components for future development of such a weapon. Lithium hydride is also of use in making the atom bomb, although alternatives are available which can perform the same functions. Intelligence sources believe Iraq may be able to build an atom bomb within five years.

It is thought most likely that Iraq wants the chemical for use in fuel for ballistic missiles. It is working on rockets capable of reaching Tel Aviv, Riyadh, and southern Europe.

Scientists are also worried that lithium hydride could be used in the manufacture of nerve gasses. "It is a precursor for lithium aluminium hydride, which is an extremely powerful reducing agent, and potentially of use in the production of nerve gasses," said Julian Perry-Robinson, an internationally-respected authority on chemical weapons. John Hassard, a weapons proliferation expert at Imperial College, London, said: "This is extremely disturbing, particularly in view of Iraq's proven use of nerve gas in the past. It is a very grave potential problem."

Lithium hydride has very few civil applications. It is used in pharmaceutical and in the computer industry, but only in minute quantities. Iraq is believed to have tried to buy the chemical in the past, but there are only three manufacturers in the West, all of whom would have been suspicious of an order even one-tenth this size.

The sale was conducted in great secrecy. Just before the UN arms embargo was imposed, sales material was sent from Peking to five arms dealers worldwide, including three in Europe and one in Latin America. The Independent on Sunday has obtained copies of some of the documents. They suggest potential uses for the chemical "in the space industry as a high energy fuel" and "as an excellent catalyst used in the organic-synthesis industry" which could include the manufacture of poison gas.

The Chinese offered 10 tons for sale, priced at around $210,000 a ton. The offer was open to any purchaser, but within days Iraq agreed to buy around seven tons, at a total cost of approximately $1.5m, according to defence sources. Delivery was to be within 20–30 days of purchase.

It is likely that the lithium hydride is still in China. Sources suspect the Chinese planned to fly it to Tehran, and then forward it as "pharmaceuticals" to Baghdad.

It was clearly intended to be a pilot sale; it was confirmed to parties approached by the Chinese that additional quantities of lithium hydride were available. This has underscored the worst fears of weapons proliferations experts in the West. "There has always been a tension between commercial expedience and their concern for international security," said one. "It's hard to imagine a more cynical deal than this one."

CHINESE SAID TO SELL CHEMICAL TO IRAQ—BRITISH NEWSPAPER REPORTS THAT BEIJING VIOLATED U.N. EMBARGO

(By Lena H. Sun)

BEIJING, Sept. 30—China, in apparent violation of the U.N. trade embargo against Iraq, has sold Baghdad large quantities of chemical used in the manufacture of nuclear weapons and missile fuel, a British newspaper reported today.

The Independent, in a story from London, said a subsidiary of North China Industries Corp., one of China's largest defense conglomerates, agreed to supply about seven tons of lithium hydride to Baghdad for about $1.5 million in a secret deal 10 days ago. The Independent said it had some documents relating to the sale.

The Chinese Foreign Ministry today denied that China had violated the embargo and called the Independent's report "totally groundless."

An unidentified spokesman quoted by the official New China News Agency said: "China is a responsible country. We have been holding a very serious attitude toward the implementation of Resolution 661," which was passed by the Security Council on Aug. 6 and bars U.S.N. members from trading with Iraq.

The newspaper report said the Iraqis most likely want the chemical for fuel for ballistic missiles. It said Iraqi President Saddam Hussein has previously tried to obtain lithium hydride, but that the three Western manufacturers of the chemical are suspicious of large orders.

China, a permanent member of the U.N. Security Council, has aligned itself with the West on sanctions against Iraq, imposed after Iraqi troops invaded Kuwait on Aug. 2. China is said to hope its cooperation with the West in the Persian Gulf crisis will lead to improved relations with the United States and other Western countries and to the lifting of sanctions imposed after the Chinese army crackdown on demonstrators for democracy last year.

But ever since the U.N. embargo against Iraq was approved, rumors have circulated in Beijing about possible violations by the to improved relations with the United States and other Western countries and to the lifting of sanctions imposed after the Chinese army crackdown on demonstrators for democracy last year.

plies conditions to the renewal of MFN status for China that will automatically come up next summer. So these two bills are complementary, they are not contradictory of each other. A Member can vote in good conscience for both of them, and we should.

In both cases we are sending a timely message to the Government of China about the deteriorating human rights conditions in that country, and they continue to deteriorate day after day. We are saying: Start cleaning up the mess now, and don't expect to be let off the hook next summer, China. I am convinced that it will take a constant and committed application of pressure on China before we can really expect to see any improvement at all.

Chinese leaders pride themselves on taking the long view. We have to take the long view as well, and we have to keep up the pressure on them. It is the only way we are going to get anything done.

Madam Chairman, let me make it clear that the House just passed my resolution of disapproval; the President should sign it, but if he does not, then the Pease bill here may be the only other measure that can be endone.

nation trading status beyond next June.

During floor debate today, each of us has been asked to choose between two different tactical approaches to United States trade relations with China. One approach, the Solomon resolution, would simply cut off MFN for China immediately. The House has worked its will on the Solomon amendment.

The other approach, which is my bill, condemns the brutal suppression of the prodemocracy movement in China and creates leverage and influence to promote respect for basic rights in China.

I urge the Members to support H.R. 4939 as reported from the House Committee on Ways and Means. Read it and compare it with current law. Clearly it offers valuable leverage to use in pressing the Government of China to improve its respect for basic human rights while it also definitely preserves an opening for continued United States-China trade.

H.R. 4939 sends a clear message to Beijing officials. It says that America values our political and economic ties to China enough to maintain our trade preserves an opening for continued United States-China trade.

rights to the Chinese people before MFN treatment is withdrawn.

Already the shaping of H.R. 4939 and the prospect of its enactment has borne fruit by creating uncertainty over China's MFN status. This bill has helped secure the release of a leading dissident and hundreds of other political prisoners.

In addition, the Government of China in recent months has undertaken some helpful foreign policy steps including a cutoff of Chinese arms sales to Iraq and Chinese support for the assorted United Nations resolutions isolating Iraq.

Finally, there is no disputing that H.R. 4939 has the best chance of becoming law. Just a few days ago, the White House stated that the President will veto any amendment on legislation that goes beyond H.R. 4939, as reported. According to the statement of administration policy on the China MFN issue, the administration strongly opposes enactment of H.R. 4939, that is, my bill, but the administration is not threatening to veto it. The same statement unequivocally says the President will veto the Solomon resolution.

For a more effective China policy, I urge the Members to support H.R. 4939 and oppose any amendments. Passing H.R. 4939, as reported, is the only way for Congress to reshape United States policy toward China this year.

We must act prudently and go as far as we can now to hold the Government of China directly responsible and the White House secondarily accountable for the protection of human rights inside China.

Madam Chairman, let me conclude by saying that I do not think very many of us want to cut off trade entirely with China, and isolate a nation of 1.1 billion people, one-fifth of the world's population. How much better for us to use our leverage to influence Chinese behavior rather than isolating China and losing all influence that we might have to improve the human rights conditions for Chinese citizens.

Cutting off MFN as the Solomon language would do may make us feel good and a lot of people voted for it today, but if we want to actually influence Chinese policy, it is prudent for us to pass this bill and send it to the Senate, get it passed, so that the President will sign it and we have a chance to have something influencing MFN for China on the lawbooks.

Mr. SCHULZE. Madam Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Madam Chairman, in its present form, I rise in opposition to H.R. 4939, which allows China's most-favored-nation or MFN trading status for 1990 to continue.

If the amendments as proposed are all adopted, it would certainly make it a better piece of legislation, but my preference is that measure which we did pass and the House has spoken today.

The idea of conditioning China's 1991 MFN status on whether it makes significant progress toward meeting certain human rights objectives essentially gives China that one more chance, and it is that same one more chance that it has received since 1980.

China's emigration policy, the true determinant under our law of whether a nation is entitled to MFN status, was deplorable in 1980, is deplorable in 1990, and even worsened as a result of the massacre in Tiananmen Square.

China's emigration policy was, and still is, inconsistent with the freedom of emigration requirements set forth in our law, the Jackson-Vanik law.

Enough is enough. China's MFN status should not be extended at all. That privilege must be revoked and should have been a long time ago.

The measure at hand is little more than a watered-down slap on the wrist, a slap the repressive Chinese leaders would merely laugh at and welcome with open arms.

That merciless regime knows that H.R. 4939 gives it the flexibility and wiggle room it needs to continue restricting the emigration of citizens and to carry out its brutal human rights abuses and religious persecution.

Am I implying that supporters of this bill condone the harsh policies of the Chinese Government, or are any less outraged than I am with that regime? No, I am not. What I am saying is that H.R. 4939 is the wrong message at the wrong time. Given the fact that the President will veto anything we submit to him, sending messages seems to be our only viable option. It does not make sense to send a feeble message such as H.R. 4939, to a brutally repressive Chinese regime that only deals in and understands extremes.

Since 1980, as permitted under Jackson-Vanik, we have granted MFN treatment in hopes of encouraging that nation to adopt emigration and human rights policies consistent with our requirements. Essentially, we chose the softer carrot approach over the tougher stick method. For 9 years, until 1989, we can say that China's emigration policy simply contradicted the Jackson-Vanik law, clearly a travesty in and of itself. Since June 1989's Tiananmen massacre, China's leadership has violated and made an absolute mockery of our law, and we have stood by and watched. We must defeat this measure unless it is radically changed because it is wrong, because China's emigration policy violates our trade laws, and because the policy of granting MFN status as an enticement has proven a failure.

Madam Chairman, we have had, and we will hear stated on the floor that the Chinese leaders have softened their approach, have changed. I would just like to read from the October 1, 1990, current edition of the Free Chinese Journal, and a story about the Communist Party President in China.

The Peking leader who allegedly ordered the Chinese Communist Army to fire on students at Tiananmen Square has been castigated by the Republic of China's official government spokesman for appearing to be just as trigger happy in regard to Taiwan. Yang Shang-Kun, Vice President of the Chinese Communist Party's powerful military commission, told the China Times that it might be necessary to invade Taiwan to keep it from becoming independent or being unduly influenced by other countries.

Does that sound to Members like the regime who says they are not sorry for what they have done? I urge a "no" vote on this resolution, and support of the amendments which will be offered.

Mr. GIBBONS. Madam Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AUCOIN].

Mr. AUCOIN. Madam Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman yielding time to me.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania has made a statement about Chinese immigration that flatly, is flatly rebutted by the State Department and his own administration.

What the State Department says is that the President is explicitly required to determine if extension of MFN waiver to China would substantially promote freedom of emigration. The State Department says, in a statement I have here, that it does not believe that it would. It goes on to say, "Approximately 17,000 Chinese nationals received U.S. immigration visas to travel from the Mainland in 1989."

So the gentleman's statement is wrong, contradicted by his own administration.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume to say that I think some things need to be refuted, because they are circulating on this floor. One individual is circulating on the floor, and I do not know who it is, an article out of the British press saying that the Chinese are shipping vital nuclear materials to Iraq. Then, the Washington Post copies the same story.

The evidence from our Government and from the Chinese Government, from the highest source in our Government, is that this article is completely fallacious; that the Chinese have been cooperating completely with the embargo; that while the contract for a sale took place some time ago of this type of material, this material has not been shipped. I think that whoever is circulating that story should withdraw it from circulation. Of course, we have under our freedom of speech the right to circulate even material that is fallacious, but I think we should either withdraw it or come to Members and let Members explain to them that this material is incorrect.

This debate should not draw rancor, and this debate should not elicit falsehood. The best knowledge and the highest sources in our Government state that these two articles are completely fallacious. They have been denied all around.

Madam Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOSI].

Ms. PELOSI. Madam Chairman, it ranges from amusing to sad to hear the gentleman from Washington quote the State Department statistics, when I have a letter here that I will enter into the RECORD, a letter from the State Department. It says in part:

In our view, there is no well-founded fear of persecution upon return to the People's Republic of China on the basis of race, religion, nationality, membership in a social group, or political opinion.

So, if we are using the State Department as the source, I would like to characterize the source as a not very good one when it comes to China, because if our own State Department can say there is no well-founded fear of persecution on the basis of political opinion in China, I believe that it would color any other statement that they want to make in relationship to China because they obviously have a different policy view and different standards.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, DC, June 25, 1990.

Mr. DAVID N. ILCHERT,
District Director, Immigration and Naturalization Service, San Francisco, CA.

DEAR MR. ILCHERT: This is in response to your letter asking for an advisory opinion on the above applicant's request for asylum in the United States.

We have carefully reviewed the application. In our view, the applicant fails to demonstrate a well-founded fear of persecution upon return to People's Republic of China on the basis of race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group, or political opinion.

Our opinion is based on information about country conditions and other relevant factors available to the Department of State through its conduct of foreign affairs, together with the information specific to the applicant provided in the application. We do not have independent information about this applicant.

The strength of the application may be affected by your interview or hearing, or additional information subsequently presented by the applicant. Should you believe that any such additional information warrants further consideration, we will be happy to review the file again.

I trust that this advisory opinion will be helpful to you in reaching a decision in this case.

Sincerely,

MARY VON BRIESEN,
Director, Office of Asylum Affairs, Bureau of Human Rights and Humanitarian Affairs.

Mr. SCHULZE. Madam Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CRANE], a member of the Subcommittee on Trade.

Mr. CRANE. Madam Chairman, I rise today in support of H.R. 4939 without amendment. The issue of the extension of MFN status to the People's Republic of China has been hotly debated in the United States for the past several months. The Committee on Ways and Means held extensive hearings on this issue and heard testimony from a wide range of interested parties. At the conclusion of the hearings, the consensus among the majority of the committee members was that the United States needed to develop an effective policy which would meet two objectives: First, send a strong message to the Chinese Government that the United States will not tolerate their gross violation of human rights, and, second, protect the interests of the innocent people in China and Hong Kong.

There is no doubt that withdrawing MFN from China will send an unmistakable message of condemnation to Beijing. However, if we choose to follow this avenue, the United States will relinquish every available means with which to leverage the Chinese to improve their human rights record. And while there are certainly economic and political benefits of maintaining the status quo, the United States cannot allow these factors to overshadow the more important issue, which is our commitment to those who suffer oppression at the hands of their government. H.R. 4939 is carefully crafted to provide incentive for the Chinese Government to improve its human rights record but at the same time does not severely restrict our ability to help meet the needs of the innocent Chinese people.

There are two very important provisions in H.R. 4939 which have not been given as much attention as some of the others. The first measure requires the President to take into account the potential economic and political effects that an extension of MFN may have on Hong Kong. Since 70 percent of Chinese exports to the United States are shipped through Hong Kong, the withdrawal of MFN is likely to have a devastating impact on its economy. Any threat to Hong Kong's prosperity is in effect a threat to the rights and freedoms which the Chinese people in that colony currently enjoy. The continued success of Hong Kong's economy will help ensure that the People's Republic of China will stand by its promise of "one country, two systems" when control of Hong Kong transfers from Great Britain to the People's Republic of China in 1997. The loss of economic well-being is tantamount to the loss of self-rule which may or may not be granted to Hong Kong in the years ahead. Given these realities, it is imperative that the President weigh these considerations carefully when he decides whether to extend MFN to China in 1991. This provision simply serves as a reminder to do so.

The second measure which I would like to bring to your attention calls on the President to consider the degree to which China has relaxed its opposition to the Republic of China's application to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade in deciding whether to extend MFN to China. Despite strong support from the Congress, the administration has not yet endorsed Taiwan's application due to the objections from the People's Republic of China. Through this provision, the Congress in effect sends two messages. One message is directed toward President Bush to let him know that Congress is serious in its support for Taiwan's application. The second, and more important message, will communicate to the People's Republic of China that the United States stands behind countries which advance freedom and democracy over nations that continue to violate basic human rights.

A May 25, 1990, Wall Street Journal editorial suggested that Congress could take actions to "help wipe the grin off Deng Xiaoping's face without hurting the Chinese people." I believe H.R. 4939 does exactly this. I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Mr. GIBBONS. Madam Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOSI], who I must say has been very active and very sincere and very effective in all her participation in this debate.

Ms. PELOSI. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time, and I thank him for all his hard work and his attention to try to shape a bill that would send a correct message and establish a correct policy in terms of trade on China and human rights.

The gentleman knows that I have the utmost respect for his concern about human rights, his knowledge about China and his unmatched knowledge about trade matters; however, the gentleman also knows that we have a difference of opinion about the strength of the message that should be sent.

Just to clarify for the benefit of our colleagues who are not clear on the difference between the Solomon resolution that preceded this legislative action, the Solomon bill, as the gentleman explained, would cut off most-favored-nation status to China immediately.

The Pease bill which I support, and I commend the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PEASE] also for his hard work in putting together that legislation, the Pease bill addresses what happens next June and it puts some conditions in on which significant progress must be made before MFN can be granted or renewed for China.

My complaint about the Pease bill is that it is not strong enough. In the course of the amendment process, I will advance my own amendment and support the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOLF], the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER], and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PORTER].

The opportunity that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PEASE], the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS], and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] give us here today is that when they bring the Ways and Means Committee work here, the committee has worked its will. It has come back with a bill that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] has described as not perfect and a bill that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PEASE] has described as subtle; so in light of that, I think the bill could be vastly improved.

I think if we can merge our groups, those who supported the Solomon resolution this morning, those who support a strengthened Pease bill, we do not need a Presidential signature. We will be able to attain two-thirds for a really serious statement about China. It is a serious issue and we must make a statement that means something, and not just take the weakest line of resistance.

Madam Chairman, I want to call the attention of the House again to the lone man before the tank. It has been said that one picture is worth a thousand words. In this case, one picture is worth a thousand deaths, at least a thousand deaths.

I need not retell the tragic story of Tiananmen Square. We all know that. It is etched in the minds of everyone in this body, all champions of human rights.

I commended the body this morning in recalling our protections for the Chinese students when this body alone stood as the bastion of democracy and human rights in the world, but I do think that if we are going to send a message, we should not fool ourselves into thinking that just a nice statement discussing significant progress is the appropriate message. Later I will go into more detail about my own amendment, which addresses for the most part the prisoners who have been detained since Tiananmen Square, and that is really what we want to talk about today. We have rehashed Tiananmen Square over and over again. It is a terrible tragedy, but nothing has changed since then in terms of human rights. The release of one or two people on the basis of public opinion and some other hundreds, as I say, is small compared to the tens of thousands or maybe 10,000 who may be imprisoned because they spoke up, because they took the head of the message we sent when we spent money to send a message over the Voice of America, a message of democracy and freedom that they, just like people in other places in the world, just like people in America, had the right to democracy. They were killed for having a dream. We cannot forget the marchers of democracy.

As I say, I will go into the particulars about my amendment and look forward to supporting Congressmen WOLF, MILLER, and PORTER on their very fine amendments, which I think would make this package complete, which would unify this House of Representatives on a message that no, it does not cut off MFN unless the President decides that some significant progress has been made in the case of some conditions and that some conditions have been met when it comes to documenting and releasing the prisoners of democracy.

I understand the trade issue. My district in San Francisco is built on trade, and we have many people who do business with mainland China there. So I do not have the full support of my district when I talk about MFN for China; but the fact is that we should know that China, as I mentioned earlier, has a $6 billion trade surplus with the United States, moving on to $10 billion this year. They need our trade.

People have mentioned here that China may cut off MFN unilaterally unless we become more in keeping with their way of thinking on this issue. The fact is, they are not going to cut off a $10 billion gravy train for them when it comes to their surplus of trade with the United States.

They have said to leave it to the President, let him have the discretion. In my response to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AUCOIN] I mentioned that the State Department—can you imagine this, my colleagues, after all that we went through last year to protect the students, with all the assurances that the President of the United States has given us about protecting the students—that some dissidents who have applied for asylum have been told by the State Department that there is no well-founded fear of persecution in China on the basis of political opinion. How can we leave it up to them to determine?

Let us get a two-thirds vote on the Pease amendment. Let us commend the Ways and Means Committee for working its will. Let this House work its will by giving a big strong vote for the amendments which improve the package, still make it a moderate piece of legislation compared to what the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] had such a big victory on this morning, but I believe we have an opportunity to bring us together and I think we have a responsibility to those whom we have encouraged to speak out for democracy.

Again, as I say, when the amendment process comes along we will talk about the prisoners, the religious persecution and the rest; but let us not abandon the man before the tank.

Mr. SCHULZE. Madam Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Madam Chairman, I think to reward the Communist Chinese with continued most-favored-nation status in view of what happened in Tiananmen Square and what is going on in that country is worse than a mistake. I think it is a sin. To reward godless communism for the repression that they are putting on their own people is a sin.

One of my colleagues said 1 minute ago that we need to work with them to make sure they stand by their promises regarding Hong Kong.

I talked to a Chinese person who fled Communist China, and he told me, "You cannot trust the Chinese Communists, you cannot trust them." So what makes us believe they will stand by their promises regarding Hong Kong in a few short years?

Let us talk about Tiananmen Square. We all saw what they did, 10,000 students crushed under those tanks.

What did we do about it? We sent our Assistant Secretary of State to Beijing along with the head of the NSC, and they toasted the Chinese Communist leaders. That is a sin, it is wrong.

In addition, in Tiananmen Square there are 20 million people, many of them political prisoners from the Tiananmen Square debacle, in those prisons that are enforced labor camps, making products that they are selling to the rest of the world and a lot to the United States of America. And we are giving most-favored-nation status for this slave labor that they are using to make products to send to this country.

It is wrong, it is dead wrong. But in addition to that, let me give you some other information. In Kwang Dong Province they are taking children from 9 to 14 years out of the school and putting them into forced factories and producing textiles that they are selling to the United States of America and the rest of the world.

Do we want to pay for that? Is that what we want, here in America? I think not. I think it is a sin.

Twenty million people, 2,000 gulags, and they are forcing these people, political prisoners among them, to make products that we buy, and we are giving them most-favored-nation status to do it.

America is the land of the free and the home of the brave, and we believe in freedom and democracy. How can we tolerate this kind of oppression, how can we tolerate these human rights violations? It is a sin, it is a sin.

I just want to end by asking one question: What price exports, what price freedom?

Mr. GIBBONS. Madam Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Chairman, I hope the gentleman who has just spoken does not think that the President is a sinner. I disagree with the President from time to time, but I hope he does not think that he is a sinner. I understand the strength of his arguments, but I do not accuse anyone of that.

Madam Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHEUER].

Mr. SCHEUER. Madam Chairman, I rise in support of House Joint Resolution 4939 and the four amendments. They make MFN in China conditional on significant improvements in human rights in China.

I would like to congratulate the chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PEASE], who has worked so hard and given such fine leadership; our colleague, the gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOSI]; the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON]. All of them have made major contributions to this emerging consensus that the conduct of the Chinese Government in Tiananmen Square last June 4 and subsequently is offensive and unacceptable. It is an affront to the conscience of mankind. Nothing could better demonstrate the courage of the individual Chinese students who are thirsting and yearning for democracy than the picture of that valiant young man defying a column of tanks in the street of Beijing. That is what it is all about.

Madam Chairman, Tiananmen Square and the happenings of June 4 that we have been over and over on the floor of this House still shock us, still offend us, still traumatize us.

I feel that our Government has shown ever since then, a pusillanimous and faint-hearted response to the outrages of this small group of aging, despotic mandarins in Beijing.

Madam Chairman, I have the highest regard for our Deputy Secretary of State, Lawrence Eagleburger, and high regard for our National Security Advisor, Brent Scowcroft. But I think it was ill-advised of them, surreptitiously and secretly to make midnight visits to the Chinese mainland within a month of these outrages on June 4. I think that sent a wrong signal about America and what we stand for.

Madam Chairman, our country for 200 years has been the beacon light of liberty we have held aloft a compact between a government and its people, based on freedom, the hollowed rights of the individual a concept that government is designed to serve the people, not enslave them.

We have lit the way for other nations. We have had an enormous success in Eastern Europe and in Central Europe and in the Soviet Union in the last year. It is our example that they are following, it is our leadership that Secretary Gorbachev was following when he liberated the eastern and central countries of Europe, when he liberated the Baltic countries, when he liberated the Russian republics to move toward multiparty democracy, and when he destroyed the monopoly of the Soviet state on political power; it was our lead that he has followed.

For 200 years our leadership has been preeminent. The Chinese people care about liberty. They have demonstrated that.

Is there the slightest scintilla of evidence that the Chinese people care less about liberty than the people of Eastern and Central Europe and the people in the Soviet Union itself? There has not been any history of democracy in Eastern and Central Europe except for the Masryk regime for a very short number of years in Czechoslovakia.

In Russia they have virtually no experience with democracy. Even in the gulf coast states, those Arab sheikdoms, there are now stirrings for democracy. The people of Kuwait seem to want political reform, they do not want simply to reinstall the sheik there, and reestablish the status quo ante.

If the Arabs are looking for more democracy and if the Russians and citizens of Eastern and Central Europe cherish and yearn for democracy, what evidence is there that the Chinese people care any less about democracy, simply because they have not experienced it? They can read, they can listen to the BBC and Voice of America they know what democracy is, and above all they want in.

When the Chinese people moved to Taiwan, they lived under an autocratic state there since 1949, but in recent years they have moved Taiwan toward more democracy, more freedom of speech and more multiparty political activity.

In recent years, as the ominous date 1997 approaches signaling the end of the centuries old British rule, the Chinese people in Hong Kong have demonstrated for more democracy, more political freedom, and enhanced institutions of political activism to be left as the British legacy when they depart in 1997. The fact that they have not gotten it, that Britain has led them down the primrose path and left them little to show in the way of multiparty democracy as their British heritage, does not mean that the Chinese population of Hong Kong wanted it any the less.

Madam Chairman, I represent in Flushing, NY, one of the largest and most dynamic Chinese communities in the United States. It is a source of pleasure and pride for me to represent them, to join with them, in urging our country to stand for the traditional values that have made us admired, respected, and beloved around the world.

We must send the Chinese Government a clear, unmistakable signal that we expect them to join the 20th century, to respect the wave of liberating democracy that is peoples to express themselves in democracy, that is sweeping Eastern and Central Europe. There may be much in China, a continent of over a billion souls, that we do not understand and much that we cannot control. But we can certainly send the hard line Chinese leaders a clear signal of who we are, what we are, what our traditions and values are, what are hopes for the Chinese people are, and the strength of our abhorrence and dismay at their conduct that began on June 4, 1989, and continues today, violating every international civilized norm of human rights and government conduct.

Extending MFN is a myopic and self-defeating policy. It has far-reaching repercussions. Extending MFN would send a message of tacit approval of future human rights violations by foreign governments. It shows the students, the urban workers, the intellectuals, the peasants—the future leaders of China that we are not really interested in democracy abroad. By mouthing a few platitudes, we prove that our commitment is hypocritical at best.

Madam Chairman, that is not good enough.

Mr. SCHULZE. Madam Chairman, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH. Madam Chairman, I rise in strong support of this bill, H.R. 4939, which enumerates a number of conditions the United States should require prior to the extension of MFN to China in 1991. I commend the sponsor of the bill, DONALD PEASE, for his leadership in crafting this language and bringing it before the House for consideration.

The criteria which has been outlined establishes a clear mandate within our human rights and foreign policy and represents a measured response to the deplorable actions taken by the Chinese authorities in recent years. In short, this bill is an appropriate, long-overdue guideline for determining the proper United States response to many of the PRC's repressive policies. The specific objectives which are outlined within the bill are obtainable benchmarks and the Chinese authorities would have approximately 6 months to adjust their policies and bring their actions into conformity with internationally recognized human rights.

While the current language of the measure is commendable, I do plan to support a number of amendments which I believe would strengthen the measure and address important aspects of current Chinese policies.

Madam Chairman, I believe Members should lend their support to this bill which confronts squarely the repressive character of the Communist Chinese authorities. As public policy makers we have an obligation to confront the Chinese Government's systematic arrest of dissidents, the disappearances of freedom-loving democratic activists, the arrest and harassment of religious believers, the ongoing barbaric coercive population control initiatives, and the destruction of Tibetan culture and religious heritage. Their blatant disregard for basic human rights is exemplified in a number of ways.

The massacre in Tiananmen Square was merely an outgrowth of the PRC's long history of torture, killings, coercion, and repression. We were rightfully horrified by the film footage of brave men and women being gunned down in Tiananmen. These were graphic images of a government turned against its people. Most of the other blatant human rights abuses however are not as visible, nor have they been captured on video film, but the brutal reality of the PRC's policies are just as real to the individuals who are inflicted with such repression.

Let us not forget, Madam Chairman, this is the same regime which has embarked on a systematic policy of restricting the free practice of one's religious beliefs. An October 9, 1990, report by News Network International reveals the existence of an official document which verifies "that implementation of a more repressive religious policy is not merely the whim of local Maoist cadres which is a favorite excuse used by Chinese authorities and apologists, but is being officially sanctioned." Wang Hongkui, head of the official Religious Affairs Bureau in Shanghai, calls on Communist Party officials to "divide and smash" those religious leaders who refuse to submit to control by the party, including the underground Catholics who maintain their allegiance to the Vatican.

In an effort by Wang and the Communist Party officials to control religious practice, and the Christian community in particular, the document emanating from the Religious Affairs Bureau, outlines the directives to deal with house church leaders and their congregations through political indoctrination and harassment. The document draws the link between the officially sanctioned Protestant Three-Self Patriotic Movement and the Catholic Patriotic Association, and the expectation—the mandate—by the Communist Party that these entities further the party's policies.

The pressure against the religious communities, and the Christian house churches in particular, through house searches, confiscation of bibles and other Christian literature, arrests and imprisonment has been building in the last few years. I encourage my colleagues to strongly support the amendment offered by my good friend, FRANK WOLF, which addresses the repressive policy against religious believers in China and Tibet.

My colleagues are aware of the brutally coercive policies which the Chinese Government employs—not only in the religious sphere but in family life as well. More and more evidence is pouring out of China that their coercive policies with respect to population control are on the increase. Madam Chairman, I believe this policy of coercion is one of the most egregious abuses of human rights and compassionate human rights activists must not stand by idly—or look the other way. The House of Representatives has correctly voted on at least two occasions to condemn these barbaric practices, including forced abortion and forced sterilization as crimes against humanity.

The coercive policies of Communist China's regime has been meticulously documented by authorities in the field of demographics, the United States Bureau of the Census and the United States Embassy in Beijing, and personal testimonies, and must be viewed in light of internationally recognized human rights.

Dr. John S. Aird, former senior research specialist at the United States Census Bureau's China Division, is soon releasing his definitive book entitled, "Slaughter of the Innocents: Coercive Birth Control in China." In a prepublication summary article, Dr. Aird writes his conclusion that "the Chinese family planning program relies on coercive measures to secure compliance by a largely reluctant population and that the coerciveness of the program has been escalating since 1986 [emphasis added]." Dr. Aird's conclusions are based primarily on hard, irrefutable evidence from Chinese documentary sources, including official directives and instructions, statements by Chinese leaders, and articles in the Chinese media which, of course, clear the official censors.

For the first time, the Chinese media, in 1989, printed articles acknowledging and openly calling for coercion in family planning. In April, the New China News Agency quoted an Agriculture Ministry official declaring that "only coercive measures can be effective in alleviating the problems caused by [the] population explosion * * *." The official added that "temporary coercion is actually a philanthropic and wise policy."

A Shanghai social science journal advocated in August 1989 that compulsory abortion be required for all women who were pregnant before age 25 and all other women pregnant without official permission. Declaring that compulsory abortion was "entirely in accord with the spirit of the Constitution," the author of the journal article contended that those who avoided abortion or concealed pregnancies were to be given prison terms or harsher punishments, including death sentences.

Madam Chairman, these are issues of fundamental human rights—the rights to life—and must be addressed within that rubric.

Let us not forget that China maintains an extensive prison system with as many as 20 million prisoners who contribute extensively to the overall level of production in China. As reported by AFL-CIO Asian-American Free Labor Institute, Charles D. Gray, prisons in the PRC bear two names. The official name distinguishes it within the Public Security Department and the other portrays its role as a normal business enterprise.

Those brave workers who have tried to establish free trade unions have been arrested by their government leaders and have, in many cases, been killed. In contrast, the network of the All-China Federation of Trade Unions, the party's "union," keeps close surveillance over the activities of the workers and does nothing to combat rampant child labor practices and improve the pay for workers who work excessively long hours and gain only a below-subsistence pittance in return. Madam Chairman, I plan to support the amendment being offered by my colleague, JOHN MILLER, which will establish a clear set of principles for companies conducting business in China and Tibet. First on the list of these principles is the restriction against the use of goods or products manufactured by forced labor in the PRC and Tibet.

Madam Chairman, support for this bill is absolutely essential to maintain an acceptable standard for United States-Chinese relations and approval of this bill with the perfecting amendments is the first step in correcting our trade course in response to the brutal tactics of the Peoples Republic of China. I encourage my colleagues to approve this measure and send a strong message to the regime in Beijing that we will no longer look the other way and continue business and trade as usual until substantive reforms are made.

Mr. PEASE. Madam Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AUCOIN].

Mr. AUCOIN. Madam Chairman, I was surprised to hear the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON] indicate that support for H.R. 4939 is a sin. That of course means that his own President, George Bush, is a sinner. He may be a waffler when it comes to taxes, he may favor the rich, rather than the poor, but I do not think George Bush is a sinner.

Furthermore, Madam Chairman, I do not think that it is a sin to support H.R. 4939 or for my colleagues to do so. It does not mean, support of this measure does not mean, that Members are forgetting or support what happened in Tiananmen Square in the past. What it does mean is that Members here want to constructively shape what happens, not only in Tiananmen Square, but in China in the future, and what it means is that we specifically want to use MFN status as the leverage that is necessary to produce the reforms in human rights that we all understand, as demonstrated so vividly in the photograph that the gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOSI] brought to the floor.

Madam Chairman, I was moved, and have been moved, by the eloquence of the gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOSI] on this issue from the beginning, and she is a friend of mine, and I have a high respect for her. I do disagree with the approach that we both have, an approach to this issue. Our goals are exactly the same. I would point out to the gentlewoman, and I would point out to all of my colleagues, that, if they are concerned about human rights, pay attention to what major human rights organizations feel on the Pease legislation.

Madam Chairman, Human Rights Watch supports the Pease legislation without amendment. Asia Watch, the other stellar human rights organization, supports the Pease bill without amendment.

The Pease bill, H.R. 4939, imposes very strict, seven very strict, new human rights conditions that have to be considered by the President in deciding whether or not to extend China's most-favored-nation status in July 1991. It puts, my colleagues, China on notice that improvement in its record of repression since 1989 is necessary if Congress is to support renewal of that status in the future.

There is evidence that that sort of approach does work. We have important sanctions already in place that have resulted in significant, positive steps. This year those include the lifting of martial law, the release of almost 900 political detainees and the departure of one of the leading dissidents and his family in the country of China.

Madam Chairman, I hope my colleagues, in thinking through this legislation and the amendments that will be offered, will consider some other points as well. One of them is this: None of our allies, not one of them, none of our allies, indeed no Western country that we are aware of, conditions most-favored-nation status to China on any kind of a conditional basis, not one of them. Expanding most-favored-nation status as under the Pease bill goes further than any other Western nation. I think we play with fire by amending it any further in the provisions that are in it.

It has been pointed out that we must be careful in exercising our judgment on this legislation and not to go so far as to put in law stipulations and provisions that would hurt Hong Kong. I think that is a valid point. A large segment of the territory's economy depends on United States-China trade and investment, and, if we go too far, I think we rupture that relationship, we rupture the status of people who are very dependent upon that relationship today. Advocates of modernization and reform in China; and they are not only in Hong Kong, they are also throughout China, and I hope Members will think of them today, as well, as they use their judgment on this legislation; Chinese advocates of modernization and reform depend upon connection with the outside world and to the extent to which we can put a carrot at the end of the stick and move toward a shaping of the future by using the Pease bill as leverage for reform, it is the extent to which we make it possible for advocates of modernization and reform in China to build a better China, to build a better status and to develop the kind of connection that we had in Eastern Europe, which ultimately, in my judgment, led to the liberalization, the democratization, of those countries.

Mr. SCHULZE. Madam Chairman, I yield 4½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROOMFIELD].

Mr. BROOMFIELD. I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Madam Chairman, a little over a year and a half ago, the world watched in horror as the Chinese Government unleashed its army on peaceful demonstrators in Tiananmen Square—demonstrators whose only crime was calling for democratic reform and the end to corruption in the Government.

Nations around the world reacted as one in condemnation of the brutality with sanctions against the Chinese Government. Yet we have seen little indication of real improvement in the human rights situation in that country.

Following the tragedy at Tiananmen, there were drastic country-wide crackdowns on participants, supporters, and sympathizers of the demonstrators. These continue today. There have been trials that mock the concept of justice, and summary executions.

The Chinese Government has also continued its efforts to control the news and crush any sense of reform and relaxation. Chinese newspapers once critical of the Government have been shut down. Efforts have also been made to harass foreign correspondents in Beijing and intimidate their sources. The Voice of America continues to be jammed.

Religious persecution has once again reared its ugly head. In Tibet, there have been successive crackdowns against Buddhist monks. Christians throughout China are also being persecuted with a growing volume of house arrests, confiscation of Bibles, and the imprisonment of evangelists and priests.

The Chinese Government has taken certain steps to improve its image on human rights. The Government has released several hundred political prisoners but still refuses to provide an accounting of the many who have been arrested. They have allowed the noted dissident, Fang Lizhi and his family to leave China, and they have formally lifted martial law in Beijing and Tibet. Each of these moves occurred, however, just as Congress was considering an important question about China. It is clear that these were largely efforts to manipulate U.S. policy.

Make no mistake, President Bush has led our Nation along a careful path in avoiding isolating China while making it clear that we are very serious about China's human rights record. The Chinese Government must know that we will never return to "business as usual" as long as their record does not improve.

The administration's policy recognizes the reality of China as a regional power and an important member of the United Nations. Due to this policy, China supported the U.N. resolutions condemning Iraq, and has played a constructive role in reaching an agreement on a framework for a Cambodian settlement. At the same time, the sanctions we implemented after Tiananmen create clear limits on our bilateral relations.

H.R. 4939, introduced by Congressman PEASE, would allow the President to continue this careful approach to relations with China. It would make clear how important the observance of human rights by all countries is to this Nation and to the American people. It would also provide for the continuation of China's most-favored-nation status for another year. If, however, after 1 year—2 years after the massacre at Tiananmen Square—there is still no change in China's human rights record, I believe it would be appropriate to reconsider our trade relationship with China in light of the provisions contained in this bill.

Madam Chairman, this House understands the importance of China in world affairs and the importance of not pushing the Chinese Government into a corner. We also wish to avoid inflicting further suffering on the Chinese people. But our patience with human rights abuses in China is not unlimited and those abuses must be taken into account when we again review MFN next year.

Mr. PEASE. Madam Chairman, I am pleased to yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. APPLEGATE].

Mr. APPLEGATE. Madam Chairman, I rise in support, reluctantly yet, of H.R. 4939. However, I do want to take a moment just to compliment my friend, the Member from Ohio [Mr. PEASE], for bringing this issue forward. I think it is very important.

Madam Chairman, if we are to have a most-favored-nation status at all, then it should be conditioned. However, I believe that it should be stronger.

I am opposed to the MFN for China anyway. However, if we have to have it, I want to have the conditions. In that regard, I am going to support the Pelosi-Wolf-Parker-Miller amendments when they come up. We are told that if we send it to the White House in this form, the President of the United States is going to veto it.

Well, let me say this. It always seems strange to me that people, especially Republicans, will always say to the Democrats, "It is your fault for everything that is going on, because you control everything. You control the committees, you control the House, and so it is the Democrats' fault."

Yet the President of the United States has used his veto power 13 times, and he is going to use it another time on the civil rights bill. That is going to come back to the House of Representatives, which they all have, and we cannot override it.

Madam Chairman, he said that he will sign it, again, if we put in what he wants in the bill. So you say who really controls the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States? It sure is not us.

As I say, I do oppose most-favored-nation status for China. In fact, we have to pay them to bring their goods into this country.

China has violated every deep-seated belief that we in the United States have fought and died for for 200 years, and that is freedom.

We have talked about the fact that the Chinese officials have murdered hundreds of people in Tiananmen Square. They have stilled the voices of these young people, not able now to speak out in freedom, not able to congregate. That is really all they wanted to do.

We know that they have violated the U.N. boycott of Iraq. They sent in some very rare chemicals that will help produce nuclear weapons, a poison gas, and missiles to deliver them, to kill our young men and women in the Middle East.

Madam Chairman, I heard my good friend, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS], say that this is fallacious. I do not know that it is. I do not know that it is. It was in the Washington Post, it was in the British press, but I have not seen any retractions to say that it is not true. Nevertheless, they have violated the U.N. boycott.

It was just recently that Taiwan wanted to give $100 million for the Mideast. The President of the United States rejected it outright because he said we do not want to offend our good friends, the Chinese. Well, with friends like that, I do not know who needs any enemies.

If foreign nations want our markets, if they want to compete freely and competitively and fairly, and if they want to recognize freedom as an inherent right of all people, then maybe we will do something. If they want our friendship, my friends, they have got to do it the old-fashioned way, they have got to earn it.

The United States opens its ports of entry freely to most foreign goods, but we are closed out, we are restricted, from most of these other ports of entry.

Yet here we are, opening another door making it easier. There are foreign lobbyists here doing their job, tagging the United States as protectionist. We are not protectionist.

If the Japanese or the Germans or the Chinese use the same methods, they are called innovative. We are called protectionist. Yet here we are.

I just wonder why Congress and the administration support benevolent trade practices to those countries of the world that are screwing the United States workers. I have many people in my district who have lost jobs to overseas. What do they have to end up taking? They have got to take a minimum-wage, no-benefit, part-time job, to sell the cheap foreign goods that come into the United States of America. I think that is absolutely and inherently wrong.

You say what is the rationale for all of this? I do not know. Sure, it helps them, but it is killing our economy. I get sick when I see grown men, coal miners. steelworkers, truck drivers, guys that are tough guys, who walk into my office and sit down in front of my desk with tears in their eyes. These are the kinds of guys I would not want to stand up against.

Anyway, they are very, very regretful, and so the only thing I am saying is we do not want our jobs continually taken away from us, and I ask Members to support this bill, but with the amendments that will come forth later.

Mr. PEASE. Madam Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH].

Mr. KASICH. Madam Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman yielding the time.

Madam Chairman, I just want to compliment my colleague from Ohio. At a time in this House when we are so divided, unfortunately, sometimes along partisan lines, I wanted to compliment the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. APPLEGATE] because he is a voice of consistency in this House, and he is a voice of great principle. His words mean a lot to me, because I think his consistency throughout all the foreign policy debates add a great amount of legitimacy to what he has to say on this particular issue, And I want to compliment him.

Mr. APPLEGATE. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. SCHULZE. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of New York. Madam Chairman, I think all of us in this House are united in the horror with which we remember the events in Tiananmen Square and the wave of repression that has swept through China since that terrible day.

What I think does divide us, and there are legitimate reasons for looking at the question in different ways, is what we as the United States can do to try to improve the situation in China. I rise because I think the bill before us represents the best way for this country to proceed to try to achieve that improvement.

It seems to me that if we are simply going to cutoff trade at this point, we are not likely to work an improvement in China. The fact of the matter is that those elements in China which are likely to be the most reformist are in fact those elements that through trade have the most exposure to the world at large, those elements that are forced to compete in the world economy. If we are going to cut ourselves off from those forces, then it seems to me we do a disservice rather than a service to the cause of reform within Communist China.

For that reason I believe this legislation, which offers a carrot to the Chinese Government, as well as keeping a big stick available if need be, is the right way to go. I think with it we have some hope at least that those forces that seek reform within Communist China will be given some leverage and can ultimately prevail.

For that reason, I urge my colleagues to support this legislation, which will send a very strong message to the Government of Communist China, but will at the same time help those forces within China who are on our side on the human rights issue.

Mr. PEASE. Madam Chairman, I am pleased to yield 6 minutes to the very distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLARZ], chairman of the Subcommittee on Asian and Pacific Affairs of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. SOLARZ. Madam Chairman, a short while ago the House voted in favor of the Solomon resolution which would terminate most-favored-nation tariff status for the People's Republic of China. For better or worse, however, the President has made it absolutely and unmistakably clear that he intends to veto that resolution. We have to choose, therefore, between continuing MFN for China as if nothing has happened since the brutal crackdown in Tiananmen Square in June of 1989, or establishing conditions requiring an improvement in the human rights situation in the People's Republic of China in order for MFN to be renewed in the future.

To do so, in my judgment, would be most unfortunate. It would send a signal to the leaders of China that because of democracy and human rights the People's Republic of China is a secondary concern of our own country. It would demoralize the students, the intellectuals and other Chinese who were willing to put their lives on the line for a freer China 1½ years ago, and it would send a signal to the hardliners in the Chinese leadership that they can have their cake and eat it too in the sense that they can continue the repression in China while at the same time getting the benefits of a profitable trading relationship with the United States.

It seems to me, therefore, it would be a very serious mistake for us to do absolutely nothing. The real choice that confronts us is what conditions to impose on the renewal of most-favored-nation tariff status for China, those contained in the Pease bill which is now before us, or those contained in the Pelosi amendment which will be offered to it.

Under the Pease bill, China would be obligated to make progress toward the achievement of a whole series of important human rights objectives as a condition for the renewal of MFN. The Pelosi amendment, on the other hand, would require not simply progress toward the release of political prisoners and a free press in China, but would require the release of all political prisoners and the establishment of a completely free press in the PRC.

I have the highest regard for the gentlewoman from California who has played a vigorous and valiant role in putting the cause of human rights in China high up on the congressional agenda and on the agenda of the administration as well. And if I thought for a minute that the enactment of her conditions would in fact lead to the release of all political prisoners, to the establishment of a totally free press, and to the fundamental transformation of the human rights situation in China, I would strongly speak for it, and I would certainly vote for it. But the truth of the matter is that it is exceedingly unlikely that it will achieve those results. In fact, I would submit that it is virtually inconceivable, even threatened with the loss of MFN status, that the leadership of China is going to release every political prisoner and permit a completely free press. Perhaps the day will come when that happens in China, but not with the current leadership that is still in power.

I am reminded of a colloquy from a Shakespeare play, I think it was King Henry IV, in which Hotspur said to Glendower, "I can summon spirits from the vast and murky deep."

"Why, so can I, so can any man," replies Glendower, "but will they come when you dost call them?"

So it is easy to say that China has to fundamentally transform itself. It is another question entirely to figure out how to best go about achieving it.

But even if one thought the Pelosi amendment could achieve these results, the fact of the matter is that the President will veto legislation that includes the Pelosi amendment, and we do not have the votes to override that veto. So the consequence would be that we would end up with nothing, with no conditions whatsoever on the renewal of MFN, and that would have entirely counterproductive consequences.

If somehow or other we could override the veto, and if China did not meet the conditions after we overrode the Presidential veto, MFN would have to be cutoff, and I ask Members to consider whether we want to totally alienate China at a time when with 200,000 Americans in the gulf we need their cooperation in the Security Council to achieve our objectives in that part of the world.

We also need the cooperation of China to get a successful conclusion to the conflict in Cambodia that will prevent the Khmer Rouge from returning to power in that country.

I urge the Members, do not make the perfect the enemy of the good. Vote against the Pelosi amendment, however well-intentioned it may be, and then vote for the Pease bill so we can send a clear message to China that if they want a renewal of MFN status, real progress will have to be made on human rights.

Mr. FRENZEL. Madam Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER].

Ms. PELOSI. Madam Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. I yield to the gentlewoman from California.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Washington for yielding to me.

To the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLARZ], I appreciate his comments. However, his characterization of my amendment is incorrect.

The language regarding the freedom of the press is in the Pease bill, and it says that we must make significant progress toward freedom of the press. That is language that is in the Pease bill and which I support.

Absolute condition is on the release of prisoners, the gentleman is correct in that characterization, but when it comes to freedom of the press which is an intangible, which does not exist in many countries of the world completely as the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS] always points out to me, the language I support on freedom of the press is the same language that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PEASE] has in his bill.

Just for the sake of clarity, I wanted to make sure that was not misunderstood by our colleagues.

Mr. SOLARZ. Madam Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SOLARZ. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Madam Chairman, I take the gentlewomans point.

I would simply say, however, once again, that if her amendment could achieve the release of all political prisoners, I would certainly support it. I fear it would not, and that would, in turn, require us to terminate MFN with other counterproductive consequences, whereas, under the Pease bill, I think we can achieve the release of many, if not all, political prisoners.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Madam Chairman, reclaiming my time, we will discuss further the amendments and have an opportunity to respond to the distinguished Congressman from New York.

Madam Speaker, I rise in support of this important bill. This bill, which adds human-rights conditions to the emigration conditions that already exist for the extending of MFN status, is vitally important to improving human rights.

It is my hope that this goal will be strengthened by the House adopting four amendments to this bill, those offered by the gentleman from Virginia

[Mr. WOLF], a religious-liberty condition to extending most-favored-nation trade status; the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PORTER] requiring China to live up to its promises of democracy and free enterprise when Hong Kong reverts to Chinese control; the gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOSI] addressing the issue of those Chinese imprisoned and executed after Tiananmen Square; and my amendment which establishes a set of human-rights principles for United States businesses operating in China.

All of these amendments substantially improve this bill. If the administration would accept this bill with these amendments, it would make unnecessary the resolution of disapproval that we adopted.

This bill with these amendments is a far more balanced approach than just extending MFN or denying MFN to China.

To those arguing that the administration will veto this bill or veto the bill if there are amendments, I say, let the legislative process work. If we amend and then pass H.R. 4939 we must still conference with the Senate, and then we can negotiate with the President to address his concerns. This is the way the process works, and this is how we should proceed.

In the past Congress has been a strong and loud voice in support of human rights in China. The Chinese Government continues to try to brutally silence its own citizens. In light of this, Congress cannot allow itself to be silenced.

I urge my colleagues to support these amendments and to support this bill.

Mr. GIBBONS. Madam Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLPE].

Mr. WOLPE. Madam Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 4939 and also of the strengthening amendments to the base bill which will be offered by the gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOSI], the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOLF], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PORTER], and the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER].

Madam Chairman, we have had too much vagueness and too much ambiguity in the messages that we have been sending to China. That vagueness and that ambiguity must come to an end.

I am sure all of us in this body remember sitting glued in front of our television sets that June watching the struggle for freedom in China. We marveled at the stirring sight of millions of people taking to the streets in peaceful protest. They were not throwing rocks. They were not throwing Molotov cocktails. They carried no weapons. They were armed with the most powerful message of all: That the yearning for freedom is universal and ultimately irresistible.

The signals sent by the demonstrators were too powerful for the Chinese leadership to tolerate. Out of weakness, the Chinese regime engaged in one of the harshest, most violent crackdowns that the world has seen in many years.

Thousands of people were gunned down in cold blood in Tiananmen Square. We were all witnesses to that event. We saw the tanks and troops, and we saw the courage of one simple man who resolutely stood before a column of advancing tanks and refused to let them pass. We saw the bloody square.

Today many months later, thousands still remain in prison. Execution and torture is still not uncommon.

How ironic and sad it is that the movement which inspired so many others around the world has not yet tasted freedom for itself. And so today we must send a clear and unambiguous message, a message of sympathy to the families of those who died in Tiananmen Square, a message of solidarity for those who were courageous enough to risk their lives on behalf of freedom in China, and a message to the Chinese Government that if it does not improve its human rights record and its treatment of dissidents with utmost haste, that most-favored-nation status for China will be gone.

The legislation before us sends precisely that message. Let us remain committed to that great cause for democracy for which this country stands. Let us remain steadfast in our commitment to the Chinese people in their thirst for freedom.

I urge passage of this legislation with the amendments that will strengthen the bill and remove the kind of ambiguity and vagueness that I think has compromised our own tradition in this country.

Mr. FRENZEL. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the chairman of the Republican policy committee, the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS].

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Madam Chairman, our colleague, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON] earlier asked the basic question before us when he said, "What price trade?" How much of our heritage would we surrender in pursuit of another dollar or two? This is an issue which transcends trade. It is a matter of fundamental human rights.

A nation which sends thousands of its young men and women to the deserts of Saudi Arabia to defend human liberty cannot ignore the massacre of young students whose only crime was to copy our own Statue of Liberty and ask for the freedoms Americans have fought for and died for for more than 200 years.

The crimes of Tiananmen Square did not end there. The Chinese Government, which dares to call itself a people's government, continues to oppress the Chinese people.

Let us stand today for principle, not by rewarding murder and repression, but by enunciating again the principles to which the Chinas of the world must adhere to receive the support and embrace of a nation which is founded on human liberty.

I support this bill, but these amendments, too, are necessary, and I urge my colleagues to support them.

Mr. GIBBONS. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. ANDREWS].

Mr. ANDREWS. Madam Chairman, today I sent a letter of inquiry to the Chinese Ambassador. It concerns Qin Weidong, a Chinese student leader from Beijing Medical University. He was arrested after the massacre in Tiananmen Square and is being held somewhere in Beijing. Nothing else is known about his fate.

This young man's story, like thousands, perhaps tens of thousands of others illustrates the Chinese Government's continuing disregard for human rights. That government's abuses have continued during the crackdown which followed Tiananmen Square. In its attempt to crush the pro-democracy movement, the Chinese Government has gone far beyond incarcerating a few individuals who led the demonstrations. Factory workers, railroad workers, writers, intellectuals, teachers, government officials, and university students have disappeared. Despite the fact that the Chinese Government has steadfastly refused to release the names of the arrested, the human rights group Asia which has been able to compile a list of 867 people who have been jailed. The true number can only be estimated.

Our Government must send a clear signal to the Chinese Government that a continuation of the tragedy it caused in Tiananmen Square will not be tolerated. The Pease bill, H.R. 4939, of which I am a cosponsor, will send such a signal.

Careful consideration was given in crafting this legislation, to its impact on the pro-democracy movement in China. It adds strong new human rights requirements which China must meet. Yet it will not slam the door on China so completely as to harm the very freedom movement we want to keep alive. I urge each of my colleagues in the House to vote for the Pease bill.

Mr. FRENZEL. Madam Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER].

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Chairman, I will take a back seat to no one in this House in decrying the outrageous human rights violations that have taken place in China.

On June 4, 1989, I had the privilege of being an observer of the election that was taking place in Poland. We all remember the first free and fair election in over four decades. I sat in a hotel room in Krakow in southern Poland, observing the Tiananmen Square massacre. It was horrible. It was an awful experience, and I shall never forget it.

Madam Chairman, I also had an opportunity to join with many of my colleagues in marching in the pouring rain from this Capitol to the Chinese Embassy to meet with Hang Tzu the then Chinese Ambassador to the United States. I have consistently been one who has said that we cannot have a double standard when it comes to dealing with the issue of human rights. Madam Chairman, I had an opportunity on July 21 of this year to have an incredible meeting. I met in London with Chinese physicist Fang Lizhi. Members will remember that Fang was without a doubt the most outspoken, hard-working, dedicated dissident in all of China. He, for the last year, had been holed up in our embassy in Beijing. Members will recall that he was invited to attend President Bush's party last year in Beijing, but the Chinese Government refused to allow him to attend that party. When I met with Fang Lizhi in London, we were participating together on a television program which is carried throughout Great Britain, and I decided that as the first Member of Congress who would have an opportunity to meet with Dr. Fang, following his release, I would ask him some of the incisive questions which have been raised here. I questioned him about human rights violations. I asked about the situation in China. In his broken English he said to me that he was not too crazy about President Bush's policy in 1989, but he believes that the policy of 1990 is right on target. He said to me, "Constantly raise the issue of human rights. Make sure that you mention the names of famous dissidents in China who are still imprisoned. Names like Wang Ruowang, Liu Binyan, and Wang Dan. Please mention these people." "However," he said, "Deng Chou Peng is not long for this world. The world is changing dramatically." He said to me, "It is very important, Congressman, that the United States of America continue to grant most-favored-nation status to China." He said that he believed that would play a very important role in encouraging the kind of changes which are going to take place. He said, "When Deng Chou Peng is out of the scene and there are new leaders, do we want them to have a devastated economy in China?" Absolutely not.

I decry the human rights violations, as I have said. However, I do believe we have to recognize that there are 1 billion people in China. We cannot simply turn our backs on those 1 billion people. Should we be penalizing the people of China who have been victimized by this repressive leadership? Absolutely not. I think it is essential, Madam Chairman, that we do everything that we can to move ahead with this responsible approach.

President Nixon boldly opened the door to China nearly 20 years ago. Their standard of living today dramatically transcends that of the Soviet people.

China joined with the United States in decrying Saddam Hussein's invasion of Kuwait. Do we want to jeopardize that support? I say no. I believe that we do recognize human rights. President Bush has done that. We in this Congress have done it, and we are not turning our backs on those very proud and courageous young people who erected that Goddess of Liberty in Tiananmen Square. We can do the very best thing for them, by moving ahead with MFN status.

Mr. GIBBONS. Madam Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the very distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. WEISS].

(Mr. WEISS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WEISS. Madam Chairman, I rise today in support of this legislation to ensure that the Chinese Government has met certain human rights conditions before MFN trade benefits may be renewed next year.

The leaders of China are quietly attempting to spruce up their nation's tarnished image. Only 15 months have passed since they ordered the massacre of hundreds of demonstrators in Beijing, yet they are actively courting international approval. They are cooperating with the United States in the Persian Gulf and Cambodia and, just a few weeks ago, they played host to the Asian Games in Beijing.

We may commend these steps toward reconciliation with the international community, but we must not forget the human rights tragedy that continues to unfold in China and the brave young people sympbolized by the picture of the man in front of the tanks.

The Chinese leadership has launched a nation-wide anticrime campaign to stem political unrest, and Chinese prisoners are being executed by the hundreds without adequate judicial procedures.

The human rights organization Asia Watch estimates that as many as 1,000 people remain in prison in China for political and religious activities. The vast majority of these prisoners are being held without proper charges or trials. Most have been detained for nothing more than peaceful political expression.

The fate of these prisoners remains shrouded in secrecy. The Chinese Government claims that 881 people have been released since January of this year, yet the names of these prisoners have not been released.

Representative JOHN MILLER and I have initiated a congressional project in conjunction with Asia Watch to support these prisoners of conscience in China. The Chinese Political Prisoner Adoption Program is designed to ensure that the courageous men and women who remain imprisoned for their outspoken defense of freedom are not forgotten here in the United States.

So far, we have had an impressive response. Over 70 Members of the House—both Democrats and Republicans—are already participating in the program. But with so many still imprisoned in China, there is much work to be done. For those of our colleagues who are not yet involved in the project, we invite you to join us.

We must let the Chinese Government know that we have not forgotten—and will not forget—the courageous people who continue to suffer because of their commitment to democratic reform in China.

I rise today in strong support of the Pease legislation, and also of the efforts of several of our colleagues to make improvements in the bill through a series of excellent amendments. I especially want to commend the amendment offered by Congresswoman PELOSI, which draws attention to the plight of political prisoners in China. Her amendment would require that, before MFN status may be renewed for China, the President must certify that the Chinese Government has fully accounted for, and released, political prisoners associated with last year's prodemocracy movement.

I strongly support the amendments offered by Ms. PELOSI, Mr. WOLF, Mr. PORTER, and Mr. MILLER of Washington. These amendments, together with the excellent legislation offered by Mr. PEASE, will send a strong signal to the leaders of China.

Mr. WOLF. Madam Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Madam Chairman, I rise in strong support of this bill and especially the amendment of the gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOSI] and the amendment that I will offer with regard to religious freedom and the amendment that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PORTER] will offer and the amendment that the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER] will offer.

Let me focus on those vexing issues of religious freedom. Did you know that at least 50 Catholic bishops and priests and lay people in China have been arrested because of their ties to the Vatican? So when you vote for these four amendments, keep that in mind, I say to my colleagues back in their offices.

Second, over 450 Buddhists were massacred in Tibet for demonstrating for political and religious freedom, so when you get a chance to vote on the Wolf amendment and the Pelosi amendment, you are going to be able to take care of this problem.

There was a 1,000-member Protestant church in Canton which was closed by the Chinese Government in July, and its members were harassed. We can deal with that problem when we support these amendments.

A Protestant evangelist and her daughter were tortured to death in a Chinese jail just recently, so when we vote for religious freedom we send a message to the Chinese Government that religious freedom is absolutely important.

Every day, Madam Chairman, 20 million to 60 million Chinese people listen to the Voice of America. When they listen tomorrow and they tune in to that little crystal set that they have out in the provinces and in Beijing and other places, will they hear that the people's body, the United States Congress, stood with the Chinese people, stood for religious freedom, stood for these important things, or will they, God forbid, hear that when given an opportunity to stand firm for religious freedom, we turned away.

I have a letter, Madam Chairman, from the Department of Social Development and World Peace of the Catholic Conference. It says:

Mr. President, we have evidence that as many as 50 Roman Catholic bishops and priests may be under house arrest and under various forms of detention in China today.

In addition, there are many hundreds of Chinese students and workers who are still being held without charges or trial in the aftermath of the crushing in a popular city for justice in Tiananmen Square. We believe that the annual renewal of China's Most Favored Nation status which requires your certification provides an opportunity which should not be missed of ensuring China's leaders understand that their continuing denial of human and religious rights has a price.

The closing comment is this. Years ago when we brought up on the floor of the Congress an amendment to strike the most-favored-nation status for Romania, we heard the same arguments against it:

Well, they are making progress. You are going to hurt business. Oh, it is just not going to be good. Oh, the Reagan administration is going to oppose it. Oh, the professionals at the State Department, they oppose this. You know, they are the China experts.

Well, thank goodness the Congress and the House particularly, I am proud to say, in its wisdom when given the opprotunity stood bold and voted to take away MFN for the barbaric man, Ceausescu.

Now, we all know the legacy, AIDS babies, 100,000 orphans and the Securitate reigning supreme today.

Had the Congress not acted, had we not had the courage to act against the Reagan administration and against the State Department, Ceausescu may very well be there today.

When this thing opens up and some day China is free, and let me just say the Voice of America is covering this debate. China will be free. When China is free, this act that we take today on the Pease bill with these four amendments, the Pelosi amendment, my amendment, the Wolf amendment, the Porter amendment, and the Miller amendment, we will be part of that process. So when the Chinese peasant and the Chinese individual in the cities and provinces of China tomorrow morning, because of the time change, tune in to their little shortwave radio, I want them to know as we did in 1987, we stood with the Romanian people.

This year in 1990, in spite of what the Bush administration says, in spite of what the State Department says, that we when given an opportunity are going to stand with the Chinese people.

Madam Chairman, I support the Pease bill. It is a good bill. I thank the gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOSI] who has taken the leadership, and Congressman MILLER and Congressman PORTER. Please perfect this bill by supporting these four amendments.

Mr. FRENZEL. Madam Chairman, I yield 5 minutes the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON].

Mr. SOLOMON. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Let me first of all call to the attention of our colleagues that this may be the last trade bill that our great friend and great Congressman, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Frenzel] ever carries on the floor of this House. He is a 20-year Member who is retiring this year. We surely are going to miss the gentleman in more ways than one. He has done such a great job over the years.

Mr. GIBBONS. Madam Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SOLOMON. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. GIBBONS. Madam Chairman, I am so glad the gentleman from New York raised this point about the gentleman from Minnesota at this time. I rise to praise the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL]. He is a great American who has served his country well, has served this Congress well. He has been a conscience, and a wise conscience for all of us. He is a great friend of all of us. We are going to miss him and miss his service.

Mr. SOLOMON. We certainly are, and I thank the gentleman for that sage observation.

Madam Chairman, we free people in the United States of America are the beacon of hope for the world. That never was brought home to me so much as about four years ago when I led a congressional delegation to a place called Hanoi in a country called Vietnam. We had to sit across the table from a philosophy called communism and negotiate, almost get down on our hands and knees and beg those Communists to give us the remains of fallen American soldiers. Communism is the only philosophy in the world that has ever withheld the remains of fallen soldiers after the war was over.

When we left that meeting and I was out on the streets of Hanoi and I looked around, I looked at the faces of those people, even the Communists, and there was absolutely no hope at all on their faces. There was no economy, no jobs, no anything.

We left there and we went back to Thailand. We had an opportunity to go into a refugee camp where there were 125,000 Cambodian people driven from their country. As we drove in, on an old truck, over 50 miles of dirt road, there began to be people along the way. First they were in tens and fifties and hundreds, and pretty soon there were 10,000 people lining the edge of a dirt road in the middle of nowhere. They were carrying signs, and those signs were not the ones you see portrayed sometimes on nightly television that say "Yankee imperialist dog, we hate you."

Those signs said, "America, we love you. America, you are number one." One sign as long as this room, carried by 50 children, said, "America, please take us home." At first I thought that sign meant take us home to America, but when I got out of the truck and I started talking with some of those people. I realized what they wanted was for the United States of America to make it possible for them to go home to their country. We were their hope.

You know, I said to myself, my God, how proud I am of the United States of America and how much I love my country, because we are the beacon of hope for all those people throughout the world who are not only oppressed by communism, but any other kind of dictatorship. That is what the Jackson-Vanik amendment is all about. That is what our debate here today is all about, the right for free people to live where they want to live, to work where they want to work, to emigrate. And for those countries that do not allow these rights, we do not have to provide most-favored-nation treatment.

With the Chinese Government enjoying a $6 billion trade surplus against us today, if we take away most-favored-nation treatment, it simply means that Chinese goods will cost a little bit more in this country. They will not be quite as favored as they are now. What is wrong with that? We would send a message to them that we Americans support a foreign policy of self-determination for all people and human rights for all people. Human decency, that is what we are talking about here. That is why we need to support the Pelosi amendment that is coming up in a few minutes, the Wolf amendment, the Porter amendment, and the Miller amendment, the four amendments made in order by this rule. If we do, they will strengthen this bill. That means that the Chinese people will get the message.

You know, I have known the orientals for many years, and I love those people, but they are shrewd. Do not ever underestimate them. They will smile at you and shake your hand and give you nothing, unless you hold their feet to the fire. That is what we need to do with the Chinese Government, and 6 months from now the Chinese people will be so much better off. It will be because people of this Congress made it possible.

Please support the Pelosi amendment and the other amendments, and then vote for this bill and we will be sending that message.

Mr. FRENZEL. Madam Chairman, I have no more requests for time, and I yield back my remaining time.

□ 1450

Mr. GIBBONS. Madam Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Chairman, this is a very serious matter. We are talking not only about the welfare of this country but the welfare of one-fifth of all the people on Earth, in China. No one yearns more to see them free, to have freedom of association, to have freedom of emigration, to have freedom of religion and all those things, than I do.

One of the reasons that they cannot have freedom of emigration is we do not have any more quotas for them. There is no place for them to go except tread water out in the middle of the ocean. We already bring in all that our immigration laws will allow us.

As Deng Xiaoping told Mr. Vanik, "Mr. Vanik, I know about your amendment. I accept it. Now tell me, Mr. Vanik, how many Chinese will you take?"

Well, "we will take about 18,000," I guess, was the answer that we gave them.

There are hundreds of thousands over there that would like to be free. But we do not offer them the opportunity to be free. I am not advocating we change our immigration laws. But that argument that there is not freedom of emigration—certainly there is not freedom of emigration, because there is no place to go if you are Chinese.

Our Government tells us that every Chinese person that we have admitted has been released before they were able to emigrate. In other words, we decided who we accepted out of all the applicants, and the Chinese Government released all of those people to us as immigrants.

The freedom of the students to come here is still in existence, not as wide open as it once was. I hope it will return to a more open status. But if we should cut off MFN, whether intentionally or accidentally—and I am afraid if this bill gets loaded up as it apparently is going to be loaded up here today, that while it will not kill MFN this year, I think it is pretty sure that that will not happen—but it just amounts to an American business closing notice in China.

The people who have their money invested over there are going to get out and bring what they can with them if we are going to cut off MFN.

Now, MFN is talked about as if it was the elixir that cures all ills. All MFN does in this case is take away, as a barrier to trade, those horrendous Smoot-Hawley tariffs that were imposed disastrously here in the early 1930's.

Those tariff rates are so high that as one speaker, I think it was the gentleman from New York, said, "What is wrong with that?" Well, all they mean, if you impose those tariff rates, is there is just no way to get goods in here.

Those tariff rates are sometimes more than 100 percent. And no one in this competitive world can jump over those kinds of tariffs.

So I urge you, let us not load up this bill. It will not become law if it is loaded up. The President has told us that. Let us pass the bill that came from the Committee on Ways and Means, not because there is any pride of authorship there. It was really authored by Mr. PEASE. Let us pass that bill, send it to the President, and give us a chance to move forward.

In our zeal to push forth freedom, let us not kill every opportunity for it.

Mr. LAFALCE. Madam Chairman, I share the valid concerns of my colleagues that extension of MFN trading status may be construed as evidence of American indifference to human rights in China. However, a number of other important factors must be considered in dealing with this issue. While revoking China's MFN status would be the strongest rebuke to date, this action would have serious negative consequences as well. The students, entrepreneurs, and business people as well as those in the coastal areas and big cities who are most committed to reform and outside contact would be the most severely affected by a failing economy.

Further, China's MFN status is essential to the health of Hong Kong's economy and has added significance as the 1997 deadline for reversion to China approaches. In the areas of China where the most ambitious economic reform has occurred, reformers would suffer a significant setback. I am also concerned that revoking MFN status at this time is extremely unlikely to achieve short term human rights advances and would likely lead only to further isolation of China.

Placing conditions on the continued MFN status in 1991 helps to restore some integrity to U.S. policy. The conditions in H.R. 4939, as drafted by the Ways and Means Committee, do have the limited practical effect of placing President Bush and the Chinese Government in the spotlight and encourage favorable policy shifts in both the United States and China.

H.R. 4939 was drafted by the Ways and Means Committee in close consultation with the Foreign Affairs Committee, and the administration has indicated that unamended the President will not veto the bill. While H.R. 4939 is not the best on substantive merits, it is the best that can be enacted at this time. Considering the grave failures in recent United States policy to China and the President's position on the current legislation, passing H.R. 4939, without amendment, and having it signed into law, sends as clear a message as possible.

Mr. PAYNE of Virginia. Madam Chairman, I rise in opposition to the resolution and all of the amendments which would restrict the granting by the President of most-favored-nation status for the People's Republic of China.

Dr. William F. Dorrill, president of Longwood College in my district, has stated the basis for this position much more eloquently than I could. Dr. Dorrill holds a doctorate in political science from Harvard and a masters in foreign affairs from the University of Virginia.

More importantly, Dr. Dorrill's research has focused on contemporary China and East Asia. He has completed five lecture tours of major Chinese universities, including one last year just prior to the Tienanmen Square tragedy. As everyone knows, the universities were the center of the democratic uprising in China; therefore, I feel Dr. Dorrill is particularly knowledgeable about the immediate events giving rise to this legislation. Of great importance to me, however, he is able to put the events in perspective in describing a long-range policy in the best interests of the United States and China.

Madam Chairman, I am submitting the text of Dr. Dorrill's thoughts on this issue for the RECORD and I adopt these remarks as reflecting my own views. I urge my colleagues in the House to vote against the resolution disapproving MFN status for China and to vote against all amendments which would change present law on China's MFN status.

SOME THOUGHTS ON MOST-FAVORED-NATION STATUS FOR THE PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

(By William F. Dorrill)

Along with most Americans, I was disappointed and angered at the PRC's ruthless resort to violent repression of the Democracy protest in Tienanmen Square in June of 1989—all the more so because of my long association with China, which had fostered high hopes for a peaceful evolution toward democracy. These feelings were reinforced during a visit to China a few weeks after the tragic incident. However, I believe that US policy should not be based primarily on our sense of moral outrage or even our impatience with the regime's backsliding from reform. As George Kennan pointed out a generation ago in his masterful study of US diplomacy, Americans have historically had difficulty accepting the limits of our ability to effect desired changes in other countries through our foreign policy. This has been particularly true in our relations with China where rigid attachments to lofty moral and legal positions have on more than one occasion doomed our policies to failure.

The issue presently before the Congress of extending or withdrawing most-favored-nation status for the PRC in our trade policy offers the potential for yet another example of failure in our best meant policies toward China. To withdraw most-favored-nation status for the PRC at this time would, in my opinion, have several undesirable consequences. Among other things, it would have the following results:

It would worsen US-PRC relations unnecessarily. (Such a move would cause a tremendous reaction in China which would make it difficult to restore normal relations for along time to come.)

It would reinforce the position of regime hard-liners who would start an anti-American campaign to blame the US for China's hardships, thereby further delaying the emergence of moderate new leadership.

It would hurt the Chinese people (e.g., workers, emerging entrepreneurs, farmers) more than the regime.

It would almost certainly hinder US business operations in China, making it more difficult through additional regulation for Americans to do business in the country.

It would tend to leave an opening for Japan to become the dominant economic power in the PRC.

It would lose for the US important cultural, educational, and business contacts which are essential for the promotion of American interests in China and the development of democratic reforms.

While China may not now be as important to US strategic interests as it was before the recent changes in the USSR and Eastern Europe, we must recognize that the PRC will still play a vital role in many regional and global issues. From the regional perspective of Asia, China will continue to play an important role with regard to Cambodia, Taiwan, Korea and even Pakistan. Likewise, on global issues such as the environment, drugs, arms control and sales, China will continue to exercise an important influence.

When the present elderly leadership passes from the scene, as may well be the case in the near future, it will be important for both China and US interests in China and around the world that America enjoys a position of friendship and influence. I believe this can be facilitated by not changing most-favored nation status for China in US trade policy.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute is considered as an original bill for the purpose of amendment and is considered as read.

The text of the amendment in the nature of a substitute is as follows:

H.R. 4939

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. ADDITIONAL OBJECTIVES WHICH THE GOVERNMENT OF CHINA MUST MEET IN ORDER TO RECEIVE NONDISCRIMINATORY TREATMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—If the President proposes that the waiver authority granted by subsection (c) of section 402 of the Trade Act of 1974 be extended in 1991 for a 12-month period, then for purposes of applying subsection (d) of such section 402 with regard to the continuation of a waiver for the People's Republic of China, the objectives of such section 402 shall include, in addition to the freedom of emigration, significant progress by the Government of the People's Republic of China in implementing the following measures:

(1) Reversal of the pattern within the People's Republic of China of gross violations of internationally recognized human rights dating from June 3, 1989.

(2) The termination of material law throughout the People's Republic of China, including Tibet.

(3) In regard to the events that led up to, and occurred during and after, the violent repression of dissent in Tiananmen Square on June 3, 1989—

(A) an accounting for those citizens who were detained or accused as a result of the nonviolent expression of their political beliefs during those events; and

(B) the release of such of those citizens who were imprisoned after detention or accusation.

(4) The easing of the restrictions in the People's Republic of China on freedom of the press and on broadcasts by the Voice of America.

(5) The termination of acts of intimidation and harassment of Chinese citizens in the United States.

(6) The termination of any fee, reimbursement, or other charge or restriction not in effect prior to June 3, 1989, on the travel to a foreign country by students or other citizens for the purpose of study, tourism, or professional development.

(7) The taking of other appropriate action to promote substantial improvement in the observance of internationally recognized human rights in the People's Republic of China and greater opportunities for freedom and democracy in that country.

(b) CONSIDERATIONS AFFECTING WAIVER EXTENSION.—In deciding whether or not to recommended in 1991 the extension of the waiver authority referred to in subsection (a) to the People's Republic of China, the President shall take into account—

(1) the potential economic and political effects that such an extension, or the absence of such an extension, may have on Hong Kong; and

(2) the extent to which the Government of the People's Republic of China has moderated its position regarding the accession of the Republic of China (Taiwan) to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

SEC. 2. REPORT BY THE PRESIDENT.

If the President recommends in 1991 that the waiver authority referred to in section 1 be extended to the People's Republic of China, the President shall include in the document required to be submitted to the Congress by section 402(d) of the Trade Act of 1974 a report on the extent to which the Government of the People's Republic of China has, during the period covered by the report, implemented the measures listed in section 1(a).

The CHAIRMAN. No amendment to the substitute shall be in order except those amendments printed in House Report 101-851. Such amendments shall be considered in the order and manner specified in the report and shall not be subject to amendment except as specified.

It is now in order to consider amendment No. 1 printed in House Report 101-851.

For what purpose does the gentlewoman from California rise?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MS. PELOSI

Ms. PELOSI. Madam Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Ms. PELOSI: Page 3, strike out line 19 and all that follows down through line 7 on page 5 and insert the following:

(a) IN GENERAL.—The President may not recommend the continuation of a waiver in 1991 for a 12-month period under subsection (d) of section 402 of the Trade Act of 1974 for the People's Republic of China unless the President reports in the document required to be submitted by such subsection, that the government of that country—

(1) has, in regard to the events that led up to, and occurred during and after, the violent repression of dissent in Tiananmen Square on June 3, 1989—

(A) accounted for those citizens who were detained or accused as a result of the nonviolent expression of their political beliefs during those events, and

(B) released citizens who were imprisoned after detention or accusation,

(2) has made significant progress in—

(A) reversing the pattern within the People's Republic of China of gross violations of internationally recognized human rights dating from June 3, 1989,

(B) terminating martial law throughout the People's Republic of China, including Tibet,

(C) easing the restrictions in the People's Republic of China on freedom of the press and on broadcasts by the Voice of America,

(D) terminating the acts of intimidation and harassment of Chinese citizens in the United States,

(E) Removing obstacles to study and travel abroad for students and other citizens,

(F) taking other appropriate action to promote substantial improvement in the observance of internationally recognized human rights in the People's Republic of China and greater opportunities for freedom and democracy in that country.

(c) DEFINITIONS.—For the purposes of subsection (a)—

(1) The term "acts of intimidation and harassment" in paragraph (3)(D) means actions taken by the Government of the People's Republic of China that are intended to deter or interfere with, or to be in retaliation for, the nonviolent expression of political beliefs by Chinese citizens within the United States.

(2) The term "gross violations of human rights" in paragraph (3)(A) includes, but it is not limited to, torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, prolonged detention without charges and trial, causing the disappearance of persons by the abduction and clandestine detention of those persons, and other flagrant denial of the right to life, liberty, or the security of person.

(3) The term "significant process" in paragraph (3) means the implementation and faithful execution of measures that terminate the repressive practices identified in subparagraphs (A) through (F) of that paragraph.

Ms. PELOSI (during the reading). Madam Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from California?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOSI] will be recognized for 15 minutes and a Member opposed will be recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. FRENZEL. Madam Chairman, may I be recognized in opposition?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] will be recognized for 15 minutes in opposition.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOSI].

Ms. PELOSI. I thank the Chairman.

Madam Chairman, earlier in the debate we saw the picture of the man before the tank, a true heir, a legitimate heir to Thomas Jefferson and the other Founding Fathers of our own Republic, a person who had a dream about democracy and he demonstrated his courage by being a lone man before the tank.

When that happened, we said in this House that we would stand with him. The Pease bill today gives us the opportunity to send a good message to the Chinese authorities. But I think the message can be a better one.

I appreciate the fine work of the Committee on Ways and Means, the leaderhip of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS], the leadership of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PEASE], and the leadership of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI], in shaping the Pease bill.

I believe it is their best effort in terms of human rights and trade. But I believe that this House of Representatives has a sentiment for a stronger message to be sent, one that I believe can attain the two-thirds.

There are a couple of ways to get legislation to be law; that is, one is it is signed by the President, and the other is that the two Houses of Congress override the President's veto.

However we proceed, I believe that we must stand up with the man beside the tank and send a reasonable message that gives us leverage in human rights and promotes democracy.

Madam Chairman, I am going to concentrate on my amendment because I have taken the time to speak generally about our policy with China and just address the specifics of my amendment.

Madam Chairman, it does not require a flashback to Tiananmen Square to know that in China today repression continues. Amnesty International, the human rights organization referred to by President Bush the other day for its accurate reporting of Iraqi atrocities in Kuwait, that very same organization reported on September 13 that over 600 people have been executed in China this year. Many of those were those who protested for democracy in Tiananmen Square.

The report states that human rights violations in China continue to be a major concern. Torture, unfair trials and execution after summary trials continue.

Since January 1990 there has been a dramatic rise in the number of executions in China. Some prisoners are executed only 2 weeks after their arrest.

Also, in September Asia Watch released this report detailing the continued imprisonment or execution of a thousand prisoners arrested for their involvement in political dissent.

On October 1, 1990, the Hong Kong Journal Chang Ming reported that 1,508 suspects were arrested on September 22, the opening day of the Asian Games.

Large numbers of security personnel were sent into Beijing University to report on student activities and 250 students were taken in.

Madam Chairman, it seems that everyone is aware that the Beijing regime continues to arresat, imprison, and kill people who dare to speak out for democracy.

I again want to reference a letter that I mentioned earlier in response to Mr. AUCOIN, the gentleman from the State of Washington, in talking about a State Department opinion on immigration. I do want to refer to why I think this amendment is necessary, because if we just leave it up to the administration, their view is that there is no well-founded fear of persecution in China on the basis of political opinion.

I would hope to be able to submit for the RECORD, without objection, the letter from the State Department stating that.

That is why I believe it is necessary for us to have this amendment, which says there is well-founded fear of persecution. We know that the people are imprisoned. Sadly, it appears that this House must once again send the important message that the systematic arrest, imprisonment, and murder of people who dare to speak out for freedom is taken seriously by the United States of America.

What my amendment would do would be to require the President to report that the Chinese Government has accounted for and released pro-democracy demonstrators before he can extend most-favored-nation status for another year.

It is a serious response to a serious situation. The amendment will take effect beginning next year. It would give the Chinese Government more than enough time to comply with its provisions. The amendment also sends the message to Beijing that the United States Congress stands firm when it comes to the safety of people who have spoken out for change.

Madam Chairman, I would like to also just refer to another reason why I believe this amendment is necessary. Anyone who has ever been a political prisoner or has any experience working with those who have been in prison as prisoners of conscience knows one of the most severe forms of torture that can be exacted upon them is when they are told that they are in prison for speaking out, but in the outside world no one knows they are there, and no one cares about them. It is a form of torture and imprisonment that goes beyond incarceration.

I believe that we know that Voice of America is covering this debate today, that it is important for those prisoners to know that, when we realize they spoke out for democracy, that they responded to our message on Voice of America, a prodemocracy message, that they were arrested for doing that, but that they had not been forgotten and that, in order to renew most-favored-nation status for China, it is necessary for China to release the political prisoners arrested in the aftermath of Tiananmen Square.

Madam Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FRENZEL. Madam Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS].

Mr. GIBBONS. Madam Chairman, we all zealously support greater freedom for all Chinese people, particularly those who find themselves, unfortunately, within the boundaries of the People's Republic of China. That is beyond the question. The real question before us is how can we best proceed.

Working with all of the people who wanted that kind of freedom in the Committee on Ways and Means, and particularly under the leadership of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PEASE], we crafted a bill and worked in the crafting of that with the administration. We think we know pretty well what the President will accept, and he has told us what he will reject. He has told us that, if we toughen the bill that came from the Committee on Ways and Means, it will be rejected.

Many of the forces outside of Congress who are very interested in this also support the bill of the Committee on Ways and Means. They do not want to have a Pyrrhic victory by having a real tough bill, but no action flow from it. They are afraid, as I am, that, if the bill is vetoed by the President, the leaders of China will feel that they have a license to carry out whatever they want to do with their people. I do not want to see that happen. I have seen it happen before when the Congress has tried to do things that were impossible.

Now bringing freedom in China is not impossible, but, when one talks of some of the lofty goals that we have here, realizing the realities of what is presently existing in China and what has always existed in China for the 6,000 years of its sometime very tragic history, our goals are just not attainable. If we isolate ourselves from China, there will be no input for freedom, there will be no one urging, and pushing and cajoling that we have greater freedom.

I am a participant. I want to get in there and participate. I have been doing that, and I will continue to do so.

Do not cut off the President's opportunity, the American Government's opportunity, by adopting something that will in effect say, "Oh, yes, you've got MFN for this year, but next year we're going to cut it all off," because the Americans will begin to withdraw. Support the committee bill, and reject the other amendment.

Ms. PELOSI. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. Madam Chairman, I rise in strong support of the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOIS]. And I want to commend her for her continuous outstanding leadership in calling attention to the atrocities in the People's Republic of China and Tibet.

H.R. 4939 calls for significant progress in ending gross violations of human rights by the Government of the People's Republic of China [PRC] in the PRC. It does not elaborate on what exactly is "significant progress" or "gross violations." The amendment offered by the gentleman from California would close that loophole and prevent business as usual.

The amendment would require that the President, first, before MFN is extended, submit to the Congress a report showing that the Government of the PRC has taken certain, specific actions regarding human rights in the PRC and occupied Tibet. I don't think that is too much to ask considering the dreadful reports of human rights violations coming out of both countries. In addition, we have a $6 billion trade deficit with the People's Republic of China. The leaders of the People's Republic of China are not exactly our allies either. According to recent reports only recently did they attempt a secret deal to sell Saddam Hussein a chemical that would have helped him to produce atom and hydrogen bombs, poison gas, and fuel for ballistic missiles. It is obviously more in their favor than ours to continue this unbalanced trade relationship.

Let me also say that it is makes little sense to say that MFN leads to economic liberalization of the People's Republic of China's economy. According to United States Government sources, the Wall Street Journal, the New York Times, Business Week, the Far Eastern Economic Review, and the Washington Post, authorities in Beijing have recentralized banking, credit, production planning, material allocation, foreign trade and other important elements in the economy.

To sum up. Why in the world do we want to continue giving a significant trade benefit to a country which enjoys a huge trade deficit with us, has recentralized its economy, slaughters its own people who have democratic aspirations, continues a policy of merciless repression in occupied Tibet, and attempts to make a secret deal with the butcher of Baghdad to assist him against our troops in Saudi Arabia?

I urge my colleagues to support the Pelosi amendment.

Mr. FRENZEL. Madam Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS].

Mr. GIBBONS. Madam Chairman, for the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] I just want to repeat what I said in direct debate a little earlier.

Madam Chairman, there is no evidence collected by our Government at all that there has been any sale or transfer of the types of things that were reported in the Washington Post and in some British newpaper whose name I have forgotten. We have run down that rumor. Our Government at the highest level says it never happened, that the contact for sale took place, but the goods were never shipped and that the Chinese have been cooperating with us 100 percent on all of the sanctions that were put on to protect our people.

Mr. FRENZEL. Madam Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PEASE], the author of the bill.

Mr. PEASE. Madam Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Pelosi amendment. In so doing I would like to make it clear that my opposition comes despite my great admiration for the gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOSI]. She has pursued her amendment with intelligence, with vigor, with sincerity, and I take nothing away from her at all.

However, Madam Chairman, I am forced to stand and oppose this amendment. I agree with the gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOSI] that the human rights situation is deplorable. The heart of this debate is to figure out how to use United States influence to change that deplorable human rights situation in China.

Some people have suggested that H.R. 4939, as reported, is not strong enough, that it is somehow a weak, empty vessel. That is far from the truth. H.R. 4939 is unprecedented in the scope of human rights linkage which it establishes with U.S. trade policy.

Not until this debate on this bill in Congress have we seriously proposed weaving respect for basic human rights into the very fabric of extension of MFN status for any country. Even more, H.R. 4939, as it stands, establishes seven explicit human rights conditions which the Chinese Government must make significant progress between now and next summer on if they want to retain MFN status.

I would like to point out some problems with the Pelosi amendment. In the definitions section, the meaning of the words "insignificant progress" is spelled out in a way that makes it inflexible. In effect, "insignificant progress" is defined to mean that the Chinese Government by next June must terminate, each of the repressive practices cited in all of the human rights conditions spelled out by the bill. This does not provide the Chinese with any flexibility.

Additionally, the Pelosi amendment says citizens must be released, but it does not say how many citizens, whether it is 1 or 2, of 1,000 or 10,000.

Two respected human rights organizations that care a lot about human rights in China, Asia Watch and Human Rights Watch, have both urged that this bill be adopted without amendment.

There are two practical reasons why we must proceed with this bill without amendment, two practical reasons. One is we need a law. We do not need a bill, we need a law, and that requires the signature of the President. He has said if this bill is amended he will not sign the bill.

Second, we need to impose conditions on the Chinese which the Chinese can meet with reasonable efforts. Our object is not to cut off trade with China, our object is to use our trade leverage to influence China to improve its human rights situation. Cutting off trade does not achieve that end.

H.R. 4939 as introduced and reported by the committee does meet that end. I urge Members to support the bill itself, and to oppose the Pelosi amendment and other amendments.

Ms. PELOSI. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. Cox].

Mr. COX. Madam Chairman, I rise today in support of this amendment, which will put some teeth into this legislation and will put the United States once and for all firmly on the side of human rights.

We all know that our efforts at conciliation and appeasement with the PRC Government since the massacre last June have not worked. The prodemocracy leaders are still being hunted down, arrested, and tortured. In fact, the PRC Government has quite persistently sought to root out all vestiges of the prodemocracy government.

Amnesty International reported no significant improvement in human rights since August 1989. Amnesty International has also reported continued crackdowns on individuals involved in the uprising last June.

Since June 1989 we have witnessed the dissolution of Communist hegemony in the Eastern Bloc and significant cracks in the edifice of the greatest Communist power, the Soviet Union. Still, the winds of change have not reached Beijing. The Communist government there continues its ruthless assault on freedom and democracy.

The extension of MFN with virtually no conditions is supposed to give us leverage and influence. Obviously, it will give us neither. Our outreach program to the Chinese Government has not worked. Instead, let us send a message that America puts its money where its mouth is, and that is where the forces of freedom and democracy are.

Madam Chairman, this amendment gives to President Bush the tools he needs to make our China policy work. It gives the President the authority to make the necessary determinations that progress in human rights is being made. At best, extension of MFN without conditions will allow a few huge multinational companies to gain a few contracts in China. Real freedom, real democracy, and authentic free enterprise in the PRC will mean an open market for all and it will permit China to become a full member of the economic community of the world. That is worth waiting for. Let us support the Pelosi amendment.

Mr. FRENZEL. Madam Chairman, I yield myself 3½ minutes.

Madam Chairman, if you look at the Pelosi amendment as printed, you will note that it stiffens the conditions of the original Pease bill by demanding an accounting before MFN could be recommended to be extended, and by demanding an accounting of the citizens who were detained or accused. I do not know who has the list of how many citizens have been accused.

It demands that citizens be released who were imprisoned after detention or accusations. That is mandatory.

Then it says they have to make significant progress in reversing the pattern of gross violations of internationally recognized human rights. Again, we have a little trouble with that definition. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Pease] has had some trouble with it over the years.

Madam Chairman, I think we all have definitions of human rights. We have yet to have an international convention on it.

There are a number of other things that we are told that significant progress must be made on. However, then we define significant progress as the implementation and fruitful execution, which means that those are mandatory as well.

If Members believe in the Pelosi amendment, they should have voted for the motion to disapprove the President's request that it be extended for this year. If Members believe in putting pressure on the Chinese Government, they should support the Pease bill as it is written, and discard the Pelosi amendment.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I spoke earlier to express my opportunity to the Solomon resolution to disapprove most-favored-nation treatment to China. I will not repeat the points that I stated earlier. I rise now in opposition to the Pelosi amendment and in support of the resolution to extend most-favored-nation treatment to China.

I would add to my remarks stated earlier that I traveled to the People's Republic of China on four separate occasions in the 1978 through 1980 era. During that time I helped organize a regional international trade center for my State to do business with China. We made substantial progress in trade during that period. It is tragic that the civil protest in Beijing that occurred last year resulted in repossession and carnage. All believers in democracy and in human rights and in freedom were repulsed by the brutality of the Chinese regime.

And, I understand the emotional support for the Pelosi amendment. It is the natural American response to a brutal government in suppressing human rights. But, politically, I think the President is correct in his policy of leaving the door open. We must deal with China over a longer period of time.

We Americans simply do not understand the Oriental minds. Mark Twain was right. East is East, and West is West, and the twain shall never meet. I do not pretend after only four visits over a 3-year period that I understand the Orientals, but I understand them more than Americans who have not visited China.

Madam Chairman, if we are to deal with China, we must recognize that it will inevitably become a regional power in Asia. We must recognize and deal with that power; give China time to develop its political ideology the same as it developed its economic ideology, and in time I believe that ideology will become more politically compatible with our ideals here in the United States and the Western World.

Ms. PELOSI. Madam Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

There is not enough time for me to respond point by point to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL], but I would like to say one thing absolutely, and that is there are definitions of human rights. There is the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which celebrated its 40th anniversary a couple of years ago, in the United Nations. Then the Convention on Civil and Political Rights, and the Convention on Torture. So we are not talking about an ephemeral notion. We are talking about a definitive term.

Madam Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. BATES].

Mr. BATES. Madam Chairman, I rise to support the Pelosi amendment and commend the gentlewoman from California for offering this amendment and for her strong words of support.

□ 1520

I want to associate myself with the gentlewoman's remarks.

I think this amendment is a matter of principle. I think it is clear that it is the human rights violations that we are standing up for, and I think there is no one else to stand up for those who suffered at Tiananmen Square.

I think we must support the Pelosi amendment. If not us, who? If not now, when?

Let us support this amendment now.

It was Rudyard Kipling who said East is East and West is West.

Mr. FRENZEL. Madam Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. PELOSI. Madam Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON].

Mr. SOLOMON. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding the time. I have spoken enough on this issue, but let me point out that today is October 18. It is 18 days from election day, and God willing we will be home and maybe have 3 days to campaign after we get out of here.

But let me point out a practical dilemma. The tougher Solomon bill that passed earlier today will probably work its way to the President 3 or 4 days from now, and we all know that bill will probably lie there as a pocket veto. That is why it is so imperative that we support right now the Pelosi amendment.

We have to play the good cop-bad cop routine. The President needs a tough bill before him so that he can say to the Chinese Government that he works so diplomatically well with that, the Congress is tough; they sent him a tough bill and they mean business. We must support the Pelosi amendment in order to send a tough bill to the White House, and I urge every Member on both sides of the aisle to do that.

I congratulate the gentlewoman on a wonderful amendment.

Ms. PELOSI. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. FRENZEL. Madam Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTON].

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Madam Chairman, I rise in support of the Pelosi amendment.

I have never been to China, but I have met a few bullies in my time, and the way to deal with a bully is from a position of strength.

The Chinese Government has been bullying its people, and the Pelosi amendment will put some meat into the Pease bill in terms of the definitions.

I have with me an itemization from Asis Watch of political prisoners in China that have been detained as a result of Tiananmen Square. There are a total of 646 named prisoners, a total of 1,342 unnamed prisoners that are still being held without trial, a total of 142 who have been brought to trial by name, and 406 have been brought to trial but not even named.

The Pelosi amendment would make this impossible to do. The Pelosi amendment also defines gross violations of human rights as including, but not limited to torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, prolonged detention without charges and trial, causing the disappearance of persons by the abduction and clandestine detention of those persons, and other flagrant denial of the right to life, liberty, or the security of person.

The Pelosi amendment is a worthwhile, commonsense amendment and it should be adopted. I urge its adoption.

Mr. FRENZEL. Madam Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS].

Mr. GIBBONS. Madam Chairman, before the gentleman leaves the well, I wanted to ask does he realize that Asia Watch supports the Pease bill unamended. The gentleman has been quoting Asia Watch here so freely, does he realize that it supports the Pease bill, the bill that came out of the committee?

I have a letter here, and does the gentleman understand? He made all of these statements about Asia Watch, and I am just asking does he understand that Asia Watch supports the Pease bill? His agreement is all based on Asia Watch material. Does the gentleman realize that Asia Watch supports the bill unamended?

Mr. BARTON of Texas. If the gentleman will yield, does the gentleman from Florida dispute these figures?

Mr. GIBBONS. No, but Asia Watch knows what they are doing. They support the bill unamended. They do not take the position the gentleman takes.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. The facts speak for themselves.

Mr. GIBBONS. The facts do speak for themselves, and Asia Watch does not support the gentleman's position.

Ms. PELOSI. Madam Chairman, before yielding to the gentleman from Illinois, I would like to address the last subject which was brought up by the chairman of the subcommittee.

The fact is that we all support the Pease bill, or many of us support the Pease bill unamended if that is the only option before us, and if these groups believe that there is no bill if there is an amendment, then they would agree and I would agree that we have to go forward with the Pease bill, unamended.

But I believe that there is a will in this House to do something more, and that we will get two-thirds for it, and as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTON] said, the figures speak for themselves.

Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RUSSO].

Mr. RUSSO. Madam Chairman, the difference between the Pelosi amendment and what is contained in the Pease bill is very significant. In the Pelosi amendment the President must certify that conditions in her amendment are met in their totality before he can grant MFN status. In the Pease approach, the President must consider those conditions, but he can waive them and grant MFN regardless of whether or not those conditions are met. That is the difference.

If Members are concerned about making sure that the Chinese Government meets the conditions of the Pelosi amendment and the Pease amendment, then it is important that the President certify on the front end that they have met them.

Let me tell Members about my major criticism of my good friend from Ohio, who I have a great deal of respect for when it comes to trade matters. The definition of the words "significant progress" by the Government of the People's Republic of China in employing the following measures, what does significant progress mean? There are 10,000 political prisoners in Chinese jails. Does that mean if we only have 8,000 it is significant progress? I would consider a 20-percent reduction significant progress, but is it helping the 8,000 who are still in jail?

Does it mean that when you kill hundreds in Tiananmen Square, if you only kill 100, which is a 50-percent reduction, that that is significant progress? Or if we have 1,000 tanks in Tiananmen Square, but now we only have 500 tanks in Tiananmen Square, is that significant progress?

It could be, and the President can say they made significant progress, however, and he can waive it anyway.

Let us look at this picture. Let me tell Members my definition of significant progress. There are four tanks ready to run over this one Chinese student. Let us run two tanks over him, and that certainly is significant progress. He still is as dead as anybody can be if the first tank runs over him.

It is a setup to make us the scapegoat, and I do not think we want to do that, and I hope my colleagues will support the Pelosi amendment.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself my remaining 1 minute to close the debate.

Madam Chairman, I need to say once again that the gentleman from Ohio's bill provides for maximum pressure to be put on the Chinese Government to make the kinds of changes that all the Members of this House would like to have made.

The amendment of the gentlewoman from California, on the other hand, makes it absolutely mandatory that the Chinese must achieve 100 percent of everything that we would desire of them. If they do not, as seems likely, because they, and me, are human, the President is not allowed to declare most-favored-nation status or to recommend an extension.

Obviously if we want to put some pressure on the People's Republic of China, we should reject the gentlewoman's amendment and support the Pease bill.

A final point, and it is one that the distinguished chairman of the Trade Subcommittee has already made, which is that although China has been guilty of abhorrent conduct, it should not be accused of doing that which it has not done. The People's Republic of China has supported us in the Persian Gulf, and it has faithfully carried out its promises with respect to the embargo and with respect to the U.N. resolution.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this amendment. Although I commend the members of the Ways and Means Committee for their work on legislation to place conditions on the renewal of most-favored-nation status for the People's Republic of China, I remind my colleagues that beginning in 1987 the United States Congress has requested, on many occasions, that the administration pressure the Chinese on several human rights issues, particularly in regards to the Chinese occupation of Tibet. Even after the Chinese forces in Tibet had gunned down unarmed Tibetan independence demonstrators in at least six instances during 1987, 1988, and 1989, the administration's response has been muted and overly subservient to saving the faces of ruthless tyrants in Beijing.

The administration was, and has consistently been, reluctant to enforce modest sanctions against the Government of the People's Republic of China even when Congress called for punitive actions against the Chinese for their 1987 and 1988 massacres in Tibet. I say to my colleagues today that if the administration had been more aggressive in pushing a human rights agenda with the People's Republic of China, we may not have witnessed the horrible tragedy that occurred in Tiananmen Square.

Recent history tells us that unless we are very specific about a human rights policy toward China, the administration will kowtow. We need a human rights policy toward China, much like our reasonably successful approach to the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe. This amendment provides a conscientious blueprint for a substantive human rights policy toward the People's Republic of China.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. WOLF TO THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MS. PELOSI

Mr. WOLF. Madam Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOLF to the amendment offered by Ms. PELOSI: At the end of section 1(a) add the following:

( ) Make significant progress toward ending religious persecution in the People's Republic of China and Tibet, and progress toward the release of the leaders and members of all religious groups detained, incarcerated or under house arrest for the expression of their religious beliefs.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOLF] will be recognized for 7½ minutes, and a Member opposed will be recognized for 7½ minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOLF].

Mr. WOLF. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Washington [Mrs. UNSOELD].

Mrs. UNSOELD. Madam Chairman, I rise in support of this amendment and I thank Mr. WOLF for bringing this important matter to the floor of the House of Representatives. Here in the United States we often take for granted our freedom to worship as we choose. The citizens of the People's Republic of China have no such luxury. Despite an offical Government policy of religious toleration, repression of religious freedom has grown along side the crackdown on political dissent.

Article 18 of the U.N. Universal Declaration of Human Rights states that freedom of conscience and religion are fundamental human rights. In spite of the fact that China plays an important role in that body, they have shown nothing but disdain for the ideals that it espouses. Christians in China and Buddists in Tibet are constantly harassed, jailed, and persecuted for practicing their religious beliefs, and the situation is only getting worse.

We in the United States must press for the release of all prisoners of conscience, those being held for their religious beliefs as well as those held for their political beliefs. We must support the rights of all people to express their beliefs without fear. It is time for this body to take a firm stand against religious repression and for human rights in China. I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

The President may veto this bill with these amendments. If the President cannot hear the people of the United States, the People's Republic of China must hear us speak.

Mr. GIBBONS. Madam Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS] will be recognized in opposition for 7½ minutes.

Mr. GIBBONS. Madam Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Chairman, I certainly will not use 7½ minutes myself.

Madam Chairman, I would pain me if I thought I was here opposing freedom of religion. I cherish it and honor it as anybody does. I wish every country on Earth had the kind of freedom of religion we have in this country, the same type of freedom, but, Madam Chairman, I do not know of any nation on Earth that enjoys the kind of freedom of religion that we have here or the kind of freedom of religion that the gentleman from Virginia would seek to have the Chinese adopt.

If we stop and think about it, even our closest friend, the United Kingdom, does not have freedom of religion. We have strong allies, and allies that we are very loyal to, who have no freedom of religion. I do not see how we can ask people who have never experienced freedom of religion in their 6,000 years of history to come as far as the United States has come, particularly within 6 months from now, when we must take this subject up again.

It is completely unrealistic to think that the Chinese can so reform their chaotic system that within 6 months they can come up with complete freedom of religion as we have in the United States.

As I say, I do not know of any other nation on Earth including our best friends that has the kind of freedom of religion that this amendment seeks to impose upon the Chinese.

I do not know what the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOLF] intends to do. I have heard him claim credit for having liberated those 25 million Romanians. I do not think that is true. I think those people were oppressed, and they knew they were oppressed for some 40 years under different tyrants not of their choosing, and they murdered the man who was the tyrant. They had every right to do so, because of his tyrannical behavior.

But it is completely unrealistic, beyond every pale of imagination, to think that the kind of freedom of religion that Americans enjoy can be enjoyed by the Chinese in 6 months. Our closest friends, our closest allies, people that we give billions of dollars to every year in the form of foreign aid, do not even have the kind of freedom of religion that he advocates. I think it is just an attempt to make this bill so unworkable that we will cut off all contact with China and condemn one-fifth of the people of the Earth to no hope.

We are the only people, we in the United States of America, of all the people in the West, are the only people who go to China and try to work with them and talk and try to get better human rights. All the other people are there to exploit the economic opportunity. We are there to build and to build good, sound government and good, sound practices and to build freedom.

Let us not cut it off in our zeal, no matter how well-intended, but misdirected it is, to try to impose these kinds of requirements on a government that is perfectly incapable of carrying it out.

Mr. WOLF. Madam Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON].

Mr. SOLOMON. Madam Chairman, although I have the greatest respect for the gentleman from Florida, I really take exception when he says that the gentleman from Virginia had nothing to do with securing religious freedom for the people in Romania. I do not think there is any Member of this House or the other House who had any more to do with that than did Mr. WOLF. I certainly take my hat off to the gentleman. His amendment to the Pelosi amendment simply says, "Make significant progress toward ending religious persecution of those people who are under house arrest for the expression of their religious beliefs."

American foreign policy encourages self-determination for all people and human rights for all people, including respect for their religious beliefs; that is why we should support this amendment.

It should be noncontroversial and made a part of the Pelosi amendment.

Mr. GIBBONS. Madam Chairman, I yield myself 30 seconds.

Madam Chairman, I know the gentleman from New York is sincere in his belief, but we would have to break off our relations with the United Kingdom and with Israel and with all other people that I can think of if we imposed on them the same kind of thing that the gentleman and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOLF] want to impose upon the Chinese. It is just ridiculous.

Madam Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL].

Mr. FRENZEL. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Madam Chairman, I do need to point out that standing alone the Wolf amendment would direct that if we had made some progress, the President could certify a recommendation.

However, as an amendment to the Pelosi amendment, it suffers from the same definitional problems that the Pelosi amendment suffers from, and that is that the term "significant progress" means the "implementation and faithful execution of measures" that terminate these repressive practices. That means that if you can find one person among the more than 1 billion Chinese, who alleges that he or she has been a victim of religious persecution, the President could not sign off.

It is that excess of enthusiasm that makes the provision ultimately unworkable and, of course, makes the Pelosi amendment also unworkable.

Ms. PELOSI. Madam Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. Madam Chairman, I only have a short amount of time, but I would be glad and will yield to the gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOSI] if she could be laconic.

Ms. PELOSI. Madam Chairman, I just want the gentleman to say, in all fairness to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOLF], that there are two different criteria on freedom of prisoners, yes, that is not significant progress, but on religion, it is his exact language attached to the Pelosi amendment, so it is to make significant progress, and it is not an absolute. It is just to move in the direction that would lead to a termination of imprisonment. We are talking about people who are imprisoned on the basis of their religious belief, so, please, do not paint him with the same brush as you paint me.

Mr. FRENZEL. Madam Chairman, I must say that I am not now, nor ever have been, a lawyer. However, I do know something about legislative law, and the fact that this is an addition to the Pelosi amendment means that it is going to be in the same section. The definition of "significant progress' is going to be the same as Pelosi. Therefore the Wolf amendment is flawed in the same way that the Pelosi amendment is flawed.

Mr. WOLF. Madam Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTON].

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Madam Chairman, first let me offer my apologies to the distinguished gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS] if he feels that I impugned him in any way. I do apologize for that.

I rise in support of the Wolf amendment. I think that it is a needed addition to the Pelosi amendment. It does require that significant progress be made toward religious freedoms and prisoners in China and Tibetans.

I would quote again from the Asian Watch figures that have been made available to me, that there are 55 names, Catholics and Protestants still being held without trial; 87 that are being held without trial that are not named. There are a total of 10 Tibetans being held without trial that we know who they are, and 61 that are being held without trial that we do not know who they are.

I think the Wolf amendment would help alleviate this situation.

Mr. WOLF. Madam Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOSI].

Ms. PELOSI. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me and for his amendment.

As the author of the Pelosi amendment, I am pleased to accept the Wolf amendment to the Pelosi amendment, and again point out that in his language we are not talking about absolute religious freedom in China being a condition for renewal of MFN, but those incarcerated for their religious beliefs be released.

Also, it addresses the fact that there is religious persecution in China. The Dalai Lama himself has said when Iraq went into Kuwait, and the world made a big fuss, but when China went to Tibet, and in the course of being there has persecuted Tibetans for their religion, no one seems to be making noise about that.

We are here today with the Wolf amendment, the persecution of Catholics, the persecution of Tibetans, for the expression of their religious belief.

I thank the gentleman for his constructive amendment, and also wish to thank the gentleman from California [Mr. COX], the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RUSSO], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTON], and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] for their support of the Pelosi amendment.

Mr. WOLF. Madam Chairman, I yield myself the remaining 2½ minutes.

Madam Chairman, in the past 2 years the Government of China has significantly increased its persecution of Catholics, Protestants, and Buddhists in that country. Despite the lifting of some restrictions in the mid-1970's, the Government in Beijing seems intent on persecuting people for their faith. It is presently estimated that there are 400 to 500 religious prisoners in China, among them Catholic and Buddhist priests, Catholic nuns as well as Protestant house church leaders and church members. Some estimate that the total number of religious prisoners may exceed 1,000.

Torture of these and other prisoners of conscience is common. Prisoners are often beaten, sometimes severely. Sometimes they are shocked with electric batons, or suspended by the arms for long periods of time. Some die as a result. Two such victims were a Protestant minister and his daughter who both died last December as the result of torture.

The Catholic community in China seems to have been singled out for particular persecution by Chinese authorities. Because many of them refuse to sever their ties with the Vatican, they are accused of collaborating with foreigners against the Government. Over 50 Catholic priests, bishops and lay people are known to be in prison; literally hundreds more are suspected to be in jail or under house arrest.

In addition to Catholics, the Buddhist community in Tibet has been the target of vicious government attacks. In one incident last year, over 450 people were murdered while demonstrating for their political and religious liberty in Lhasa, Tibet. In addition, the Chinese Government has placed restrictions on the number of Buddhist priests who can be trained and serve in that country.

Protestants are being persecuted as well. Just this July, the largest house church in Canton of over 1,000 people was shut down. Its leaders have been detained and harassed, and no promises have been made regarding the reopening of this church. Several well known evangelists and ministers have been arrested and, as I mentioned earlier, one died along with his daughter in prison. In the latest report we have received, 23 house church evangelists were arrested in the northern Shanxi province in early September.

Madam Chairman, how long will it take us to learn that unconditionally granting most-favored-nation status does not help improve human rights conditions, it simply legitimizes those who are in power. Romania is a perfect example of this. For years I and several of my colleagues fought the Reagan administration by opposing its position that Nicholas Ceausescu's government in Romania should be given MFN. "If we give them MFN," the argument went, "they will improve."

We all know that did not happen. The Romanian Government did not improve its behavior while getting MFN. It oppressed, used and murdered its people just as it had always done, while the United States Government turned a blind eye to Ceausescu's atrocities, and turned a deaf ear to the cries of the Romanian people.

Madam Chairman, we cannot allow this to happen again! We cannot allow the Chinese Government in Beijing to oppress, arrest and murder its people and still conduct "business as usual" with the United States. The American people expect more, and the Chinese people expect more of us than that. We must send a strong signal to the government to the People's Republic of China that they must improve their treatment of their own citizens—including the defense of their religious liberties—if they want to have most-favored-nation trading status with the United States.

To address this issue, my amendment to H.R. 4939 states that the Chinese Government must make:

• • • significant progress toward ending religious persecution in China and Tibet and progress toward the release of the leaders and members of all religious groups detained, incarcerated or under house arrest for the expression of their religious beliefs.

Madam Chairman, this is one of the most important human rights issues we will vote on in this Congress. I urge a unanimous vote for this amendment to help defend the religious liberty of the Chinese people.

Send a message to the Chinese Government that religious persecution will not be tolerated. Send a message to the Chinese people that the United States House of Representatives respects their human dignity and their right to religious freedom.

Madam Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. Madam Chairman, I think this amendment is extremely important, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. GIBBONS. Madam Chairman, I yield myself the remaining 30 seconds to say that this is not a debate over freedom of religion but a debate over whether or not the President can certify that a number of very stringent conditions have been met, so that he can resubmit to this Congress, if he chooses, a waiver of the horrible Smoot-Hawley tariffs. That is all it is.

I will agree with everything these people have said. I am for freedom of religion. I do not know any person in the Chamber that is not for freedom of religion. The question is, will we, at the end of all this, still have a right to be in China, asking for free religion, asking for all of those things, or will we just be on the outside?

Mr. GILMAN. Madam Chairman, I rise in support of the Wolf amendment to H.R. 4939, regarding religious persecution in China.

H.R. 4939 calls for significant progress by the People's Republic of China in reversing gross human rights violations in the People's Republic of China and Tibet. Unfortunately, the bill does not set verifiable targets nor elaborate on what exactly significant progress is. In addition, it does not specifically mention religious rights as one of those areas it must make so-called significant progress in. The Wolf amendment adds this neglected and key human right. However, the legislation still lacks teeth.

Amnesty International, Asia Watch and many other human rights groups paint a very grim picture of freedom of religion in China. The Puebla Institute has documented the cases of 63 Christian leaders currently deprived of liberties. The institute points out in its June 1990 special report on "Religious Repression in the People's Republic of China: Persecution of Catholics and Protestants" that,

The "crimes" with which these Catholics have been charged are in many cases unclear, but they tend to involve defiance of or opposition to PCA (Patriotic Catholic Association) policies, including ordaining priests, maintaining contact with the Vatican, or simply associating with clergy known to be in contact with the Vatican. Such activities, viewed as "counter-revolutionary crimes," are often punished by reform through labor.

One "counter-revolutionary" priest, Bishop Paul Liu Shube (No. 4), was convicted for possession of two illegal sermons and for owning a typewriter. Fr. Zhu Baoyu (No. 17) is serving a 10-year term after taking Catholics on a pilgrimage to Sheshan, near Shanghai. Fr. Joseph Jin Dezhen (No. 24), a priest who objected to birth control and abortion was sentenced to 15 years, and Fr. Zhang Shentang (No. 16), a priest who printed religious literature without government authorization, received a 17-year sentence. The study also points out that since 1988. "There has been a renewed purge against Protestant activities". One example is Mai Furen who is in his late 70's. He "is one of three Protestant church leaders arrested in 1983 on charges of having illegal connections overseas; belonging to the shouters, a Protestant evangelical group; and distributing Bibles. Brought to trial in January 1986 and sentenced to 12 years' imprisonment he is now detained in a labor camp.

Madam Chairman, the religious persecution of Tibetans in occupied Tibet is well documented and is the subject of many reports, so I won't go into it here. But I would just say that Asia Watch describes the Chinese action there as merciless repression.

I urge adoption of the Wolf amendment.

Mr. ROSE. Madam Chairman, I rise in support of this amendment. Several respected human rights organizations have laboriously cataloged the Chinese Government's institutionalized system of religious persecution. Ending Chinese religious persecution is essential to any resolution of the tragic human rights situation in Tibet, a country of devout Buddhists. Before the Chinese invasion of Tibet in 1949 and the Red Army's wild destruction of Tibet's religious institutions, almost 25 percent of the Tibetan people chose to lead ascetic and nonviolent lifestyles as Buddhist monks and nuns. Today, monasteries that schooled tens of thousands of Tibetans before 1949, are now limited by the Chinese Government to only a few hundred students.

The International Campaign for Tibet recently published a report in which Tibetan refugees speak of China's continued, systematic destruction of the Buddhist religion and culture in Tibet. The Chinese Government has destroyed thousands of Tibetan temples and monasteries and to this day, strictly controls the membership, teachings and administration of Tibet's few remaining religious institutions. According to Amnesty International and Asia Watch, the expulsion, arrest, torture, and murder of Tibet monks and nuns at the hands of the Chinese is commonplace.

In order to fight China's persecution of all religious groups and its acts of cultural genocide, the United States must make the issue of religious freedom a part of its policy toward the People's Republic of China. I urge my colleagues to support the Wolf amendment.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Madam Chairman, I rise in strong support of the amendment being offered by my friend, Congressman FRANK WOLF. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOLF] has been a consistent champion for the protection of fundamental human rights around the globe and he has been a leader in the Congress in highlighting the cases of individuals who are incarcerated for the expression of their religious beliefs.

The amendment before us is an excellent one, highlighting the severe restrictions which are inflicted on the religious community in China and Tibet—the Catholic and Protestant Christian communities, the Tibetan Buddhists and the Muslims. Among the fundamental human rights which are inalienable, I believe the right to freedom of religious practice and the expression of one's spiritual faith is—after life itself—paramount.

Madam Chairman, Chinese and Tibetan religious adherents are incarcerated because of their religious activities and expression of their faith. In the closed Chinese society, with its secret judicial and penal systems, exact numbers of those currently in prison are elusive. We do have evidence that about 50 Catholic leaders are currently in prison or are under house arrest in China for the expression of their religious beliefs. Catholics who maintain their allegiance with the Vatican are particularly vulnerable to the whims of the Chinese Communist authorities because of restrictions against contacts with foreign entities.

We have confirmation that, in recent years, approximately 410 Protestant believers have been arrested or detained. In some cases, believers who are imprisoned or under house arrest have requested that their names not be published. In 1989 alone, the number of arrests exploded to 350, and 37 have been arrested in this year. Many remain incarcerated. As noted by a church leader based in Hong Kong whose identity must not be disclosed, "in the case of house-church Christians, the vast majority are apolitical, and willing to obey the State where it does not conflict with God's ultimate laws." Although the official Bureau of Religious Affairs denies that a systematic crackdown on house churches is underway, in a mere 12 months, as many as 89 house churches and meeting places have been closed by public security officers and other Communist authorities.

It is clear that the regime in Communist China has had a systematic policy of repression for unregistered churches, both Catholic and Protestant. As mentioned earlier in the debate, an October 9, 1990, report by News Network International [NII] exposes an official document which verifies "that implementation of a more repressive religious policy is not merely the whim of local Maoist cadres [which is a favorite excuse used by Chinese authorities and apologists], but is being officially sanctioned." Wang Hongkui, head of the official Religious Affairs Bureau in Shanghai, calls on Communist Party officials to "divide and smash" those religious leaders who refuse to submit to control by the party, including the "underground" Catholics who maintain their allegiance to the Vatican.

Clearly, Wang and the Communist Party officials are struggling to control the effectiveness of the Christian community. This document, emanating from the Religious Affairs Bureau, outlines the directives to deal with house church leaders and their congregations through political indoctrination and harassment. The document draws the link between the officially sanctioned Protestant Three-Self Patriotic Movement and the Catholic Patriotic Association, and the expectation—the mandate—by the Communist Party that these entities further the Party's policies.

Madam Chairman, NNI reports of the arrest in recent months of several dozen loyalist Catholic bishops, priests and laymen throughout northern China and in the Fujian Province in July. In correspondence from Christians in the provinces of Henan, Anhui, Fujian, and Shanghai in the east, to Gansu in the interior, to Yunnan in the south the accounts are similar, describing an increase in house searches, confiscation of bibles and other Christian literature, arrests and imprisonment. There is a declared policy among party and state organs that the churches and house churches must be subject to tighter control. These reports corroborate with independent reports from several human rights monitoring organizations.

According to the report submitted in September 1990 by the International Campaign for Tibet, following the autumn 1987 political and cultural demonstrations in Lhasa, Tibet, the overall conditions in the monasteries around Lhasa have been abysmal and conditions in many others have worsened. In March of this year, Chinese troops surrounded all the major monasteries and the movement of the resident monks and pilgrims alike were closely monitored. Again, the Communist Party has orchestrated a system whereby Buddhist monks and nuns are forced to attend political reeducation sessions. It is estimated that as many as half of monks have left their monasteries since 1987 through expulsion, escape to India and imprisonment. The hundreds of monks and nuns who have been imprisoned for extended periods of time since 1987 have endured various gruesome forms of physical torture.

Madam Chairman, the restrictions which have been placed on religious leaders, adherents and their churches, the arrests of believers and the spate of house church closings must be protested. I urge my colleagues to support this amendment which will help focus attention on the recent increased repression of religious believers. To quote from the U.S. statement on religious intolerance at the U.N. Human Rights Commission, a person's right to pursue the profound and timeless questions revolving around the true meaning of life or other matters of a transcendent nature cannot be denied, abridged or vacated by governments. We have an obligation to stand firm in support of this paramount basic human right, the right to freedom of religious expression.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. UDALL. Madam Chairman, today during the vote on final passage on H.R. 4939, conditional most-favored-nation trade status for China in 1991, I was unavoidably detained due to committee business in my office. Had I been present, I would have spoken in favor of and indeed supported final passage of this legislation.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. GIBBONS. Madam Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GIBBONS. Madam Chairman, at the request of many, many Members, and in order to speed this up, may I ask unanimous consent that the next two amendments be considered en bloc and that the time for debate be limited to 10 minutes on each side? Is that all right?

Madam Chairman, we do not consider these amendments controversial. I can read the score on the scoreboard up there.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS] can only ask unanimous consent in Committee of the Whole that one amendment when offered be modified to include the other.

Mr. GIBBONS. Then, Madam Chairman, I will do it that way.

At the end of the bill, insert "TITLE II" and the text starting with section 1:

SEC. 1. STATEMENT OF PRINCIPLES.

(a) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this Act to create principles governing the conduct of industrial cooperation projects of United States nationals in the People's Republic of China and Tibet.

(b) PRINCIPLES.—It is the sense of the Congress that any United States' national conducting an industrial cooperation project in the People's Republic of China or Tibet should adhere to the following principles:

(1) Suspend the use of all goods, wares, articles, and merchandise that are mined, produced, or manufactured, in whole or in part, by convict labor or forced labor if there is reason to believe that the material or product is produced or manufactured by forced labor, and refuse to use forced labor in the industrial cooperation project.

(2) Seek to ensure that political or religious views, sex, ethnic or national background, involvement in political activities or nonviolent demonstrations, or association with suspected or known dissidents will not prohibit hiring, lead to harassment, demotion, or dismissal, or in any way affect the status or terms of employment in the industrial cooperation project. The United States national should not discriminate in terms or conditions of employment in the industrial cooperation project against persons with past records of arrests or internal exile for nonviolent protest of membership in unofficial organizations committed to nonviolance.

(3) Ensure that methods of production used in the industrial cooperation project do not pose an unnecessary physical danger to workers and neighboring populations and property and that the industrial cooperation project does not necessarily risk harm to the surrounding environment, and consult with community leaders regarding environmental protection with respect to the industrial cooperation project.

(4) Strive to use business enterprises that are not controlled by the People's Republic of China or its authorized agents and departments as potential partners in the industrial cooperation project.

(5) Prohibit any military presence on the premises of the industrial cooperation project.

(6) Undertake to promote freedom of association and assembly among the employees of the United States national. The United States national should project any infringement by the Chinese Government of these freedoms to the approriate authorities of that government and to the International Labor Organization, which has an office in Beijing.

(7) Use every possible channel of communication with the Chinese Government to urge that government to disclose publicly a complete list of all those individuals arrested since March 1989, to end incommunicado detention and torture, and to provide international observers access to all places of detention in the People Republic of China and Tibet and to trials of prisoners arrested in connection with the pro-democracy events of April through June of 1989 and the prodemocracy demonstrations which have taken place in Tibet since 1987.

(8) Discourage or undertake to prevent compulsory political indoctrination programs from taking place on the premises of the operations of the industrial cooperation project.

(9) Promote freedom of expression, including the freedom to seek, receive, and impart information and ideas of all kinds, regardless of frontiers either orally, in writing or in print in the form or art, or through any media. To this end, the United States national should raise with appropriate authorities of the Chinese Government concerns about restrictions on importation of foreign publications.

(c) PROMOTION OF PRINCIPLES BY OTHER NATIONS.—The Secretary of State shall forward a copy of the principles set forth in subsection (b) to the member nations of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development and encourage them to promote principles similar to these principles.

SEC. 2. REGISTRATION REQUIREMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Each United States national conducting an industrial cooperation project in the People's Republic of China or Tibet shall register with the Secretary of State and indicate whether the United States national agrees to implement the principles set forth in section 1(b). No fee shall be required for registration under this subsection.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The registration requirement of subsection (a) shall take effect 6 months after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 3. REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.

(a) REPORT.—Each United States national conducting an industrial cooperation project in the People's Republic of China or Tibet shall report to the Department of State describing the United States national's adherence to the principles. Such national shall submit a completed reporting form furnished by the Department of State. The first report shall be submitted not later than 1 year after the date on which the national registers under section 2 and not later than the end of each 1-year period occurring thereafter.

(b) REVIEW OF REPORT.—The Secretary of State shall review each report submitted under subsection (a) and determine whether the United States national submitting the report is adhering to the principles. The Secretary may request additional information from the United States national and other sources to verify the information submitted.

(c) ANNUAL REPORT.—The Secretary of State shall submit a report to the Congress and to the Secretariat of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, describing the level of adherence to the principles by United States nationals subject to the reporting requirement of subsection (a). This report shall be submitted not later than 2 years after the date of the enactment of this act and not later than the end of each 1-year period occurring thereafter.

SEC. 4. EXPORT MARKETING SUPPORT.

(a) SUPPORT.—Departments and agencies of the United States may only intercede with a foreign government or foreign national regarding export marketing activity in the People's Republic of China or Tibet on behalf of a United States national subject to the reporting requirements of section 3(a) if that United States national adheres to the principles.

(b) TYPE OF CONTACT.—The term "intercede with a foreign government or foreign national" includes any contract by an officer or employee of the United States with officials of any foreign government or foreign national involving or contemplating any effort to assist in selling a good, service, or technology in the People's Republic of China or Tibet. Such term does not include multilateral or bilateral government-to-government trade negotiations intended to resolve trade issuses which may affect United States nationals who do not adhere to the principles.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—Subsection (a) shall take effect 2 years after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 6. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this Act—

(1) the terms "adhere to the principles", "adhering to the principles" and "adherence to the principles" mean—

(A) agreeing to implement the principles set forth in section 1(b);

(B) implementing those principles by taking good-faith measures with respect to each such principle; and

(C) reporting accurately to the Department of State on the measures taken to implement those principles;

(2) the term "industrial cooperation project" referes to a for-profit activity the business operations of which employ more than 25 individuals or have assests greater than $25,000; and

(3) the term "United States national" means—

(B) a corporation, partnership, and other business association organized under the laws of the United States, any State or territory thereof, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, or the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands.

Mr. GIBBONS (during the reading). Madam Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the modification to the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the initial request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The modification is accepted.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PORTER] will be recognized for 7½ minutes, and a Member in opposition will be recognized for 7½ minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PORTER].

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. PORTER. Madam Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PORTER. Madam Chairman, I believe that we have just agreed that the debate time will be limited to 10 minutes on each side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. PORTER. Madam Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Chairman, in 1997, control of one of the world's greatest economic success stories, Hong Kong, will revert to the hands of the Communist Chinese regime that brought us the Tiananmen Square massacre and the ensuing program of arrests and extrajudicial killings designed to spread fear and eliminate all political dissent in the so-called People's Republic.

Many people in Hong Kong understandably dread the day their home reverts to Chinese control. They are fearful that the freedoms they have enjoyed, and which have resulted in impressive economic growth and prosperity, will come to an end. They fear that the Chinese leaders, who have shown more interest in maintaining their iron-fisted control of the people than in respecting basic human rights and needs, will ultimately strip them of their rights and treat them with the same respect they showed the peaceful protesters in Tiananmen Square.

The people of Hong Kong have started voting with their feet and have begun to flee Hong Kong in record numbers. This year 62,000 people will emigrate from Hong Kong.

It is in the interest of those who support human rights worldwide that the rights of the people of Hong Kong be preserved after 1997, and that Hong Kong remain a working example of human and economic freedom that can set an example for the rest of China.

The global community must make it clear that preserving the freedoms of the people of Hong Kong is a priority and that the world is closely monitoring the actions of the Chinese regime as 1997 draws near.

The amendment I am offering provides these assurances by requiring the President to certify, before extending MFN to China, that the Chinese are adhering to the 1984 Joint Declaration on Hong Kong.

The joint declaration is an international agreement between the United Kingdom and the People's Republic of China, which provides an outline for provisions to be included in a basic law for use in Hong Kong after 1997. The basic law ensures that democracy, and independent judiciary and free enterprise will be maintained in Hong Kong for 50 years under Chinese rule.

Passage of this amendment will send a clear message to the Chinese Government and the people of Hong Kong that strict adherence to the joint declaration and protection of the political and economic rights of the people of Hong Kong is a serious concern of Congress.

Affirming the confidence of the people of Hong Kong will have an additional benefit for American business interests in the territory. Americans play a large role in the economic life of Hong Kong. There are presently more than 900 American firms doing business in Hong Kong employing approximately 200,000 Hong Kong nationals. But in the last year, American firms have lost 24 percent of their key employees to emigration and transfer to non-American companies of managers, executives, and highly skilled employees who were offered immigration benefits as part of their employment package. Stemming the tide of Hong Kong emigres by helping to allay their fears of Chinese control will keep key employees at work in American firms.

Madam Chairman, this amendment simply serves to remind the Chinese Government that the United States Congesss is watching them. To remind them that preferential trade status is contingent on ensuring the basic rights of their citizens and living up to their international obligations.

It is simply asking, Madam Chairman, for the Chinese to do what they have already agreed to do. For those who believe in economic freedom, for those who believe in human rights and democracy, I believe that an economically free Hong Kong, operating under the rule of law with the democratically elected government will be a difficult pill for Beijing to swallow. Even if they can, Madam Chairman, and if the principles of economic freedom and human rights flourish, then this haven of freedom within their oppressive system, I believe, will be an irresistible force for change.

It is in the interest of all the Chinese people that Hong Kong remain an example of the force of human freedom and for the United States to take cognizance of the obligations of China to maintain economic freedom and democracy within Hong Kong.

Pass this amendment and let the Chinese know that we want Hong Kong to retain essential freedoms after 1997 and that we will monitor China's adherence to the joint declaration.

Mr. GIBBONS. Madam Chairman, I have no requests for time. I can read the mood of the House. I would suggest that we adopt these amendments as quickly as possible and get this over with.

Mr. PORTER. Madam Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER] will be recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Madam Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Chairman, first I want to commend the House for taking up legislation dealing with China. Because though the prodemocracy movement in China has been replaced on the front pages, the hearts, minds and souls of the Chinese prodemocracy movement are irreplaceable.

The United States has the power to influence positively events in China. This amendment does this by enlisting the powerful tool of United States businesses in the struggle for freedom and democracy in China. My amendment is based on legislation I introduced and is cosponsored by, among others, the cochairs of the Congressional Human Rights Caucus, Mr. LANTOS and Mr. PORTER, by the chairman of the Asian and Pacific Affairs Subcommittee of the Foreign Affairs Committee, Mr. SOLARZ, and by the leader in Congress of the fight for human rights in China, Ms. PELOSI.

Madam Chairman, human rights abuses continue unabated in China. Amnesty International has reported the execution of over 500 people during the current anticrime campaign. This includes dissidents who were arrested for counter-revolutionary activity. These defendants have had no opportunity to prepare a defense. In fact, some were executed only 2 weeks after their arrest.

The United States must speak with a voice which is loud and clear against the continued oppression of the Chinese people. And the United States must speak out for freedom and democracy. U.S. business can be an important part of this voice. Since the opening to China in the 1970's, there has been an increasing number of contacts between China and United States businesses. U.S. businesses have the opportunity to use this contact to further the cause of freedom and democracy.

It is in the long-term interest of United States' companies to ensure trade with China which does not deny fundamental freedoms to its people. Companies, by conducting themselves in a manner which encourages reform in China, will be securing a stable and profitable market in the future. And Madam Chairman, the companies I've spoken with about my bill are supportive. They realize the influence they can have and they want to do their part.

Briefly, the nine principles ask that U.S. companies:

First, not use goods or products manufactured by forced labor in the People's Republic of China and Tibet;

Second, safeguard Chinese and Tibetan employees prone to dismissal based upon politics, involvement in nonviolent demonstrations, past records of arrests or internal exile for nonviolent protest or membership in unofficial organizations committed to nonviolence;

Third, seek to ensure that methods of production do not unnecessarily risk harm to the surrounding environment;

Fourth, strive to use independent businesses when looking for potential partners in business in the People's Republic of China and Tibet;

Fifth, prohibit any military presence on the premises of industrial cooperation project;

Sixth, should undertake to promote freedom of association and assembly among their employees;

Seventh, should press Chinese authorities for a list of those arrested since June 4, for an end to incommunicado detention, and for access to international observers to places of detention;

Eighth, should discourage or undertake to prevent compulsory political indoctrination programs from taking place on the premises of their operations in the People's Republic of China and Tibet, and Ninth, should promote freedom of expression. To this end, U.S. nationals should raise with appropriate authorities concerns about restrictions on importation of foreign publications.

Once again, I want to commend this body for considering legislation dealing with China. As the Persian Gulf and the budget dominate the news, it is doubly important that we do not forget human rights in China. A short attention span on human rights in China ensures a long prison term for the prodemocracy movement in China.

The message of support for human rights in China is strongest if private industry as well as Government speaks out with one loud and clear voice. I urge my colleagues to support this amendment to H.R. 4939.

□ 1620

Madam Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Madam Chairman, I rise in strong support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington and I congratulate him for bringing this before us. The measure would require that United States nationals engaged in commercial activities in the People's Republic of China and Tibet follow certain ethical guidelines in conducting business.

The U.S. Government should not be required to support American business people and their interests overseas unless they are expected to promote that which we as a nation take for granted here. Human rights, self-dignity, democracy, freedom of expression, and religion are not just sideshows in our culture. They are not on the periphery to our way of life. And they are not mere possibilities that Americans would hope to see promoted overseas. It is only in a global free democratic environment that the world would be truly safe for American travelers and American business.

At a time that the United Nations has imposed economic sanctions against Iraq, I doubt that a democratic country would attempt to sell Iraq a chemical that will help it to produce atom and hydrogen bombs, poison gas, and fuel for ballistic missiles.

Accordingly, I urge the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Madam Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume only to say businesses that I have talked to understand these principles and want to work to further these principles.

Madam Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTON].

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Madam Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Miller-Porter amendment. One of the items of the Miller amendment requires that no forced labor shall be used in any products that are exported to the United States. I would like to read an excerpt from the Washington Post of Sunday, July 15, 1990, that is headlined "China: Most Favored Prison."

The 20 million persons now in China's prisons are more than prisoners. They are part of China's labor force, making products both for domestic and foreign consumption—everything from socks and textile goods up to machine tools and automobiles. There is no problem about constructing new jails in China—prisoners build them. One huge dam and water-power project was built by 1 million prisoners over a 10-year period. The total output of goods and services from prison labor is so large that it is routinely included in the country's GNP statistics. In fact, each prison has two names, one for its connection with the Public Security Department, such as jail No. 1 of Cheng Tao, and the other for its role as a normal business enterprise, such as Cheng Tao Machinery Factory.

The ingenuity of China's elite to exploit forced labor seems to know no bounds. Prisoners are also now available for leasing to private factories owned by foreign businessmen. In one case, a Chinese intermediary going by the name of Charles Chi offered to lease prisoners to any Western company wishing to open a factory in China.

Madam Chairman, it is for these reasons that I think we should adopt the Miller amendment.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Madam Chairman, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOSI].

Ms. PELOSI. Madam Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Miller amendment and the Porter amendment. I thank the gentlemen for their hard work in improving the Pease legislation we have before us today.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Madam Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PORTER], as modified.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRIES

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, a number of us are getting calls and inquiries from constituents, but also perhaps more troublesome, from the media wanting particulars relative to the budget resolution voted on Tuesday, October 16.

The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is yet to appear and be published. The first volume came on the 17th. Today, on the 18th, we have the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD published in its entirety for the 17th, but we do not yet have a complete CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for Tuesday, the 16th.

We made a call in my office to the Government Printing Office and were advised that they did not have the materials to print. The problem was no one has the materials to print the resolution.

I think there is a concern in terms of having the ability to express either a defense for our votes, whether we voted in the affirmative or in the negative, given the seriousness of the situation, but also some concerns that the integrity of the amendment may be affected during the delay, which is now over 48 hours since the time the vote took place and lack of any publication of the amendment.

Can the Chair get some assurance to us or information as to when the amendment will be printed in the RECORD for the Members to see?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MOAKLEY). The Clerk is making available to the Cloakrooms the full report and has notified the GPO that this is their top priority to have printed as soon as possible the bill in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. HENRY. A copy of the amendment is in their office? The printer presently has a copy of the amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A copy of the report will be in the Cloakrooms.

Mr. HENRY. So copies are in the Cloakrooms for our perusal?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the Chair's information.

Mr. HENRY. Does the Chair have any estimate as to when the Printing Office will finish with the RECORD?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Well, as the Chair has said, the Clerk has notified the Printing Office that it is the top priority, as soon as possible.

Mr. HENRY. I thank the Chair.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WALKER. Just to note, the Republican Cloakroom just reports to us that they do not have a copy at the present time, so if such copies are available, we would hope they would be made available to the minority as well as the majority.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the Chair's information, that it would be available to both Cloakrooms at the same time.

Mr. WALKER. When would we expect that availability, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As the Chair has said, the Clerk has put it as a top priority, so as soon as possible, as soon as humanly possible.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the Chair.

REMOVAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS COSPONSOR OF HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 264, REPEALING THE LIMITATION ON PRESIDENTIAL TERMS

Mr. MARTIN of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have the name of the gentlewoman from Illinois [Mrs. MARTIN] removed as a cosponsor of House Joint Resolution 264, repealing the limitation of Presidential terms.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

MAKING IN ORDER CONSIDERATION OF HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 677, FURTHER CONTINUING APPROPRIATIONS, FISCAL YEAR 1991

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it shall be in order to consider in the House the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 677) making further continuing appropriations for fiscal year 1991; that the joint resolution be debatable for not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations; that all points of order against the joint resolution and against its consideration be waived; and that the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. WALKER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, I did not hear the gentleman's motion. Was it just for consideration? It was not for consideration and passage?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Consideration and a vote on passage.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

SEC. 114. EXTENSION OF TEMPORARY INCREASE IN PUBLIC DEBT LIMIT.—Section 1 of Public Law 101-350 is amended by striking 'October 19, 1990' and inserting 'October 24, 1990.'

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the leadership has requested that I introduce a new continuing resolution extending that which will expire tomorrow, the 19th, through the 24th. They have been advised that the President will agree to such an extension.

House Joint Resolution 677 provides for the orderly continuation of the Government, extends the debt limit, and suspends sequestration until midnight October 24. It is an extension of what is now in place.

I'm proud of our committee. We have done our work. I have pointed out time and time again that our financial situation is not the fault of our committee. Since 1945, the total of our bills has been $173 billion below the total of the requests of the Presidents, and our progress this year has been held up, despite our readiness to act, on request of the leadership.

Of the 13 appropriations bills, four conference reports are ready for consideration by the House: Military Construction; Transportation; Energy and Water Development; and District of Columbia.

The VA-HUD report will be filed today.

The following bills are in conference with the Senate: Labor-HHS; Defense; Treasury-Postal Service; Commerce-Justice; and Rural Development/Agriculture.

The legislative bill has not yet been considered in the House.

The total in all these bills is within the totals permitted by the budget resolution.

I add, Mr. Speaker, that to finish our work by the 24th will require full cooperation of the leadership and the President, whose signature of course is essential.

It is to be hoped that the President, if necessary, will permit the Government to operate until the next payday as was the practice for many years.

The final sequester report would be in force today except for the continuing resolution. It would require a sequester of $152.5 billion in budget authority to reduce outlays by $83.3 billion. This is a 31.6-percent reduction in nondefense discretionary spending and a 34.5-percent reduction in military spending.

Reductions of one-third would be catastrophic. The existing continuing resolution expires Friday, the 19th. The budget resolution conference report adopted last week contained reconcilation instructions to the appropriate legislative committees that may result in sequestration being set aside for the year.

Mr. Speaker, we must keep the Government operating. The continuing resolution and the appropriations bills do that.

The committee will work hard to get our work done. I hope we will not see the Government held up for reasons unrelated to appropriations. Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of the resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Joint Resolution 677, to keep the Government in business for 5 more days. It is called a continuing resolution, but it would more aptly be named continuing irresolution.

I say that with no disrespect to the chairman. House Joint Resolution 677 does what it should do.

It accepts the agreement that we reached on the last CR to fund programs at the lower of the House passed bill, the Senate passed bill, or last year's level. Because of that, funding continues for the Government, but at a rate which is, in total, lower than last year. Our preliminary massaging of the Congressional Budget Office analysis shows that for domestic discretionary spending, under this CR, we are spending at an annual rate which is $28.5 billion in budget authority below the levels in the budget resolution conference report, and some $11.5 billion in outlays below those levels. So we are keeping the Government going, but at a constrained level of spending, which should keep the pressure on to finish our business.

The reason I call this bill the continuing irresolution is because of the state of affairs in Congress as a whole. Some people complain about Congress spending money as if there is no tomorrow. Well, in my view, Congress is spending time as if there is no tomorrow. We need to make up our minds once and for all that we need to finish our business, put a wrap on the 101st Congress and go home. Because if we continue to act as if time is not of the essence, if we keep piddling around here, displaying our continuing irresolution for the Nation to see and scoff at, for many of us, there may be no tomorrow.

The Office of Management and Budget has indicated the administration supports this continuing irresolution. I congratulate the Chairman for bringing forth this measure. And I urge my colleagues to support it, and to contemplate the necessity of putting aside our differences, finding our common ground, finishing our business, and going home.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to my good friend, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. PARRIS].

Mr. PARRIS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts very much for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I want to extend to the gentleman from Massachusetts my congratulations for his sensitivity to this problem and also to the chairman of the full committee, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN] as well and to suggest that this continuing threat to Federal employees is simply intolerable in terms of its impact on the lives and fortunes of real people with car payments and mortgage payments and children in school and all the rest.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his consideration of this matter and for his cooperation in the same.

For the past several weeks, Congress has been engaged, or should I say mired, in deliberations over the budget.

I know that there is plenty of finger pointing going on about who is to blame for this whole budget mess—but I know one thing for certain—it is not the American people who are to blame, and they should not have to shoulder the burden of this Government's inability to reach an agreement. No Federal employee should be furloughed or miss 1 day of work, and no American taxpayer should lose the benefit of any Government services because of the budget problem. These are not sacrifices that have to be made.

Two days ago, I, along with several of my colleagues, conveyed this message to President Bush in a letter. We asked him to do whatever is necessary to keep the Government from being shut down. If that means signing another continuing resolution that would keep funds flowing to the Government, then that is what the President should do. America cannot afford to have the Government close down just because of partisan infighting or public relations concerns.

Civil servants all across America have been held hostage by this budget process, and believe me they are mad—and they should be. Their livelihood hangs in the balance as the Congress and the administration continue to play their budget games, and let me assure you, this is not a game to our country's Federal employees. Let us not hold the budget over their heads like the Sword of Damocles—they are not the ones responsible for failing to produce a budget.

Many of my constituents have asked me why is this happening and what am I going to do to keep it from happening again. I have sponsored legislation that will provide for automatic continuing resolutions should a budget agreement not be reached. I hope that this legislation will receive favorable consideration by this Congress. This will keep the Government running, frozen at the previous year's level of spending, until the Congress and the President can come to an agreement on the budget. It will also put an end to all Americans, especially Federal employees, being the helpless victims of the breakdown in our budget process.

I rise in support of this continuing resolution and hope that President Bush will sign it and not let the Government shut down—America is counting on us all.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank STAN PARRIS from the Eighth District of Virginia for his interest and cooperation in trying to keep the Government going not only in this continuing resolution, but in all the continuing resolutions. But more than that, no one, no one in the Congress has been after more in regard to getting a provision into one of these resolutions to make sure that the people, the Federal workers who were furloughed through no fault of their own, be paid during the time, the 3 days, they were furloughed. I promise the gentleman I will do everything I can on this, and I am saying to him I am sure before we go home his wishes are going to be fulfilled.

Mr. PARRIS. I thank the gentleman. This is Christmas for me.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House, the previous question is considered as ordered on the joint resolution.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the joint resolution.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 379, nays 37, not voting 17, as follows:

Mr. STEARNS changed his vote from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. WOLPE changed his vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the joint resolution was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Speaker, I offer a personal explanation of my absence from votes. I had to travel to my district on a matter of utmost urgency. Had I been here to vote, I would have voted in the following way:

On rollcall No. 484, on agreeing to the Pelosi amendment to H.R. 4939, as amended regarding the extension of most-favored-nation treatment to the products of the People's Republic of China, "yea",

On rollcall No. 485, on agreeing to the Porter amendment to H.R. 4939 as modified regarding the extension of most-favored-nation treatment to the products of the People's Republic of China, "yea";

On rollcall No. 486, on passage of H.R. 4939 regarding the extension of most-favored-nation treatment to the products of the People's Republic of China, "nay"; and

On rollcall No. 487, on passage of House Joint Resolution 677, making further continuing appropriations to the fiscal year 1991 budget, "yea".

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably absent for rollcall No. 484, the Pelosi amendment to H.R. 4939—conditional MFN for China in 1991; rollcall No. 485, the Porter amendment to H.R. 4939; rollcall vote No. 486, final passage of H.R. 4939; and rollcall No. 487, House Joint Resolution 667—continuing resolution.

Had I been here, I would have cast the following votes: "aye," "aye," "aye," and "aye."

AUTHORIZING THE SPEAKER TO APPOINT CONFEREES AND PROVIDING FOR MOTION TO INSTRUCT ON H.R. 5835, OMNIBUS BUDGET RECONCILIATION ACT OF 1990

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that upon receipt of a message from the Senate transmitting an amendment to H.R. 5835, insisting on the amendment, and requesting a conference thereon, the House shall be considered to have taken H.R. 5835 and the Senate amendment from the Speaker's table, disagreed with the Senate amendment, and agreed to the conference requested by the Senate; that the Speaker shall be authorized to appoint conferees in anticipation thereof and reserve the authority to modify the appointment at later times; and that the motion to instruct conferees otherwise in order at the time of their appointment shall instead be in order only if offered by the minority leader or his designee on the legislative day of Friday, October 19, 1990.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. TRAXLER]. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would observe under my reservation that the unanimous consent request is, in the opinion of the minority, necessary to secure expeditious process of the Congress's business.

As many of us know, the President has indicated that he will sign the continuing resolution only if we are making progress on completion of the reconciliation bill. The unanimous consent request of the distinguished Budget Committee chairman will, I hope, be one evidence that we are anxious to begin work as soon as possible.

The reservation of the motion to instruct conferees left to the minority leader for tomorrow was done at the minority's request, and we believe that that protects all of our interests.

Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding. As the gentleman from Minnesota knows, there has been quite a bit of concern expressed on our side of the aisle in the last couple of hours about the fact that there was not a printed document available of what the House acted upon the other evening, and so we had no idea what it was we were going to go to conference on. I understand that the gentleman from Minnesota has looked into the matter, has found that we will have copies of the document available by later on this evening, and that the problems of the Government Printing Office in getting those matters to us do not appear to have been a deliberate action to keep the Members from having the appropriate information.

I wonder if the gentleman would explain the situation as he understands it.

Mr. FRENZEL. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, in responding to the gentleman from Pennsylvania I would say that nothing we have done around here in the last couple of weeks is normal, and the pressures on the Printing Office is one of the things that has not been normal.

The Rostenkowski amendment in the reconciliation bill was a huge document, it was complicated, glued together, had to be reviewed very carefully by the GPO. Some telephone calls had to be made to find out on a question of whether the Scotch tape was over the proper word or one that might have followed, and in my judgment the GPO is doing the best it can, that it has been given a properly enrolled bill, that there have been no changes made to the bill between enrollment and the GPO. We will have, we believe, copies of the blue edition of the reconciliation bill in this House by 9 o'clock.

Prior to that time the Ways and Means Committee minority, the budget minority, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and I all have copies of what I believe to be true copies of the enrolled bills. So I can say to the gentleman that things are not as usual around here, but nobody is trying to put dirt into the game.

Mr. WALKER. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. FRENZEL. I do.

Mr. WALKER. It is the gentleman's understanding that the Xerox copy that we have before us is in fact that which is being enrolled and will show up in print later on tonight, is that correct?

Mr. FRENZEL. Further reserving the right to object, that is correct.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. FRENZEL. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON].

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I am not a member of the Ways and Means Committee, and I am not a member of the Budget Committee, but I think we all ought to remember that tonight is probably the last time that BILL FRENZEL will every carry a trade bill as a member of the Ways and Means Committee on the floor of this House. I do not know about the rest of my colleagues, but I think I speak for all of you when I say BILL, you are one of the greatest guys I have ever met in my life. We are going to sorely miss you on both sides of the aisle, and God bless you.

Mr. FRENZEL. Further reserving the right to object, I am grateful, and I am humble, and my only request is to name no buildings after me.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Ms. OAKAR. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object for a twofold purpose, one, to certainly add my acclamation to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL]. He was the minority leader of a committee I chaired, and I had the pleasure of working with him, and he was eminently fair and decent.

But second, I wanted to ask the distinguished Budget Committee chairman a question, if I might.

Under the unanimous consent request are we able to instruct the conferees on the House side in terms of some provisions that are omitted that some of us feel are very important?

Under my reservation, I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, under the unanimous-consent request, the motion to instruct, as usual, would be offered by the minority leader or his designee.

Ms. OAKAR. So the gentleman is saying that we are not able to instruct? Is that not in order?

Mr. PANETTA. Pursuant to this unanimous consent request, the motion to instruct, and whatever is contained in the motion to instruct, would be left to the minority leader or his designee. That is the unanimous-consent request.

Ms. OAKAR. As a Member, although I do not have the pleasure of being in the minority, and I am a good Democrat, I would like to ask unanimous consent that there be two instructions given to the House conferees, and that would be to put on the table, if the Senate does not have this on the table, a child care package, and second to have mammography coverage as part of our conference.

Mr. WALKER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, do I understand this is a modification?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would advise that there is one request pending, and the Chair cannot entertain any other requests until the resolution of the pending unanimous-consent request by the gentleman from California.

Does the gentlewoman from Ohio insist on her reservation?

Ms. OAKAR. No. Mr. Speaker. I am asking if it is in order that I ask unanimous consent that these two items be part of our conference?

□ 1750

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TRAXLER). The Chair would state to the gentlewoman that the gentleman's request for unanimous consent is pending, and in order for her suggestion to be entertained, he would have to modify his unanimous-consent request.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, very often, I remember voting for several instructions to conferees, and I am just trying to find the vehicle by which we might do that.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Ms. OAKAR. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, the gentlewoman is a member of the majority party here, and, I think, would certainly be able to carry this request to the leadership. I think the leadership would be sensitive obviously. If child care is added on the other side of the bill and there is an agreement with regard to child care provisions, I think that would be something that would, indeed, be included in the conference, and if the gentlewoman is also concerned about mammography and other sections related to Medicare and those are part of the conference, I think the leadership would also be willing to defend those issues in conference, as well.

I think that would be a better approach than a motion to instruct.

Ms. OAKAR. Further reserving the right to object, I am sensitive about the leadership. I have enormous respect for the leadership.

However, it is my understanding that those two items are not part of the House's agenda, and if they are not technically part of the agenda, I would like to see that they are carried forward just because I think that this would help and assist the leadership in terms of indicating that this is a House position.

Mr. PANETTA. If the gentlewoman will yield further, I do not think that there is any question but that the two issues the gentlewoman has posed here have been issues that the majority has stood for and would stand for in a conference as well, and it would not require a motion to instruct to get Democrats to stand for that position.

Ms. OAKAR. Further reserving the right to object, if they are not part of our bill going over there in terms of that, then because it has been dropped in the past, I do not know that this would take place.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to withdraw my reservation of objection, but raising it hopefully will be instructive in some sort of way, because I think a lot of Members would not vote for a budget that did not have those two items in it.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would indicate that the Speaker will name the conferees upon his return to the Chamber.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

(Mr. MICHEL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for this time to proceed in order that I might inquire of the distinguished majority leader of the program for the balance of this evening, how he sees the program for tomorrow and probably this weekend.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHEL. I am happy to yield to the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, we do not intend to have any further votes this evening. We will be meeting tomorrow and will be taking up the conference reports on the appropriation bills on transportation, military construction, energy and water. We will have some rules that need to be passed for further legislation, and additional conference reports may be in order. I would hope that we could finish the business at a reasonable time tomorrow.

We will meet at 12 on Saturday. We will be having conference reports primarily at that time, perhaps some additional legislation, but primarily conference reports.

We will meet at 2 on Sunday, and we will have the legislative appropriation bill on that day.

We will be meeting on Monday, probably at noon, and continuing to work.

On any of these days we might be taking up the conference report on reconciliation, the hope being that the Senate will finish sometime this evening, the conference will begin tomorrow, and that could come to the floor at any time.

Mr. MICHEL. May I inquire of our meeting time tomorrow?

Mr. GEPHARDT. 11 o'clock. And I will ask unanimous consent in a moment to ask that we meet tomorrow at 11.

Mr. MICHEL. Again, on Sunday, the meeting time will then be what?

Mr. GEPHARDT. 2 p.m.

Mr. MICHEL. I thank the distinguished majority leader.

HOUR OF MEETING ON TOMORROW

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 a.m. on tomorrow, Friday, October 19, 1990.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

ELIMINATING A CERTAIN REQUIREMENT FOR MINIMUM WAGE DETERMINATION FOR AMERICAN SAMOA

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate bill (S. 2930) to eliminate "substantial documentary evidence" requirement for minimum wage determination for American Samoa, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I reserve the right to object to have the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURPHY] explain what the bill is all about.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOODLING. Reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I will be very pleased to accommodate my colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the ranking member of the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. Speaker, I call this bill forth and have an amendment at the desk which would basically provide two provisions in the Fair Labor Standards Act to accommodate two separate groups of employers. It is very narrowly drafted.

The original Senate bill covers only the fishing-canning industry in the U.S. Territory of Samoa.

When we originally passed the Fair Labor Standards Act amendments last year, the intent was to continue to provide American Samoa with the right to have their minimum-wage level set by the Commission in the Department of Labor. We did not make that clear, and the Senate bill is addressing that particular matter.

The amendment which I have placed at the desk addresses the second group of employers, and that is in the computer industry where most of the employees are high-technology, high-paid, beyond minimum-wage levels, but we failed to exempt those high-technology, high-paid employees from the overtime provisions, and in order that we can provide that industry with the right to continue and grow in our American system, we would like to have those employees exempted from the overtime provisions.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding. I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the subcommittee, for bringing this bill up.

I would note for the record that the gentleman would pass by unanimous consent tonight a bill which I support and that the gentleman from Pennsylvania supports, that would provide technical corrections for two of the four mistakes, drafting mistakes, that were made in the passage of the Minimum Wage Act of 1989. These are two corrections out of four that ought to be made.

I think it is worthwhile to make these two corrections. I want to describe briefly these two corrections and then the two that still remain to be made which have been included in legislation, incidentally, offered by the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURPHY].

The first correction is to restore section 10 of the Minimum Wage Act of 1989, as drafted and as passed out of the committees of both Houses, but was deleted because of a drafting error that was discovered, I am told, on the way to the floor of the House.

Section 10, and I will just read from the committee report of it section by section. Section 10 says in the committee report, it directs the Secretary to "alter the regulations on the overtime exemption so as to permit certain professionals tc qualify as long as such professionals are compensated at a rate of six-and-one-half times the minimum wage rate."

I would note that was the intent of everyone in Congress in passing this bill, and it was only a drafting error that kept that from happening.

The second section is the bill that is on the Speaker's desk on American Samoa.

Section 4 stated very clearly, of the section by section in the committee report, "American Samoa," it says in section 4, "remains covered by these provisions," meaning by these prior-law exemptions, so it was clearly the intent of the Congress, both Houses and all Members of Congress as far as I know, to continue the American Samoa provision and to continue the protections and the exemptions of the computer professionals.

□ 1800

Those are being covered by this bill. Mr. Speaker, it is important for Members to understand that there were two other mistakes that were generally acknowledged to be mistakes that were made not by either gentleman from Pennsylvania, but were made by the drafting of the Minimum Wage Act of 1989 that are not included in this motion, but I would hope that we could include it at some point. One was in section 3.

Again, the words of the committee report in section 3, section 3 amends the enterprise test to exempt most small businesses from the FSLA. If their annual volume of sales or business done is less than $500,000. Nevertheless, the drafting of the 1989 act, drafted the small business exception which had been in effect since 1961 to totally remove the exemption from small business, not a result that anyone so far as I know had intended, and clearly not the intent of that act.

The second one was a section that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING] brought Members, and that would be to provide the training leg to agricultural workers who are neither migrant workers nor employed by farm labor contractors. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING] had a committed unanimously, by members of the Committee on Education and Labor to restore that exemption upon the next available vehicle. He is not choosing to offer that in this particular vehicle, but I would suggest that both, for small business exemption restoration of the 1961 law, and the training wage for agricultural workers, are two other mistakes that ought to be corrected in this session of Congress if we are going to deal with the Minimum Wage Act in an honest and forthright manner.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I agree with what has been said by both gentlemen. We are correcting a situation for Samoa. They have convinced me that it is necessary, and certainly we need to correct the situation in relationship to computers.

I want to emphasize what the gentleman from Texas said. I hope before we leave here we also will take care of the agriculture position in the small business provision.

Mr. Speaker, last year during the consideration of the Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1989, we overlooked two technical changes to the law. First, we changed the minimum wage law of American Samoa. Under the current law, special industrial committees determine minimum wage rates for specific industries in American Samoa. In addition, industries have to provide substantial documentation that they cannot pay the Federal minimum wage. I am told by the gentleman from American Samoa that publicizing the detailed affairs of the one industry in his district—tuna canning—would hurt the industry's foreign competitiveness. For that reason, I support removing the requirement in the FLSA that industries in American Samoa must provide substantial documentary evidence that they cannot pay the Federal minimum wage.

The second provision we are considering today was dropped at the last moment from the 1989 amendments. This provision would extend the professional exemption for overtime compensation under the Fair Labor Standards Act to computer systems analysts, programmers, software engineers and similarly skilled individuals. These employees are only included in this exemption if they are paid an hourly rate of pay that is at least 6½ times greater than the current Federal minimum wage. It is my understanding that these computer consultants are currently required to be paid overtime compensation even though they commonly earn between $50 and $100 an hour. Clearly, the Fair Labor Standards Act was not enacted in 1938 for this purpose.

I am pleased to join with my colleagues from the other side of the aisle in considering these two technical amendments to the Fair Labor Standards Act.

Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of S. 2930. Section 1 of this bill will correct an inadvertent error which was made last year in the minimum wage provisions applicable to American Samoa. Because of its developing economy and lower standard of living, the Federal minimum wage does not currently apply to American Samoa. Instead, special minimum wage rates are established periodically by industry committees designated by the Department of Labor.

Among other provisions, the 1989 Fair Labor Standards amendments removed Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands from the periodic wage review by industry committees, leaving only American Samoa subject to this procedure. In making the change, a burden of proof previously applicable to Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands was applied to American Samoa. This change requires the mainland minimum wage to be imposed unless there is "substantial documentary evidence" that an industry is unable to pay the mainland rate.

The effect of this error is contrary to the intent of Congress. The report of the House Education and Labor Committee on the 1989 amendments specifically states that "[t]he amendments made by this bill will have no effect on the present statutory standard for minimum wages in American Samoa" (House Report No. 101-260, page 22).

This oversight was not discovered until the Department of Labor and other interested parties began to prepare for the upcoming industry committee hearing. When the error was discovered, the Governor of American Samoa requested that the Department of the Interior seek congressional relief. The Interior Department has obtained approval from the Department of Labor and the Office of Management and Budget for repeal of the "substantial documentary evidence" requirement as it was applied to American Samoa.

On July 18, 1990, the Department of the Interior sent letters to the House and Senate recommending enactment of legislation to correct the change made last year. The letters stated that enactment of the legislation would be in accord with the program of the President. The bill under consideration would implement the recommendation of the administration.

The bill would not affect the long-standing statutory standard prohibiting increases in minimum wages which would result in a "substantial curtailment of employment". The bill would not require imposition of the mainland minimum wage when there is evidence that an industry is unable to pay the mainland rate due to competitive or economic conditions.

Unless this correction is enacted promptly, the industry committee hearing scheduled for January in American Samoa would depart from the historical statutory criteria for determining minimum wages in Samoa. Such a deviation could have serious adverse consequences for the territory's economy. This bill will enable industry committees to apply the broad economic criteria which have traditionally been used to determine minimum wages for American Samoa, which include maximization of employment and the ability of business in American Samoa to be competitive within the Pacific region.

Mr. Speaker, getting this legislation through two Houses of Congress has not been easy. Even though this bill must be returned to the Senate for further consideration, the addition of a provision supported by the computer industry has given this bill wide support in both Houses of Congress. With this broad support I am optimistic that there is still sufficient time for Congress to complete action on this bill.

Mr. Speaker, many of us have been working on passage of this bill and they deserve special recognition. The leadership provided by Chairman AUGUSTUS F. HAWKINS and Chairman AUSTIN J. MURPHY and their staffs have moved us a long way in a short period of time. Without their efforts, this bill would still be resting quietly in some corner of the House of Representatives. The support and assistance of Congressmen MERVYN M. DYMALLY, WILLIAM F. GOODLING, and STEVE BARTLETT have also been essential to passage. Also deserving of special recognition for their help are Senators EDWARD M. KENNEDY, JAMES A. MCCLURE, DANIEL K. INOUYE, and ORRIN G. HATCH.

The Governor of American Samoa, the Honorable Peter Tali Coleman, has also played an important role in the passage of this bill. His contacts and his work with the Republican Members of Congress have been essential.

The Secretary of Labor, the Honorable Elizabeth Dole, was kind enough to respond to requests from Members of Congress, Governor Coleman, and the tuna industry to postpone twice an industry committee hearing set for earlier this year. Without her action, our action on this bill would have been meaningless.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, there are several members of staffs and representatives of interested parties who have worked many long, hard hours to make this happen. Their professionalism deserves special recognition. From the House Committee on Education and Labor I thank Susan McGuire, James Riley, Richard Johnson, and Kristina Moore. From the Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources, Sarah Fox. For the tuna industry, their Washington representatives Bill Cable, Marcus Sisk, and Ellen Boyle. For the American Samoa Government, Michael S. Marino, Singleton B. McAllister, and William Geoghegan. And often overlooked, from my own congressional staff, Martin Yerick, Ali'imau H. (J.R.) Scanlan, Nancy Leong, Marvin Leach, Lago Pele, Kawen Young, and Merina Sunia.

In conclusion, I rise today in support of this bill because it keeps the people of Samoa and other Americans gainfully employed, and it supports America's dwindling tuna industry. Although Samoa is a small, distant territory, the impact of this legislation will be felt throughout the United States as Americans continue to enjoy the good-tasting, nutritious tuna processed and canned by American workers in American Samoa.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TRAXLER). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURPHY]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill as follows:

S. 2930

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the last sentence of subsection (b) of section 8 of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended (29 U.S.C. 208(b)) is amended by striking out the semicolon and the material following the semicolon and inserting a period in lieu thereof.

AMENDMENT IN THE NATURE OF A SUBSTITUTE OFFERED BY MR. MURPHY

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by Mr. MURPHY: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SECTION 1. AMERICAN SAMOA.

Section 8(b) (29 U.S.C. 208(b)) is amended by striking out "unless there is" and all that follows in that section and inserting in lieu thereof "unless there is evidence in the record which establishes that the industry, or a predominant portion thereof, is unable to pay that wage due to such economic and competitive conditions.".

SEC. 2. REGULATIONS CONCERNING CERTAIN EMPLOYEES.

Not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Labor shall promulgate regulations that permit computer systems analysts, computer programmers, software engineers, and other similarly skilled professional workers as defined in such regulations to qualify as exempt executive, administrative, or professional employees under section 13(a)(1) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (29 U.S.C. 213(a)(1)). Such regulations shall provide that if such employees are paid on an hourly basis they shall be exempt only if their hourly rate of pay is at least 6½ times greater than the applicable minimum wage rate under section 6 of such Act (29 U.S.C. 206).

Mr. MURPHY (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment in the nature of a substitute be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to offer an amendment which contains two technical amendments to the Fair Labor Standards Act. These revisions are narrowly drafted to deal with specific concerns of two groups of employers covered by the FLSA. Section 1 would remedy difficulties which have recently come to light regarding application of the act to employees and employers in American Samoa. Section 2 of the amendment clarifies application of the overtime exemption in section 13(a) of the FLSA to certain highly skilled professionals in the computer industry.

In American Samoa the Federal minimum wage is set by the Secretary of Labor based on the recommendation of special industry committees. This progress was previously used to set minimum wages in other U.S. territories. When H.R. 2710 was passed last year and became Public Law 101-157, the provisions in sections 5, 6, and 8 of the FLSA which relate to special minimum wages set by appointed industry committees in U.S. territories were amended to remove all references to Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands and "American Samoa" was referenced instead. This statutory change was intended to preserve the existing system of setting wages in American Samoa (House Report 101-260).

Notwithstanding the committee's stated intent, one significant change in the way wages would be set in Samoa did occur. In the past, industries in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands which sought wage rates lower than the mainland rate in section 6(a)(1) of the FLSA were required to produce "substantial documentary evidence, including pertinent unabridged profit and loss statements and balance sheets" demonstrating that they were unable to pay the regular minimum wage rate. A similar requirement was not imposed on industries in American Samoa. When the Congress substituted American Samoa in lieu of references to other U.S. territories in the industry committee provisions of the FLSA requirement to open the company books was applied to industries in Samoa.

This amendment is intended to soften this additional burden for private sector employers in American Samoa. While still requiring proof of economic hardship, the language of the amendment makes it clear that the evidence necessary to justify special wage orders relates to economic and competitive conditions on the island which effect the employment situation for Samoans.

Section 2 of my amendment would clarify the way the overtime exemption in section 13(a) of the FLSA applies to highly skilled computer industry professionals. A similar provision offered by Senator DURENBERGER was adopted by the Senate last year as an amendment to the minimum wage bill, S. 4. that amendment was accepted by the House in conference committee and was approved by the whole house as part of the conference report on H.R. 2 which was subsequently vetoed by President Bush.

This provision was later incorporated into H.R. 2710 when it was introduced last year. It was included as section 10 when that bill was reported by the Education and Labor Committee (House Report 101-160). Last minute concerns about the language of the provision arose on the day H.R. 2710 was brought to the House floor, November 1, 1990. With insufficient time to properly review these concerns and revise the amendment, it was dropped from the bill before it was put to a vote.

We have had plenty of time to consult with both industry, professionals and Members of this body, and we feel that we have drafted an amendment that adequately covers all concerns. I ask that my colleagues join with me in passing this amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time and I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the Senate bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURPHY].

The amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

TITLE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. MURPHY

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the title offered by Mr. MURPHY: Amend the title of the Senate bill so as to read: A bill to eliminate substantial documentary evidence requirement for minimum wage determination for American Samoa, and for other purposes.

The title amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on S. 2930, the Senate bill just passed.

The SPEAKER, pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was not objection.

NATIONAL FEDERATION OF THE BLIND DAY

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 667) to designate November 16, 1990, as "National Federation of the Blind Day," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so to yield to the sponsor of this joint resolution, my colleague and friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KANJORSKI].

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, as the author of House Joint Resolution 667, I rise today to honor the National Federation of the Blind, the Nation's largest organization of blind persons, on the 50th anniversary of its founding in Wilkes-Barre, PA. The National Federation of the Blind has spent half a century educating both the blind and those with sight about blindness. It is dedicated to promoting the message that, with proper training and opportunity, blindness need not be an obstacle to personal success.

It is such an exceptional organization, Mr. Speaker, that, in less than a week, more than half of the House joined me in sponsoring House Joint Resolution 667, a resolution to designate November 16, 1990, as National Federation of the Blind Day. The National Federation of the Blind has over 50,000 members nationwide, present in every State of the Union and most medium and large communities.

The National Federation of the Blind was founded in 1940 by Dr. Jacobus tenBroek, later a prominent scholar of constitutional law and legal history at the University of California at Berkeley. Dr. tenBroek was a pioneer, proving the fundamental concept that blindness is a normal characteristic, and does not limit a person's accomplishments any more than thousands of other conditions.

Dr. tenBroek became a world leader of the organized blind movement, and was a significant activist for 28 years. Blind himself, Dr. tenBroek is strong testimony to the fact that the blind are well able to make valuable contributions to society.

The foremost objective of the National Federation of the Blind is to provide blind individuals with the tools necessary to become productive members of their communities. It offers a wide variety of services, including publications, scholarships, and assistance to those who have experienced discrimination or a violation of their rights.

The National Federation of the Blind recently developed an employment program in cooperation with the Department of Labor. This program helps match qualified blind people with prospective employers. It also conducts career counseling seminars for blind job seekers, and sponsors employer education workshops for those interested in hiring blind persons.

Mr. Speaker, I could speak at much greater length about all of the other impressive contributions of the National Federation of the Blind to the lives of people throughout our Nation. I will only add that it is a critical organization that provides a forum for the blind to meet, share experiences, improve their own quality of life, and add to the quality of life of those around them.

Like those with sight, blind persons have become successful lawyers, scientists, farmers, athletes, elected officials, and parents. Indeed, they have been successful in almost any occupation they have chosen to pursue.

Mr. Speaker, the President of the United States has often spoken of the "thousand points of light" that make our world a brighter and better place in which to live. The National Federation of the Blind and its members nationwide are evidence that one need not have sight to "see" these points of light, or to become one.

I am proud, Mr. Speaker, to have the opportunity to introduce this resolution to honor this great organization and to designate November 16, 1990, as National Federation of the Blind Day.

Excerpts From the Federation at Fifty

(By Kenneth Jernigan)

If the engineers of 1800 had possessed complete drawings for a transistor radio (one that could be bought today for $10), they couldn't have built it, not even if they had had billions or trillions of dollars. They lacked the infrastructure—the tools, the tools to build the tools, and the tools to build those; the plastics, the machines to make the plastics, and the machines to make the machines; the skilled work force, the teachers to train the work force, and the teachers to train the teachers; the transportation network to assemble the materials, the vehicles to use the network, and the sources of supply. All of this is generally recognized, but it is far less well understood that what is true of material objects is also true of ideas and attitudes. In the absence of a supporting social infrastructure of knowledge and beliefs, a new idea simply cannot exist.

So far as I can tell, there are only three possible reasons for studying history—to get inspiration, to gain perspective, or to acquire a basis for predicting the future.

In 1965 Dr. Jacobus tenBroek, the founder and leader of our movement, spoke at our twenty-fifth banquet, reviewing the first quarter century and charting the road ahead. We were meeting in Washington, and more than a hundred members of Congress were present. I was master of ceremonies, and some of the rest of you were also there. Tonight (twenty-five years later) we celebrate our Golden Anniversary, and the time has once again come to take stock. Where are we, where have we been, and where are we going?

In a sense the history of our movement begins in the distant past—in the medieval guilds and brotherhoods of the blind in Europe, in the tentative stirrings of organization in China, and even earlier—but the National Federation of the Blind is essentially an American product. Its genesis is native. Although (as we all know) Dr. Jacobus tenBroek presided at the founding of the National Federation of the Blind in 1940 at Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, he had a teacher (Dr. Newel Perry), who laid the foundations and served as precursor. And Dr. Perry, in turn, had a teacher, Warring Wilkinson.

Most of what we know about Wilkinson is contained in the eulogy which Dr. tenBroek delivered at the time of Dr. Perry's death in 1961,[1] but our knowledge is sufficient to tell us that Wilkinson was a worthy teacher of the teacher of our founder. He was the first principal of the California School for the Deaf and Blind. He served in that capacity for forty-four years, from 1865 to 1909. He not only loved his students but also did what he could to move them toward the main channels of social and economic participation. Particularly, he saw the potential in young Perry, sending him from the California School for the Blind to Berkeley High to complete his secondary education. To do this Wilkinson (who was ahead of his time both in his understanding of education and the needs of the blind) had to overcome numerous obstacles.

I was fortunate enough to know Dr. Perry, meeting him when I move to California in 1953. He was then eighty, and he spent many hours with me reminiscing about what conditions for the blind were like when he was a boy. He came to the California School for the Blind when he was ten—"penniless, blind, his father dead, his home dissolved. Two years earlier he had lost his sight and nearly his life as the result of a case of poison oak, which caused his eyeballs to swell until they burst and which help him in a coma for a month." It was at the School, of course, that he first met Warring Wilkinson.

While going to high school (from which he graduated in 1892) he lived at the California School for the Blind. He also lived there while attending the University of California from 1892 to 1896. His admission to the University (as had been the case with high school) had to be secured over strong resistance. Again, Wilkinson was the pathfinder, young Perry his willing and anxious instrument. "Wilkinson's role in Perry's life as a youth can hardly be overestimated: father, teacher, guide, supporter—in Perry's own words, 'dear Governor.' "

After graduating from the University, Dr. Perry devoted himself to further education and to the search for an academic job. "He took graduate work at the University of California, meanwhile serving successively as an unpaid teaching fellow, a paid assistant, and finally as an instructor in the department of mathematics. In 1900, following a general custom of that day, he went to Europe to continue his studies. He did this for a time at the University of Zurich in Switzerland and then at the University of Munich in Germany. From the latter he secured in 1901 the degree of Doctor of Philosophy in Mathematics, with highest honors.

"He returned to the United States in 1902, landing in New York, where he was to remain until 1912. He had about eighty dollars in capital, a first-class and highly specialized education, and all of the physical, mental, and personal prerequisites for a productive career—except one, eyesight.

"During this period he supported himself precariously as a private coach of university mathematics students. He also applied himself to the search for a university position. He displayed the most relentless energy. He employed every imaginable technique. He wrote letters in profusion. In 1905 he wrote to 500 institutions of every size and character. He distributed his dissertation and his published article on mathematics. He haunted meetings of mathematicians. He visited his friends in the profession. He enlisted the aid of his teachers. He called on everybody and anybody having the remotest connection with his goal.

"Everywhere the outcome was the same. Only the form varied. Some expressed astonishment at what he had accomplished. Some expressed interest. One of these seemed genuine—he had a blind brother-in-law, he said, who was a whiz at math. Some showed indifference, now and then masked behind polite phrases. Some said there were no vacancies. Some said his application would be filed for future reference. One said ironically: 'For what—as an encouragement to men who labor under disadvantages and who may learn from it how much may be accomplished through resolution and industry?' Some averred that he probably could succeed in teaching at somebody else's college. Many said outright that they believed a blind person could not teach mathematics.

"Many of these rejections may, of course, have been perfectly proper. Many were not. Their authors candidly gave the reason as blindness."

Dr. Perry failed not because of lack of energy or qualification but because the necessary infrastructure of attitudes and beliefs did not exist to allow it to be otherwise—so he did not find a job in a university. Perhaps it was better for the blind (for those of us gathered here tonight) that he did not—but for him what pain! What absolute desolation and misery! And he had to face it alone—no family, no supporting organization of the blind—only himself and the bleak wall of continuing rejection year after year. He might have quit in despair. He might have become embittered. But he did not. Instead, he returned to California and settled down to build for the future. If he could not have first-class treatment for himself, he was absolutely determined that at least the next generation of the blind would not be denied.

He taught at the California School for the Blind from 1912 to 1947—and day after day, month after month, season after season he exhorted and indoctrinated, preached and prepared. He was building the necessary infrastructure of ideas and beliefs. Those who were his students went on to become his colleagues, and as the number grew, the faith was kept. There would be a state-wide organization of the blind in California. It did not happend until 1934, but when it came, it was built on a solid foundation. And there would also be a National Federation of the Blind—but not yet.

Dr. Perry was to that generation what Warring Wilkinson had been to him. In the words of Jacobus tenBroek, his most brilliant student and the man who would lead the blind in the founding of their national movement: "We were his students, his family, his intimates, his comrades on a thousand battlefronts of a social movement. We slept in his house, ate at his table, learned geometry at his desk, walked the streets interminably by his side, moved forward on the strength of his optimism and confidence."

Dr. tenBroek graduated from Berkeley High School in 1930 with, as he said, "plenty of ambition but no money." He was prepared to enter the University of California but was denied state aid to the blind, a program then newly instituted as a result of Dr. Perry's efforts in sponsoring a constitutional amendment which had been adopted by the voters of California in 1928. In Dr. tenBroek's words, "The reason for the denial was not that my need was not great. It was that I intended to pursue a higher education while I was being supported by the state. That was too much for the administrative officials. Almost without discussion, Dr. Perry immediately filled the gap. "Just as Warring Wilkinson had earlier done for him," said Dr. tenBroek, "he supplied me with tuition and living expenses out of his own pocket for a semester while we all fought to reverse the decision of the state aid officials.

"It was," Dr. tenBroek said, "ever thus with Dr. Perry. The key to his great influence with blind students was, first of all, the fact that he was blind and therefore understood their problems; and second, that he believed in them and made his faith manifest. He provided the only sure foundation of true rapport: knowledge on our part that he was genuinely interested in our welfare."

So the new generation came to maturity, and Jacobus tenBroek was to be its leader. Born in 1911 on the prairies of Alberta, Canada, he was blinded by an arrow in a childhood game and moved to California to enter the school for the blind. He went on to earn five academic degrees—from the University of California at Berkeley a bachelor's in 1934, a master's in 1935, a law degree in 1938, and a Doctorate in Jurisprudence in 1940; and from the Harvard Law School a Doctorate in Jurisprudence in 1947. There is no need for me to talk to this audience about Dr. tenBroek's brilliance—his learned articles and books, his chairmanship of the California Board of Social Welfare, his scholarly pre-eminence and national acclaim, his writings on constitutional law that are still the authoritative works in the field. Rather, I would speak of the man—the warm human being who fought for acceptance, led our movement, and served as my mentor and role model—the man who was my closest friend and spiritual father.

When Dr. tenBroek was first trying to get a teaching position in the 1930s, the climate of public opinion was better than it had been a generation earlier, but he faced many of the same problems which had confronted Dr. Perry—and sometimes with identical letters from the same institutions. "It was," he said, "almost as if a secretary had been set to copying Dr. Perry's file, only changing the signatures and the name of the addressee."

Here is what Dr. tenBroek wrote to Dr. Perry in March of 1940. At the time he was studying at Harvard:

"Last November a large midwestern university was looking for a man to teach public law. Having read my published articles but knowing nothing else about me, the head of the department in question wrote a letter to the University of California inquiring whether I would be available for the position. Cal. replied that I would and accompanied the answer with a considerable collection of supporting material. However, when the department head learned that I was blind, the deal was off although none of the competing applicants had as good a paper showing.

"This incident seems to me of particular interest because, although I have been refused other jobs, this was the first instance in which blindness could be traced as the sole explanation for rejection. Of course, in other cases blindness was also the determining factor, but the fact could not be demonstrated as well."

There were other letters and other rejections—but on June 8, 1940, Dr. tenBroek was able to write to Dr. Perry:

"We have justification for hanging out the flags and ringing the bells. I have been offered and have accepted a job at Chicago University Law School. The job pays $1,800, is denominated a half-time position, and lasts for only a year. But it is a job nevertheless. And the Harvard people, who exerted no end of pressure to get it for me, regard it as an excellent opportunity. The position is designated 'tutorial fellowship' and consists in supervising the research of the first- and second-year law students. It involves no actual classroom teaching, except possibly by way of an occasional fill-in job."

This was how Dr. tenBroek (the man who fifteen years later was to win the Woodrow Wilson Award for the outstanding book of the year in political science and who was always the most sought-after professor at the University of California) was to begin his teaching career. Yet, even today there are sighted people (and also some of the blind—people who ought to know better) who tell me that the blind are not victims of discrimination. Yes, the tenBroek job search was fifty years ago, but you know and I know that we have not yet come to first-class status and equal treatment in society. The framework of ideas and beliefs to make it possible, though long in the building, is still not complete. Warring Wilkinson, Newel Perry and his students, Jacobus tenBroek and the founders of our movement, and the Federationists of succeeding decades have worked year after year to improve the climate of public acceptance and make opportunity available for the blind, but the job is not yet finished. Each generation has built on the work of the one before it. Each has fought and hoped, dreamed and drudged for the one to follow—and also for the blind then alive.

What we have done must be seen in perspective; for no act of past (no gain or denial) is irrelevant, and no present behavior of ours can be divorced from tomorrow. We are close to freedom, and we must finish the journey.

1940 was notable for something else besides Dr. tenBroek's debut at the University of Chicago. It was also the year of the founding of this organization. With the passage of the Social Security Act in 1935 the federal government had supplanted the states in providing assistance to the blind. In 1939 Congress and the Social Security Board combined to pressure the states having the most forward looking programs (chief among them California but also Pennsylvania, Missouri, and Wisconsin) to repeal their progressive laws. This supplied the immediate impetus for the formation of the Federation, but of course the momentum had been building for a generation. The event occurred at Wilkes-Barre on November 15 and 16, 1940, coincident with the convention of the Pennsylvania Federation of the Blind.

In a letter to Dr. Perry dates November 19, 1940, Dr. tenBroek said in part: "The confab at Wilkes-Barre gave birth to an organization, the National Federation of the Blind—of which you, vicariously through me, are president. The long-range aims of the organization are the promotion of the economic and social welfare of the blind, and its immediate and specific aims are the sponsorship of the principle of Senate Bill 1766 and an amendment of the Social Security Act.

"'Seven states were represented at the organizational meeting—Minnesota, Wisconsin, Illinois, Missouri, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and California. We arrived in Wilkes-Barre in the middle of Friday after-noon* * *.

"On Saturday morning, while the Pennsylvania state meeting was going on, I had several black-of-the-scenes conversations with Pennsylvania leaders* * . In the afternoon * , we drew up a skeleton constitution, which we presented to a meeting of all of the delegates to the national meeting, beginning about four o'clock and ending about the same time twelve hours later * *. The meeting was interrupted at 5:30 in the afternoon long enough to give the other delegates a chance to eat dinner, and the Pennsylvania leader (Gayle Burlingame) and me a chance to appear on the local radio, where we lambasted hell out of the Social Security Board."

On January 4, 1941, Dr. tenBroek wrote to Dr. Perry concerning the detail of getting the new organization started. "With the National Federation of the Blind not yet two months old," he said, "its permanence is definitely assured. The factor guaranteeing that permanence is the closely knit nucleus composed of Minnesota, Pennsylvania, and California. We thre have now had enough experience with each other to know that we can make a go of it* * *. We can add to this trilogy the state of Wisconsin.

"I had a letter from Minnesota yesterday to the effect that they are ready to pay their assessment but that they wish assurance that Pennsylvania and California are also ready before they mail their check. I also had a letter from Pennsylvania stating that it is ready but wishes assurance that Minnesota and California are ready. I have written to both of these states requesting them to make out their checks, payable to the Treasurer of the National Federation, and to send them to me, with the stipulation that I shall not forward them to the Treasurer until I have the dues from each of the states of California, Pennsylvania, and Minnesota, Consequently, if California is ready, I suggest that you follow the same procedure* * *".

But the new president did not limit himself to procedural matters. The Federation immediately assumed its present-day role of working to improve the quality of life for the nation's blind. In a letter to Dr. Perry dated March 5, 1941, President tenBroek described the efforts he had been making to get changes in the administration of public assistance to the blind. Here, in part, is what he said:

"After a week in Washington I have more unsocial exchange to report than specific accomplishment * * *. Gradually working our way upward, Gayle Burlingame and I first presented our case to Jane Hoey, director of the Bureau of Public Assistance, and her associate, a lawyer named Casius. Next we went to Oscar Powell, executive director of the Social Security Board; and finally to Paul V. McNutt, administrator of the Federal Security Agency. Hoey is simply another social worker of the familiar type but with a higher salary than most. Casius has lost none of his qualities since Shakespeare described him, except that his wit has been sharpened by a little legal training. Powell is a very high calibre man with a fine sense of argumentative values, a considerable store of good nature, and unusual perception. He simply is not a believer in our fundamental assumptions. McNutt, on the other hand, is a lesser Hitler by disposition and makes our California social workers look like angels by comparison.

"Hoey and Powell had argued that the new ruling of the Board did not necessarily result in a reduction of a recipient's grant by the amount of his earnings or other income. McNutt took the position that it did and, moreover, that it should. 'Are you saying to us,' I asked McNutt, 'that blind people should have their grants reduced no matter how small their private income and no matter how great their actual need?' His answer was that he was saying precisely that. I formulated the question in several other ways, only to get the same reply. I can't say that I wasn't glad to get this official declaration from McNutt since it provides us with an official declaration by the highest administrator of them all that ought to be of immense propagandistic value to us. Moreover, McNutt's conduct during the conference has provided us with the most perfect example of the arbitrary and tyrannical methods of the Board that we could hope to have.

"In the remaining week that I shall stay in Washington, we shall attempt to carry our appeal to the last administrative step. Senator Downey of California and Senator Hughes of Delaware are attempting to secure for us appointments with Mrs. and President Roosevelt.

"As things stand, the only course open to the blind of California is to urge the legislature to retain the blind aid act in its present form and tell the federal government to go to hell. Even if we can get a favorable amendment to the Social Security Act, it certainly will not be until after the California legislature adjourns."

This is what Dr. tenBroek wrote in 1941, and although we have often said in this organization that the first task which the Federation faced after its founding was to help the blind of the nation get enough money for bare survival, I sometimes wonder if we have made the point with sufficient clarity to convey the desperation of it. The report which was prepared following the 1941 convention of the Federation in Milwaukee says in part:

"Mr. Stephen Stanislevic of New York City reported as follows: 'The blind population of New York State is roughly estimated at 13,000. Of these, more than half are in New York City. A very small number of our people, a few hundred in all, are at present employed in sheltered industries, on government projects, at newsstands, or in miscellaneous enterprises. The majority depend for sustenance either upon private bounty or upon Social Security grants. The average monthly grant per individual is $27 in New York City and $23 in the up-state counties. This is the paltry pittance which the wealthiest state in our Union sees fit to dole out to those of its citizens who are blind.'

"Mr. Hugh McGuire explained that in Indiana there are approximately 2,600 blind and that between 2,200 and 2,300 are drawing assistance with the monthly average of $20."

That was forty-nine years ago, and much has happened in the interim. Not that it happened by chance, of course. Mostly we made it happen. How many times since 1940 has the National Federation of the Blind led the way in social reform in this country, not only for the blind but also for others? To mention only three examples, we pioneered exempt earnings for the recipients of public assistance; we pioneered fair hearing procedures in rehabilitation and other public programs; and we pioneered jobs for the disabled in government service.

As I have already said, our first task as an organization was to initiate programs to enable the blind get enough to eat. In 1940 and the decades immediately following, most of the blind of this country were desperately poor, and there were almost no government programs to help. When people are hungry, little else matters. Later (although many of us were still in poverty—and, for that matter, are now) we worked on rehabilitation and employment, and today we emphasize civil rights and equal participation in society. But essentially our role is what it has always been—seeing that blind people get equal treatment and a fair shake.

It is not only in basics but also in detail that our operation today is often much the same as it was in past decades. Let me give you a rather specialized example. I have made a lot of banquet speeches at these conventions, and certain key ideas are central to them all. I can sum up the essentials in a few sentences. The real problem of blindness is not the blindness itself but what the members of the general public think about it. Since the agencies doing work with the blind are part of that general public, they are likely to possess the same misconceptions that are held by the broader society. The blind, too, are part of that broader society, and if we are not careful, we will accept the public view of our limitations and thus do much to make those limitations a reality. The blind are not psychologically or mentally different from the sighted. We are neither especially blessed nor especially cursed. We need jobs, opportunity, social acceptance, and equal treatment—not pity and custody. Only those elected by the blind can speak for the blind. This is not only a prime requisite of democracy but also the only way we can ever achieve first-class status.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, after the eloquent remarks by that wonderful organization, "The Federation at Fifty," I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

H.J. RES. 667

Whereas the National Federation of the Blind was established in Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, on November 16, 1940;

Whereas the Federation is the largest organization for blind people in the United States;

Whereas the Federation was founded to provide a sense of security, equality, and opportunity, and an outlet for self-expression for the blind;

Whereas the Federation has over 50,000 members, national chapters in every State and the District of Columbia, and local chapters in almost every community;

Whereas the founders of the Federation, who are themselves blind, have been instrumental in instilling hope and self-assurance in the blind and in improving the public image of blind people;

Whereas programs conducted by the Federation assist the blind in obtaining and performing jobs and becoming productive members of society; and

Whereas the many functions, activities, and programs of the Federation have provided significant benefits to the blind and to the Nation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That November 16, 1990, is designated as "National Federation of the Blind Day", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling on the people of the United States to observe the day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

MAINE ACADIAN CULTURE PRESERVATION ACT

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate bill (S. 1756) to provide for the preservation and interpretation of sites associated with Acadian culture in the State of Maine, with Senate amendments to the House amendment, and to concur in Senate amendments numbered 1, 3, 5 and 6, and disagree to amendments numbered 2 and 4.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments to the House amendment, as follows:

Senate amendments to House amendment:

Page 3, line 5, of the House engrossed amendment, after "history,", insert "historic preservation,".

Page 4, line 23, of the House engrossed amendment, strike out "1 year" and insert: "6 months".

Page 4, line 24, of the House engrossed amendment, strike out "Secretary, in consultation with the Commission," and insert: "Secretary".

Page 6, lines 4 and 5, of the House engrossed amendment, strike out "after completion of the study required by section 5," and insert: "after consultation with the Commission,".

Page 6, line 11, of the House engrossed amendment, strike out "develop and operate" and insert: "develop, operate, and maintain".

Page 6, line 12, of the House engrossed amendment, strike out "programs" and insert: "to develop and operate programs".

Mr. VENTO (during the reading) Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendments to the House amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TRAXLER). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the initial request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object only to allow the gentleman to briefly explain what this does, and I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, the Senate amended S. 1756. Several of the changes are acceptable to the House. Two are not. One amendment on which we have disagreement specifies that the study on Acadian culture would be mandated to be completed in 6 months time instead of a year. While I very much want to see the study completed as quickly as possible, I do not believe that such a deadline for the National Park Service is realistic and believe that it should be returned to 1 year.

The Senate also changed the bill so that the Acadian Culture Center would be established after consultation with the commission, instead of after completion of the study. This comprehensive study of Acadian culture in Maine is intended to survey and evaluate surviving sites and structures and to provide the basis for selection of the best location for the Maine Acadian Culture Center. For this reason, I believe that the study needs to be completed before that decision, and subsequent development of the Acadian Center, is completed.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that this is a bill previously passed by the House with some amendments by the Senate.

I continue to have some concerns with the bill. I would note that the administration continues to oppose the bill, but I am not going to object.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the amendments to S. 1756, just considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

AMERICANS ARE WHAT WE ARE BECAUSE OF PEOPLE LIKE JOHN CONNORS

(Mr. DORNAN of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, Americans are what we are because of people like John Connors. John Connors, Mr. Speaker, is a young American marine, a trained Navy SEAL, who gave his life for his country, for freedom in Panama, and to protect his fellow squad members, on the night of December 19, 1989. He was killed at the International Airport, which I have flown in and out of many times.

This article about John Connors is in the current Reader's Digest. It was sent to me by my oldest daughter, Robin. John looks so much like one of my sons, Mark, that it is stunning. A handsome young 25-year-old marine lieutenant, the prime of life, who was under medical treatment right here at Walter Reed Hospital for a viral infection that he had gotten training in Brazil, and he left the hospital to go down to Panama, even though he was ill, to fight with his men.

At his funeral at St. Agnes Church, with 1,000 people in attendance, his Navy SEAL commander said, "He fulfilled every obligation our country asked of him. We are what we are because of men like John Connors."

Mr. Speaker, I include the article for the RECORD.

MEASURE OF A MAN—AMERICANS ARE WHAT WE ARE BECAUSE OF PEOPLE LIKE JOHN CONNORS

(By Malcolm McConnell)

Lieutenants Mike Phillips and John Connors, 25, sat in the humid darkness of the beach at Howard Air Force Base on December 19, 1989, watching the distant lights of Panama City sparkle in the water. Around them, men in camouflage fatigues and jungle boots rested among rucksacks and stacked weapons. They were quiet, anxious to be under way.

Phillips noted the size of Connors's pack. He was lugging a combination rifle/grenade launcher, reserve ammunition, medical supplies and a radio. "How much does all that stuff weigh?

Connors shrugged. "About a hundred pounds, I guess."

Phillips snorted, "You planning to run with the load?"

"Try and catch me."

The two grinned. For a moment they were young athletes again, ready to compete. They had been together in the Persian Gulf and for months of jungle training in Brazil. Their growing friendship had provided a refuge from the heat, insects and pounding rain. But tonight was no exercise. They were about to go into combat.

"John," Phillips began, his voice low, "if I—if I get pinned down out there . . ."

"Yeah, Don't worry, Mike," John said quickly. "I'll cover you."

Joan Connors returned to the family's brick home in Arlington, Mass., after Christmas shopping. As she wrapped presents for her husband, Joe, and their five grown children, she felt a pang that John, their youngest, would not be home for Christmas. He had recently called from Walter Reed Army Medical Center in Washington, D.C., where he was undergoing treatment for a parasitic disease he had contracted in Brazil.

"Ma," John had said, "I don't want you and Dad getting all concerned about this." He assured her that daily intravenous medication would prevent the parasite from attacking internal organs, and he promised to send her detailed information

"Say hello to everybody," he had said. "Give Duke a hug."

Joan smiled at the living-room photo of John grinning over his puppy, Duke. That skinny kid had filled out to 170 pounds of muscle, exquisitely trained for combat.

Every photo of John showed that permanent grin of his. But there was also a restless intelligence in his blue eyes. His love of learning had resulted in a four-year scholarship to prestigious Boston College High School and a chemical engineering degree from Worcester Polytechnic Institute. He also took a scuba course and a strenuous body-building program as part of the Naval ROTC program. When he completed his duty-preference form, Connors stated: "My sole desire is to become a SEAL."

The SEALs (named for their Sea-Air-Land warfare capabilities) are the Navy's elite commandos, specializing in missions behind enemy lines. Among military special-operations units, the SEALS are considered the toughest, smartest and best disciplined.

Joan recalled evenings when John had returned from an 11-hour shift on his summer construction job. After a quick meal he somehow found energy to run ten miles and cycle another 20.

With all this preparation, the family had hoped John would do well in the SEAL training program at Coronado, Calif. But there were no guarantees. Trainees swam for hours in cold Pacific waters; they ran nightmare obstacle courses. It was a season in purgatory, designed to transform each man into a team player, performing well beyond his limits.

Joan remembered her own amazement, at John's SEAL graduation in 1988, that almost two-thirds of his class had not graduated. They had lacked John's mental toughness and drive.

These very qualities sometimes worried his mother. At least, with his medical treatment ending, John would be home for New Year's.

On Monday, December 18, at the U.S. Naval Amphibious Base near Norfolk, Va., SEAL Team Four's Commander Tom McGrath was busy assembling his forces. McGrath and several of his platoons, bone tired from a training session in Florida, had been looking forward to holidays with their families. But now they had orders.

Panama's dictator Manuel Antonio Noriega was resisting U.S. efforts for his arrest on drug-trafficking and racketeering charges. He had brutally rejected a popular election that would have toppled him. He had himself named "Maximum Leader" and proclaimed a "state of war" against America. On Saturday, his troops murdered Marine Lt. Robert Paz on the streets of Panama City, then abducted and savagely beat a Navy lieutenant and terrorized his wife. Now Noreiga's thugs were roaming the streets with Cuban-supplied weapons.

On Sunday, President Bush had ordered U.S. armed forces to execute a full-scale intervention in Panama. McGrath's men were preparing to go. Their objective: Paitilla Airfield on the seafront of Panama City, where Noriega based his private Lear Jet. Prevent Noriega's Panamanian Defense Forces (PDF) from using the airport was a tactical necessity.

As McGrath worked at his desk, an athletic young man appeared in the doorway, grinning widely. "Good morning, sir," John Connors said. "It looks like something's going down."

McGrath push his chair back. "Exactly what are you doing here?" He knew Connors had completed only half his medical treatment and had to get back to the hospital.

"I figured the team might need me," Connors said simply.

McGrath paused. He thought of the Persian Gulf, when Connors's platoon had practiced raiding Iranian positions by "fast-roping" from helicopters onto a Navy barge. The SEALs plummeted 50 feet on thick ropes, braking at the last moment with gloved hands. Connors landed hard and limped away. He didn't complain, but when it came time to climb the narrow ladder back to the hovering chopper, his leg would not support him. He had cracked a bone. So he simply hauled himself up hand-over-hand.

No question about it: Connors was one of the team's strongest officers, a leader who brought out excellence in others. Besides, he spoke fluent Spanish. But skipping treatment could be a breach of the mission's security.

Finally, McGrath spoke. "If you can get yourself cleared from the hospital without arousing suspicion, then I can use you. If you can't, I want you at Walter Reed before anyone asks where you are."

Half an hour later, Connors was back, still grinning. "I'm off medical orders, sir." He had told doctors there was a family emergency.

"Lieutenant," said McGrath, "go find your platoon."

The rubber raiding boats were secured together at a rallying point two miles off Paitilla. The SEALs gazed at the Glittering Panama City skyline. It looked like a normal night in the handsome tropical city. Yet the largest U.S. military operation since the Vietnam War was about to begin. Airborne troops from bases in America, as well as ground and helicopter forces stationed in the Canal Zone, would attack 27 targets across Panama at precisely 1 a.m.: H-Hour.

The men on the boats were somber. They knew Paitilla's runway, taxi strips and grassy margins were devoid of cover. Until they gained control of the airport, they would be badly exposed to enemy fire.

Worse, under the rules of engagement, for this operation—the most stringent ever imposed on U.S. forces—they were forbidden to use covering fire before they advanced. To avoid harming civilians, the SEALs could fire only in self-defense. They would have to rely on speed—and sheer audacity.

The command radio crackled. Panamanian forces had unexpectedly attacked U.S. troops in the Canal Zone. The task-force commander was advancing H-Hour 15 minutes, to 12:45 a.m. Immediately, the SEALs were under way.

Connor's boat ground ashore on the hard mud by the end of the runway, and his platoon sprawled in the low grass, weapons ready, searching for PDF guards. People were moving under the control tower's dome of yellow light, but the south end of the airport was deserted.

The SEALs advanced up the runway toward the hangars, maneuvering precisely. One squad crouched while another dashed ahead, their cleated boots muffled by the grass. From their left came a steady roar punctuated by the boom of tank guns and howitzers. The assault on Noriega's headquarters and the PDF barracks at Fort Amador had begun. Gaudy fountains of tracers wobbled above the city skyline. The SEALs' fire-support gunship whined overhead, unlighted—an unseen but reassuring presence.

While Connors's Bravo platoon prepared to block the runway with some of the light planes lining the taxi strip, Phillips's Golf platoon dashed toward the open PDF hangar that housed Noriega's Lear Jet.

Suddenly, Phillips heard a voice inside shout: "Pónganse en posición. Prepárense para disparar." ("Take positions. Prepare to fire.")

Just as Phillips yelled a warning, the PDF opened up. The Panamanians had timed their ambush well, hitting a squad from the Golf platoon as it sprinted from the cover of parked planes. PDF troops blasted away with AK-47s, raking the SEALs only 30 yards away. Seven of the eight-man squad fell.

Phillips rushed his men forward, firing at the PDF muzzle flashes. As he approached, he saw the extent of the devastation.

"Heavy wounded!" he shouted into his radio. "Bravo, get up here!"

He saw that the gunship could not hit PDF positions without endangering the downed men close to the hangar. Phillips' squad, together with Bravo, would have to gain fire superiority to evacuate the wounded. He spread his men and began shooting. Moments after calling for reinforcements, he heard Connors's squad pounding up. As promised, his friend was there to cover him.

Connors did not hesitate. Using hand signals, he arrayed his men in a line formation and led them directly toward the PDF. Phillips could see Connors's face. His eyes were focused with absolute determination. His intensity was controlled. He showed no fear.

Bullets struck Connors's web gear and ammunition pouches with sledgehammer force. But he regained his stride and ran toward the enemy, firing as he advanced.

The maneuver worked. By drawing attention away from the wounded, Connors and his squad had given the medics time to move in.

But now the PDF volley intensified. The hangar's cinder-block walls offered the Panamanians solid protection, and their weapons swept the parking apron, throwing up chunks of asphalt.

Lying on the tarmac, Connors saw that they were making little progress against the enemy. He had a grenade launcher, but it was difficult to use from his prone position. It was time to up the ante. Now!

Phillips saw Connors rise to one knee and level his grenade launcher at the hangar. From the rear, Phillips heard the sound of reinforcements. For an instant, the scene seemed to freeze. Then a heavy-caliber automatic weapon blasted. Connors flew backward in the darkness. He'd been hit squarely in the chest.

Phillips ran to his friend and dragged him out of the line of fire. Other SEALs helped bundle Connors to the medics' triage point. They cut away his bullet-torn pack and ripped open his shirt while a corpsman tried valiantly to resuscitate him. The SEALs watched silently as Connor's lips moved in a mumbled prayer. Then he was gone.

Behind Phillips, the sounds of combat rose and fell in echoing waves. Reluctantly, he turned away and ran back to the fighting.

SEAL squad were now pounding the hangar with rockets, grenades and machine guns. A rocket struck Noriega's Lear Jet, disabling it.

Once the perimeter was secured, Mike Phillips rushed back to the triage point. Torpedoman's Mate Second Class Ike Rodriguez lay mortally wounded. Nearby, three dead SEALs—Connors, Boatswains Mate First Class Chris Tilghman and Engineman Chief Don McFaul—lay together on the grass. In the chalky glare of aerial flares now illuminating the battlefield, the young men's faces were smooth, freed of pain, as if they were sleeping.

Two Navy officers and a priest arrived at the Connors home on Wednesday. There had to be some mistake, Joan told them. John couldn't be in Panama. He was at Walter Reed. The officers explained that John had suspended treatment to go into combat with his men. That he had exhibited bravery on the battlefield. That he had died honorably in the service of his country.

After the men left, the Connors family sat together in the kitchen. Slowly, the realization of what their son had done took hold. "That was typical of John," Joe Connors finally said. "He was there when people needed him."

The next day, neither Joe nor Joan could face all the reporters. John Sheehan, John's best friend, offered to talk to them.

Standing on the icy front porch, Sheehan verified to one newspaper reporter that John was an honor student, had studied abroad, spoke several languages. He was considered one of the finest men his town had ever produced. The young woman rapidly jotted notes. Finally, she looked up, puzzled.

"He had overseas experience, a college degree. He could have found a good job and made a lot of money . . ." Her voice trailed off. "I don't understand. Why did he want to be a SEAL?"

Sheehan was stunned by the question. Clearly, to some of the reporter's generation, money and a prestigious job were the only measures of a life. But to others, like John Connors, they were not the only measures, or even the best ones. How could he convey John Connors's values—honor, loyalty, sacrifice—to this smart reporter? He could only say, "If you have to ask, you'll never know the answer."

Over 1,000 people jammed St. Agnes Church for the funeral of John Patrick Connors, age 25, filling every pew and standing quietly in the aisles.

The night before, the Connors family had been called by Edurado Vallarino, the new Panamanian ambassador to the United Nations. He asked to attend John's funeral, as a gesture of respect from the new democracy for which John had fought.

After the psalms and the homily were read and the color guard carefully removed the flag from the coffin, Navy SEAL Lt. Cmdr. William Dempsey summarized what so many in the church felt. "He fulfilled every obligation our country asked of him," he said. "We are what we are because of men like John."

There is a postscript to this story. On the cold morning of February 7, 1990, Mike Phillips' wife, Audrey, gave birth to their first child, a boy. To honor a beloved friend, they named the baby Connor.

ONE DODGE AIRBAG, TWO LIVES SAVED

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GEPHARDT). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DORNAN of California. I thank the Speaker, and I think you are going to enjoy what I have to show here, so I hope you will take a look at it when you get back to your office after being relieved by the able chairlady Speaker who is in the chair at this moment.

Madam Speaker, I was stunned in the ongoing battle in this country between the forces of pro-abortion and pro-life that Life magazine, which was the No. 1 magazine in America when I was growing up in my youth, has centerfold, to use the term that is used in some of the soft pornography magazines. Life magazine has a centerfold that is absolutely beautiful.

First of all, you do not get a prettier cover than this month's the month of October. It is the lovely Duchess of York with her beautiful little redhaired, blue-eyed second baby or second little daughter. It looks like most of my five, all redheads with blue eyes, with one handsome blue-eyed son.

Here is the centerfold. I am sorry that the cameras cannot come in closer. I have hosted a television show for the better part of a decade. I would always call for my camera crew to bring the camera in close. I am sure they will cooperate in the first-class camera facilities that we have in the control room downstairs, one story down, and do the best they can.

But here is a picture of a very pregnant lady, lovely looking lady, her name is Susan Reed.

Believe it or not, this is an ad for Dodge automobiles. Lee Iacocca himself must have approved this ad because I have this ad from Newsweek magazine in single form and here is one from this week's Time, Newsweek. But here is the double-page centerfold.

It says, "One Dodge airbag, two lives saved." It happened on June 11, 1990, at 7:00 a.m. in the morning. Susan Reed was on her way to work in the morning when a drunk driver crashed into Susan's 1990 Dodge Spirit. Both cars were totally destroyed. But Mrs. Reed was wearing her lap-shoulder belt and the Dodge Spirit was equipped with a driver's airbag. It worked, it save her life. It also saved another life, her baby's life.

You see, Susan was 7½ months pregnant at the time of the accident. We are glad she had the Dodge airbag because on August 5, just a couple of months ago, folks, she gave birth to a 9-pound, 6-ounce healthy baby boy named Michael Joseph.

We wish them both well. There is Susan and her beautiful little son Michael.

Guess what, folks, Michael was there in that womb. He was not an abcessed tooth or an abcessed appendix. This is a human being, before birth.

We have abortion allowed in our country up through all 9 months. No doctor in 17 years, almost 18 on January 22, has ever been brought before the bar of justice for performing an abortion on a child in the mother's womb, no matter what month the mother was in.

So here is Susan in her 7th month. She has an accident. Chrysler, one of our biggest corporations—and I hope Lee Iacocca is not going to jerk the ad because Molly Yard, the Sherman tank lays seige to Chrysler headquarters and demands they take this pro-life ad out of all the magazines. But this says it all.

I would like to show you something else.

Look at the little princess, that cute little baby. As much a baby as little Michael is inside, Michael Joseph.

Now I would like to show you something else.

I was over at my aunt's house the other night, Mrs. Flo Haley, the wife of the late great Jack Haley, the Tin Man in the Wizard of Oz. I noticed something on the bed of her daughter who was staying with here because my aunt Flo had a fall recently. So her daughter Gloria Haley Parnassas was staying with her.

Gloria, like a lot of adults, likes an occasional stuffed animal. This one was particulary attractive. Guess what her nickname for him was? Michael. I would call him Snowball, myself. Look at that cute little seal.

Guess what? We protect these by law passed in the U.S. Congress. Those big Canadian guys, they cannot bop this little guy on the head. But guess what, folks, we do not protect these little fetuses in the mother's womb. One of my staffers who gave this to me called him what? Michael, after her baby Michael Walsh that was born a couple of months ago. We protect this, and we kill this in the mother's womb.

This is an anthropomorphic model of a 3-month fetus, a 3-month fetus whose heart has been beating since day 18.

Madam Speaker, we have our priorities all screwed up in this great United States of America.

Madam Speaker, by way of illustrating just how badly our priorities are twisted upside down, please read this story about one of America's richest abortionists, that is, baby destroyers. And please check the title.

WHY ABORTIONIST EDWARD ALLRED THINKS THERE ARE TOO MANY HISPANICS IN SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

(By Carmen Rodriguez)

LOS ANGELES.—One day two years ago, Anna Madrid, a 46-year-old mother of four in Wilmington, California, noticed something strange on the Spanish-language television station she watches. There was an almost continuous stream of commercials advertising abortion facilities, something she never saw on the "Anglo" TV stations.

The Spanish-language TV guide also featured numerous ads for abortion. And, when she thought about it, most of the major abortion clinics where police battled Operation Rescue picketers were located in predominantly Hispanic neighborhoods.

"It began to dawn on me that the abortionists are targeting the Hispanic community," said Madrid, who was born in Mexico but raised in southern California. "I never really understood just how racist the entire abortion industry is."

Madrid is part of a growing movement among Hispanics, both in California and across the U.S., that is taking a greater lead in the legal and public relations battle against abortion. Long ignored in the heated controversy, as "Anglo" lawyers and celebrities argued over abortion, Hispanics of all religious persuasions are increasingly worried that the abortion industry has specifically targeted them and other minority groups for "population control."

Hispanics are particularly enraged over the statements by Dr. Edward Campbell Allred, the Long Beach physician who runs more than a dozen abortion clinics in southern California, many of them in Hispanic neighborhoods. In a copyrighted story in the San Diego Union newspaper, Allred was frank about some of the reasons why he opened abortion clinics.

"Population control is too important to be stopped by some right-wing pro-life types." Allred told the newspaper. "Take the new influx of Hispanic immigrants. Their lack of respect for democracy and social order is frightening. I hope I can do something to stem that tide; I'd set up a clinic in Mexico for free if I could. Maybe one in Calexico would help. The survival of our society could be at stake."

Hispanic leaders believe that Allred, and other pro-abortion organizations such as Planned Parenthood, seek to use abortion for the same eugenic purposes—"improving" the species by controlling the population of "less fit" ethnic groups—conceived by Nazi doctors. The Nazis supported abortion early on as a method of "population control" against so-called non-Aryan races. The Hispanic leaders point to statements by Planned Parenthood founder Margaret Sanger, who in 1919 declared "more children from the fit, less from the unfit" as the purpose behind Planned Parenthood and used as the motto for her newsletter masthead, "To create a race of thoroughbreds."

In her day, Hispanic leaders say, Sanger, like Dr. Allred, was very concerned with the rising number of "undesirable" immigrants and their high birth rates. Sanger was particularly worried about Jews and Italians; Dr. Allred about Mexicans. In her 1922 book, Pivot of Civilization, Sanger wrote that U.S. organized charities were the "surest sign that our civilization has bred, is breeding and is perpetuating constantly increasing numbers of defectives, delinquents, and dependents" and emphasized that the American public should realize "the terrific cost to the community of this dead weight of human waste."

Dr. Allred shares, Hispanic leaders say, Sanger's point of view.

"The Aid to Families with Dependent Children program is the worse boondoggle ever created," he told the San Diego Union. "When a sullen black woman of 17 or 18 can decide to have a baby and get welfare and food stamps and become a burden to all of us, it's time to stop."

As a result of these and other statements Allred has made, Allred's home, in the prestigious Naples area of Long Beach, has been the frequent target for picketing by black civil rights groups and religious organizations.

Now, for the first time, Hispanics have begun to organize a political movement to oppose what they see as an organized attempt to limit the Hispanic population through widespread promotion of abortion. A coalition of Hispanic groups throughout the U.S. has formed Hispanics for Life, an organization dedicated to protesting abortion in general and particularly as a method of limiting Hispanic population growth. Another Hispanic organization. Concilio Pro-Vida de California, predicted that the substantial political clout of Hispanics in California will be felt at election time.

"A great emphasis will be the identification of pro-life voters in the Hispanic communities throughout California," said Sylvia Garcia, a spokesperson for Concilio Pro-Vida. "If we are successful in registering and turning out a large contingent of Hispanic supporters at the polls, we may be able to elect a record number of pro-life officials in California."

But Hispanics hope to have an impact beyond just the ballot box. A group of Hispanics for Life leaders picketed the U.S. Court House in San Diego May 5, to protest the use of police to brutalize nonviolent anti-abortion protesters.

Hispanic leaders add that pro-abortion groups like Planned Parenthood have a tremendous fear of a Hispanic and African-American anti-abortion movement, largely because the pro-abortion groups know that they are vulnerable to charges of elitist racism.

Pro-abortion rallies and marches are, said one Hispanic leader, "embarrassingly white and upper-class," even though the pro-abortion industry "pretends it is doing us a favor by killing our children."

A group of Hispanics for Life and other Hispanic human rights organizations in the South Bay and Inland Empire areas conducted legal pickets May 26 of two Southern California businessmen who rent office space to an Allred clinic.

"Hispanics need to know that voting for a pro-abortion candidate, even a Hispanic one, is a vote for dead Hispanic babies and fewer Hispanics in this country," said Enriquez. "The murderous racism of the abortion industry has to be exposed."

TRIBUTE TO HON. CHARLES P. FARNSLEY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAZZOLI] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Madam Speaker, I rise today to note and celebrate the life and achievements of a former Kentucky State representative, a former mayor of Louisville—from 1948 to 1953—and a former colleague in the House—from 1965 to 1967—representing the Third District of Kentucky: Charles P. Farnsley, who died this past June 19.

The Farnsley family has deep roots in the Louisville community. Charles Farnsley's great-great-grandfather started things off, arriving in southwest Jefferson County from Pittsburgh in 1782 on a flatboat with nothing more than flour to sell. James Farnsley settled in an area known as Shively, still a thriving community in Jefferson County.

Charles himself was born in Louisville in 1907. His father, Burrel Farnsley, was an eminent attorney and later a Jefferson County ciricut court judge. Charley's mother, Anna May Peaslee, was the daughter of Charles Peaslee, founder of Peaslee-Gaulbert Paint and Varnish Co., a successful business in Jefferson County.

During Charley's education at Male High School and the University of Louisville, he displayed early on an interest in politics and public service that would serve him in his later years.

Charley began his public service in the Kentucky State Legislature during the 1930's, a time when the Nation was deep in depression and when most Kentuckians were enrolled in the university of hard knocks, not the University of Louisville, or the University of Kentucky. But, it was in Frankfort in that setting that Charley put into practice his beliefs that government exists to serve the people, not the other way around. This is a Jeffersonian concept and Jefferson was a molding force on young Charley Farnsley.

Charley studied Jefferson and exposed himself to an eclectic mixture of political scientists, historians and both western and eastern philosophy.

In 1948, Louisville's mayor, E. Leland Taylor, suddenly died in his office, and, like a super nova, Charley Farnsley emerged from a pack of candidates to win the special election. It was a most propitious decision for Louisville residents.

Madam Speaker, for Louisville, KY, and many cities across the Nation, the period after World War II was a time of great social change. Louisville emerged from the war as a leading industrial and manufacturing city but found itself not fully prepared to address the new governmental, educational, transportation, and social needs attendant to this new status.

That is when Charles Farnsley stepped in.

Charley from the start caught the fancy of the citizens of Louisville and governmental observers across the Nation as an innovative, imaginative, progressive, and somewhat iconoclastic mayor.

For example, the November 1949 edition of Reader's Digest carried a profile of Mayor Farnsley entitled, "Here's a Mayor Who Knows How to Get Things Done".

Charley did not govern with an iron fist, but with a iron ear, so to speak.

Mayor Farnsley listened carefully to the people. He initiated beef sessions, forums at which anyone could come to Louisville City Hall and complain—or compliment—him and his city administrators.

The beef sessions were even broadcast live on local radio. Charley also conducted surveys and polls to ascertain what was on the minds of the people.

From this emerged his agenda: pave the streets and keep them in good repair; clean the gutters, get rid of abandoned autos; and, turn empty lots into vest-pocket parks. Install street lights—lots of them—lots of bright lights. Make the city look good and make it safer for all. Improve wages and working conditions for city workers, and add police and firefighters to the rolls. Place the city on a sound financial footing by adopting an occupational tax.

Charley envisioned Louisville as an intellectual and artistic center of consequence. One of Charley's great accomplishments was to create what is now known as the Greater Louisville Fund for the Arts to support the performing arts in our community. The Louisville Orchestra gained a new—and eventually a worldwide—reputation for performing contemporary musical works. In the 1950's, the orchestra played to a sellout crowd at Carnegie Hall in New York City.

Mayor Farnsley's legacy was on display here in Washington in June when the Louisville Orchestra performed at the Kennedy Center during the National Conference of the American Symphony Orchestra League.

During Charley's tenure as mayor, the Louisville Chamber of Commerce, Bellarmine College, and Louisville Magazine were all founded. These institutions continue as vital elements in Louisville today.

Charley Farnsley won his only term in Congress in 1964. He continued his efforts at the national level to promote improved street and highway lighting as a means of reducing traffic accidents and crime. He astounded and refreshed his colleagues with his scholarly approach to legislating.

After one term in Washington, Charley's real loves—family and hometown—won over his affections, and he returned to Louisville to rich and varied pursuits in civic affairs, publishing, lecturing, consulting and just plain indulgence of his lifelong love of intellectual pursuits.

Charley was a devoted family man. When he met his future wife, Nancy, in 1935, it did not take long for her to fall in love with this witty and lively and interesting young man.

Their marriage lasted 51 years and produced five accomplished and devoted children. Douglass and Burrell who live in Louisville; Alex who lives in La Jolla, CA; Sally who lives in nearby Arlington, VA; and, Ann who lives in Vevay, IN.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, the late John F. Kennedy once said that leadership is action not position.

Charles P. Farnsley held most positions a civic and political leader could hold. However, it was his actions in government, in civic affairs, in the arts, which identify him as a leader.

Charley Farnsley will be widely mourned. We in Louisville, in Kentucky and in the Nation are diminished in many ways by the passing of this estimable, accomplished man.

Mr. HUBBARD. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAZZOLI. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. HUBBARD. Madam Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to one of our former colleagues who did honor both to the House of Representatives and to the State he represented, Charles P. Farnsley, who passed away this past June 19 at the age of 83.

Charlie was a friend of mine who served the State of Kentucky in the State legislature in the 1930's, as mayor of Louisville, KY, from 1948 to 1953 and U.S. Representative of Kentucky's Third Congressional District from 1965 to 1967.

As mayor of Louisville, Charlie is remembered as one of the most active and accessible mayors in their history. Louisville institutions such as the Louisville Public Library and the Louisville Orchestra will long bear the imprint of this remarkable man who has had a great deal to do with their continuing success.

In his tenure as mayor, he also made Louisville a markedly more beautiful place to live by creating many new public parks, installing street lights and building new playgrounds and community centers.

But perhaps Charlie is best known for his beef sessions. These sessions were forums that he organized which allowed citizens to express their grievances with or recommendations for improving city services.

Charlie was preceded in death by his lovely wife Nancy who died in 1988. The couple's surviving children include daughters Sally and Ann, and sons Alexander, Burrell, and Douglas.

The loss of this great statesman and extraordinary human being will be felt throughout the Commonwealth of Kentucky and the Nation.

I extend my condolences to the family and friends of Charles Farnsley.

I congratulate my friend and colleague, the gentleman from Kentucky, Congressman RON MAZZOLI—for taking this 1 hour special order in honor of the late Charles P. Farnsley.

Mr. MAZZOLI. Madam Speaker, I insert for the RECORD an article from the November 1949 Reader's Digest entitled, "Here's A Mayor Who Knows How To Get Things Done" and an article from the Courier-Journal entitled, "Charles Farnsley, Colorful and Innovative Ex-Mayor Who Left Mark on City, Dies."

The above-mentioned articles follow:

[From the Reader's Digest, November 1949]

HERE'S A MAYOR WHO KNOWS HOW TO GET THINGS DONE

(By George Kent)

When Charles Peasley Farnsley was a boy his mother sat him down in the parlor one day and said that this time, rather than spank him, she was going to reason things out with him. Young Charlie retorted, "Just spank me, Ma!"

Today as Mayor of Louisville, KY, he displays the same impatience with words. "Let's just get things done," he says. And during his 20 months in office he has expedited a breath-taking total of civic improvements and innovations. Forty-two years old and a slouchy six feet two, with thinning carrot-colored hair. Charlie—everybody calls him Charlie—son of Louisville judge, took his law degree from the University of Louisville. Later he went to the State legislature. All quite orthodox—but there's nothing ordinary in either the man or his career.

You see his unconcern with the conventions in the clothes he wears: the Robert E. Lee hat, the derby sack coat and that mark of the Old South—the string tie. When he slumps into a chair he comes to rest in the middle of this back. In the words of a wag: "He sits up recumbently." After meals he stretches out on the floor at home or in his office—covers his eyes and goes to sleep.

Charles Farnsley became mayor in February 1948 by a vote of the Board of Alderman after the previous incumbent died. His first gesture was to establish something new in city government: the "Beef Session." Farnsley was disturbed over the great gulf dividing the city executive from the people.

Except for a vocal minority, the people had no way of saying what worried them, what they wanted, what they were thinking. Charlie mentioned this to Ed Edstrom, reporter for The Courier—Journal, and Edstrom replied, "That's easy, give them a time a place—and they'll tell you. They'll beef all right."

"A wonderful idea," exclaimed His Honor, and a week later all Louisville was invited to the city's first beef session. The beefers have kept coming ever since, once weekly. Everything that goes on is reported at length in the newspapers. Farnsley presides, surrounded by this department heads, who answer specific complaints. The beefer comes up and sits in a chair alongside the Mayor, sharing the microphone with him. What they say goes out over the air through a local broadcasting station.

Most of the complaints deal with traffic and street maintenance, but Charlie listens to requests which range from finding a lost cat to getting a telephone for an invalid. Where possible, the grievances are promptly taken care of; and the Mayor later checks through to see that what has been promised is done.

Charlie exhorts his department heads to read the "letters to the editor" in the newspapers and to do something about complaints that appear there. He also invites citizens to telephone him, and he is trying to get the phone company to make it possible for anyone to reach him simply by dialing m-a-y-o-r. He created the Louisville Citizens Survey, which sends expert interviewers into homes to discover what the people are thinking. Completed surveys covering such subjects as traffic, taxation, schools, and housing indicated that what the people wanted most were well-paved streets and recreation facilities for their children.

The paving problem was largely one of finances. There just wasn't enough money. Farnsley sat up nights reading reports from other cities and technical discussions of street maintenance. Finally he hit upon an unorthodox notion: instead of doing an expensive curb-to-curb job, pave only the driving portion of a street, leaving the parking lanes rough. In two months Farnsley resurfaced—"half-soled," he called it—42 miles of Louisville streets, more than had been done in 25 years. The saving was 30 percent of what a conventional job would have cost.

The same watchdog attitude toward the city pocketbook saved Louisville a million dollars when a pretentious four-lane outer drive was contemplated. Farnsley and his engineers drove slowly around the city, discovered that the old River Road, badly engineered and impeded by boulevard stops, was actually shorter in travel time than the projected highway. A few weeks later the old River road had been repaved, the stops eliminated, for $125,000—far less than the original estimate for the outer drive.

In providing recreation Farnsley opened up more than 40 play streets, took over vacant lots, distributed play paraphernalia. He plans to roll obsolete streetcars into ten of these play areas for movies and for indoor playrooms on rainy days.

Balm to the Farnsley soul was the subsequent report to the chief of police: vandalism had decreased materially in every neighborhood where a play street had been established.

To protect children against traffic accidents Charlie invited women to serve as part-time crossing police. He put 48 of them through a training course, outfitted them with uniforms, and paid them $50 a month. The women are doing an excellent job.

Louisville schools were unquestionably in poor condition, with just $600,000 available for improvements. The Mayor rounded up 20 of the town's leading architects and appealed to their pride as citizens. They cooperated by blueprinting 24 schools, outlining possible improvements and repairs. A survey of this kind would have cost $75,000. They did it for nothing. Today Louisville schools have been modernized to the limit of the money available.

Perhaps the most spectacular of all Farnsley's accomplishments are recent developments in higher education. One night, mulling over the crowding of the city's colleges, he had an idea. Although it was two in the morning he phoned Dr. John W. Taylor, president of the University of Louisville. Taylor came over and the pair worked out a scheme for Neighborhood Colleges—university classrooms in all the branch libraries. Taught by university professors, classes would be open to the general public and those attending would receive full university credit.

Charlie had classes in session within ten days. Shortly afterward he invited the educational director of the National Broadcasting Company to Louisville and offered to cooperate in NBC's project for a university of the air. The University of Louisville set up a course and NBC stars dramatized them. The university issued assignments, corrected papers, graded examinations. For the first time a person could listen to a national hookup and—if he did the supplementary work—get college credit for his effort. The program, called the University Theatre, is now broadcast over 131 stations.

In the Louisville library anyone can hear and borrow recordings of the program and other phonograph records. Special earphones enable you to listen without disturbing neighbors who are reading. The main library, nine branch libraries and several high schools are all linked by wire to a central studio which each day plays a request program of classical music and drama. A teacher, for example, who wants her class to listen to "MacBeth" has but to telephone and the play will come into her room. The library soon will be operating for the public an FM station that will accept no sponsors.

The Mayor has committed enough political suicide to inter a dozen ordinary officials. Twice he has demanded an increase in taxes on the eve of an election. To professional vote-getters this spelled sure political death. Charlie fooled them. Last November, running on the Democratic ticket to fill out the unexpired term of his predecessor, and making only two speeches, he polled a plurality of 11,500.

Shortly after taking office he announced that it was impossible for him to put his ideas into effect and at the same time sit at a desk puttering with papers. So he hired Roy Hamilton Owsley, famous as a city administrator, to take care of details. He called him a "consultant" and paid him $15,000 a year out of his own contingent fund. No one on the municipal payroll got as much money, not even the Mayor.

There was a row, of course. Who ever heard of two mayors? The politicians said that at last Farnsley had really cut his own throat. But, less than six months later the Board of Alderman approved Owsley's salary. They had found the scheme actually saved the city cash.

It was another step in Charlie Farnsley's unconventional way of getting things done.

CHARLES FARNSLEY, COLORFUL AND INNOVATIVE EX-MAYOR WHO LEFT MARK ON CITY, DIES

(By Bob Johnson and Leslie Scanlon)

Former Louisville Mayor, Charles P. Farnsley, a popular Democrat known for his energetic and innovative administration, died June 19 at Brownsboro Hills Nursing Home. He was 83.

Farnsley served as mayor from 1948 to 1953, as Louisville's Congressman from 1965 to 1967 and as a State legislator for four years in the 1930s. The enduring effects of his policies and a lifetime of civic activities can be seen in the city's finances, streets, parks, and services and in such institutions as the University of Louisville, the Louisville Free Public Library, the Louisville Orchestra, and the Louisville Fund for the Arts.

"Charlie was really one of the great planners and builders of the city" Frank Burke, Sr., a lawyer who served as Louisville's mayor from 1969 to 1973, recalled. "It's been a period of time since Charlie was in office, but those who remember and understand what he did will understand what a tremendous loss it is to the community."

Perhaps Farnsley's most admired innovation was the "beef session". Every Monday night Farnsley held court in the aldermanic chamber of city hall, inviting any citizen with a problem or complaint to present it directly to him. Quite often the mayor gave instant satisfaction by directing his aides to take immediate remedial action.

Lawyer Wilson Wyatt, who preceded Farnsley as mayor from 1941 to 1945, remembered him as "an original thinker . . . He was devoted to the arts. He loved Louisville. And he was just all in all a very intriguing character . . . The net result was excellent government for Louisville and national recognition of the city."

Wyatt said Farnsley was deemed "a unique and colorful mayor" in a 1949 Collier's magazine feature and was also the subject of favorable editorials in the former New York Herald-Tribune.

Charles Rowland Peaslee Farnsley was born in a South Third Street Mansion on March 28, 1907. His father, Burrel H. Farnsley, was an attorney later elected a circuit judge in the 1930s. His mother was Anna May Peaslee, whose father headed the Peaslee-Gaulbert Co.

His great-great-grandfather, James Farnsley, was a Revolutionary War veteran who traded a land grant in Pennsylvania for a flatboat load of flour that he brought down river and sold at the falls of the Ohio in 1782. With the proceeds he bought a farm and settled in the Shively area of Jefferson County.

Charles Farnsley attended Richmond School, Male High and the University of Louisville where he organized his college fraternity into a political machine that dominated campus activities. He was admitted to the bar in 1930 and took up politics with a flair that soon won him statewide recognition.

He ran for Congress in 1932, the year a legislative mishap in redistricting forced a statewide race of all U.S. House seats. He finished 10 in a field of 27 Democrats, but only the top nine made the November ballot. One who barely edged him for nomination was the late John Y. Brown, Sr. whose son, John Y. Brown, Jr., later became Governor of Kentucky.

In 1934, Fransley ran for Congress again. Without Democratic organization support, he was badly beaten. He publicly apologized to the voters for taking up their time. In 1935 and 1937, now backed by Michael Brennan, the Democratic organization boss, Farnsley won terms in the State House of Representatives. In 1940, he challenged U.S. Senator A.B. "Happy" Chandler in the Democratic primary. He lost badly, receiving just 12 percent of the primary vote, but said someone had to offer an alternative to Chandler's isolationism.

He was rejected for military service in World War II for medical reasons, but returned to college for public administration and philosophy courses. He was attending the University of Kentucky in 1948 when Mayor E. Leland Taylor died in office, and the board of aldermen, which was to choose a successor, elected Farnsley as a compromise candidate when neither Louisville investment banker Tom Graham nor Ely Brown III could win a majority of the aldermen's votes.

When Courier-Journal publisher Mark Ethridge heard that Farnsley would be mayor, he reportedly groaned and said, "Now every day will be like Derby Day." It was a prophetic comment.

Farnsley, fresh from public administration courses at the University of Chicago, Columbia and Kentucky, attacked the city's problems with vigor and imagination. He began paving streets, turning empty lots into parks, installing street lights, raising city salaries, improving police and firefighters' pensions, installing wading pools, converting old schools to community centers and replacing old, stinking garbage trucks with new ones.

He was the first Louisville mayor to use occupational taxes to fund local government projects. "Charlie was one of the early people in this country to become convinced that municipal governments could no longer rely on . . . taxes on real estate, and that the revenues to support local government had to be in some way tied to the local economy," Burke said.

Since money was short, he sometimes made half-measures do. He started "half-soling" streets by paving only the driving lanes. He bolstered police patrols in crime areas by hiring 25 women to relieve police on traffic duty at school crossings.

Farnsley also set up small playgrounds across Louisville. His administration "put up basketball goals even on private property where the owners gave permission" Burke said.

To put the city on a sound fiscal basis, he annexed suburbs to boost the city's tax base and got public approval for bond issues for sewers, streets, schools and parks.

Traffic movement and parking were Farnsley's most vexing problems. He created the "poor man's expressway" by straightening out jogs and linking traffic arteries. He also tried the city's first "pinball" lights, the directional arrows on major arteries like Bardstown Road, to switch lane directions during morning and evening rush hours.

He won his single term in Congress in 1964, defeating republican U.S. Rep. M.G. "Gene" Snyder in Lyndon B. Johnson's Democratic landslide. It was Snyder's only loss in his political career. Farnsley, who said his desire to have access to the Library of Congress was a major reason for running, retired after one term.

Farnsley admired Jefferson, the philosophers of the French Enlightenment and Chinese philosopher-statesman Confucius and their conviction that the people's welfare must be government's sole purpose. Although he fostered a southern planter image in his early years, Farnsley was sensitive to racial injustices in Louisville.

An arts lover, he was a founder of what has become the Louisville Fund for the Arts and was responsible for the Louisville Orchestra's program of commissioning and premiering original works of nationally renown artists.

Farnsley, also a history buff, went through a "Confederate period" in the 1930s when his normal dress was a broad planter hat, a swallow-tail coat, a brocaded vest and a black string tie. He published books under the Lost Cause Press label and bottled whimsically-named brands of whiskey like "Rebel Yell." He tried to name another brand "Damyankee", but it was rejected by the Copyright Office as in bad taste. He submitted a new brand name, "Bad Taste."

He abandoned Confederate garb in later years, save the string tie, which became his trademark. But he frequently carried a carpetbag when he traveled to northern cities.

His wife, the former Nancy Carter, died in 1988. He is survived by two daughters, Sally Bird of Arlington, VA, and Ann Farnsley of Vevay, Indiana; three sons, Alexander Farnsley of La Jolla, California, and Burrel and Douglass Farnsley, both of Louisville; a sister, Eleanora Hagan of Louisville; and six grandchildren.

ONE OF A KIND

Charles Farnsley was one of a kind. He loved Louisville the way a father loves a child. And he gave it remarkably visionary and, some said, eccentric leadership—as a State representative, U.S. Congressman, but most of all as one of its finest mayors.

Mr. Farnsley, who died at 83, encouraged the city to think more of itself than it had, and in doing so, he fostered accomplishments the likes of which Louisville had rarely seen.

Indeed, in the late 1940s, his administration at city hall was cited as perhaps the most progressive in America, and Collier's magazine called him "Confucius in Louisville". His personal hero was Thomas Jefferson. Both models taught him a simple lesson: Government should serve the people.

And he felt that meant all the people. During his time at city hall, the Louisville Free Public Library and the University of Louisville were integrated. He also opened up city hall, with a weekly series of "Beef Sessions" at which anybody could come and complain about a street light or a pothole.

TV came to Louisville while he was mayor. So he bought sets for public libraries since few had them at home. "People might as well look in a library as in a bar. It makes business for the bar; why can't it make business for the library?" he asked. And he was right; book circulation skyrocketed. He pumped money into the libraries and helped create two public radio stations, WFPL and WFPK more popular now than ever.

He launched massive street repaving projects and helped save the Louisville Orchestra by creating what has evolved into the Greater Lousiville Fund for the Arts.

Louisville's strongest suit today may be that it is a fine place to live. Few have done more than Charles Farnsley to make it that way.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, it was with profound sorrow that I learned of the passing of my friend Charles P. Farnsley.

Mr. Farnsley was born in Louisville, Jefferson County, KY, on March 28, 1907 and attended the local schools and the University of Louisville. He obtained his A.B. degree and LL.B. degree from the University of Louisville and was admitted to the bar in 1930. He was elected as a Demoncrat to the 89th Congress and served from January 3, 1965 until January 3, 1967. He was not a candidate for reelection in 1966.

During my tenure as a Member of Congress, I have had the honor to serve with my friend, ROMANO L. MAZZOLI, the Representative of the Third Congressional District, as well as with my friend, Charlie Farnsley. During his tenure as a Member of Congress, Charlie Farnsley served with distinction and really enjoyed his assignment. He was concerned about the people in this country and especially those in need of assistance. He believed that our children are our greatest asset and that they must be educated. During his service as mayor of the city of Louisville and also during his service in the Congress, he was very much concerned about law enforcement. On several occasions he said to me that a well-lighted city and foot patrolmen on the streets, where the people could see them, was a good deterrent as far as crime is concerned.

On many occasions, I had an opportunity to talk with Mr. Farnsley about Thomas Jefferson. In addition to being a history buff, he was an art lover. He was one of the founders of what has now become the Louisville Fund for the Arts, and was responsible for the Louisville Orchestra's program of commissioning and premiering original works of nationally renown artists. As a history buff, Charlie Farnsley not only liked to discuss that period of our history during the Confederate period, but also dressed the part. In his normal dress for a number of years he wore a broad planter hat, a swallowtail coat, a brocaded vest, and a black string tie. He was always in good humor and interested, and he was a great family man. He is survived by two daughters and three sons.

Although he only served a short time in the House of Representatives, he soon learned the names of all of the Members and was well liked. His service as a public official and as a private citizen will long be remembered. He was a man of high integrity, a man of compassion, and a man with determination and fairness. He was a gifted man, and he possessed the necessary kind of courage that assisted him at all times in establishing a good record as a public official.

Mr. Speaker, it was a great pleasure and a high honor to have been the friend of Charlie Farnsley. To the members of his family, I extend my deepest sympathy.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, when great men armed with ageless principles take the reins of power, they can accomplish great things. My fellow Kentuckian, Charles P. Farnsley, was such a man, and it is with a heavy heart that I mourn his passing this past June 19.

Charles left us with a remarkable and colorful legacy, first as a Kentucky State legislator, then as mayor of the great city of Louisville, KY, then as a Member of this House representing the people of Louisville in government once again. As a bright star in our Nation, perhaps he sparkled brightest during his service as mayor of Louisville from 1948 to 1953.

The accolades Charles Farnsley earned for his service there are considerable indeed. Collier's magazine dubbed him "Confucius in Louisville," and for no small reason.

When presented with a difficulty or a challenge, Mayor Farnsley's instinct was to reach for the creative solution. Between raw intelligence, political savvy, and his innate feel of how the people wanted things done, Mayor Farnsley always found a way to make the fine city of Louisville work a little better.

Many of his urban planning innovations are commonplace today. He created the poor man's expressway by straightening crooked streets and linking traffic arteries. He installed so-called pin-ball lights which opened additional lanes for rush-hour traffic.

Among his many brilliant ideas, Mayor Farnsley also made a grand contribution which has helped make the State of Kentucky the home of the finest basketball players in the Union, by installing basketball hoops on playgrounds, and, with consent, even on private property, all over the city of Louisville.

Even back then, money got short sometimes. And when the money became scarce, Mayor Farnsley found imaginative ways to make his existing funds last twice as long. He half-soled streets by paving just the traffic lanes, and boosted the crime patrol by hiring women as crossing guards—a real breakthrough in the early 1950's.

He was best known, perhaps, for beef sessions, where he opened city hall so that the people of Louisville presented their problems directly to him. Needless to say, a visit to a beef session got results and they were a magnificent success.

I could go on and on about his accomplishments.

Greater than his accomplishments, though, when he was mayor and then Congressman, were his principles.

He sought in public life to emulate the philosopher of America's Founding Fathers, Thomas Jefferson. He read his writings, his maxims, and his one work which has had the most profound impact on all Americans, the Constitution, the bedrock of our laws.

By reading Jefferson, Charles Farnsley learned that the Government exists for one purpose only: to serve the people.

He, like Jefferson, searched for ways to broaden the minds of the people he served. And it is in public service where Charles Farnsley spread his love for culture and the arts to the people of Louisville and all of Kentucky. He founded the Greater Louisville Fund for the Arts, which still undergirds the arts in metropolitan Louisville today.

The Honorable Charles Farnsley will be long remembered for his exemplary public service.

The father, brother, uncle, and cousin Charles Farnsley will be long cherished as well, for he was generous, caring, and compassionate. Through his children, Sally Farnsley Bird, Ann Farnsley, and sons Douglas, Alexander, and Burrel, the honorable name of Charles Farnsley, a name which stands for integrity and wisdom and all the values Jefferson himself stood for, will persevere for generations.

May Almighty God rest his soul. And may our Lord smile on the family of Charles Farnsley, and his colleagues, and all the people he touched, by keeping his legacy and his mighty principles foremost in our minds.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today with my colleagues in remembering our former colleague in the 89th Congress, Representative Charles P. Farnsley, who, at the age of 83, passed away on June 19.

As a Kentucky State representative, mayor of Louisville, and U.S. Congressman, Charlie always demonstrated his belief that a good government should serve the people. Nowhere is this Jeffersonian principle more evident than in Charlie's accomplishments as mayor of Louisville from 1948 to 1953. Often viewed as one of the most progressive mayors of his time, Charlie sought to give the citizens of Louisville what they and their city needed—improved infrastructure, improved Civil servant salaries, and improved education.

But make no mistake, Charles Farnsley was more than a simple pragmatist, who merely sought to capitulate to each and every want and desire of his constituents. He was a progressive groundbreaker. When old solutions proved ineffective or obsolete, Charlie developed new methods and new resolutions. For instance, when the police force needed to be reinforced to concentrate on high crime areas, Charlie took the bold step of becoming one of the first mayors to employ women as crossing guards. Similarly, when Charlie became convinced that real estate taxes alone could no longer support an effective local government, he became the first Louisville mayor to use occupational taxes to fund local government projects. And when television came to Louisville, only the wealthy could afford to have a set in their home. So, what did Charlie do? He purchased TV's and placed them in Louisville's public libraries; and what was the result? Book circulation in the city soared. Yes, Charlie was "an original thinker," as his predecessor as mayor of Louisville, Lawyer Wilson Wyatt, recently recollected.

Perhaps one of Charlie's most celebrated achievements was his introduction of beef sessions—a weekly open meeting at which citizens of Louisville could voice their opinions directly to Mayor Farnsley himself. Little did Charlie suspect that some 40 years later this practice would live on. Periodically, I hold office hours to give my constituents an opportunity to establish a direct, personal dialog with me. Over the years, these meetings have proved very beneficial and enjoyable; now, however, they will always have an additional meaning.

Following his tenure as mayor of Louisville, Charlie was elected to the 89th Congress. Serving on the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, Charlie represented the citizens of Kentucky's third district with distinction from 1965 to 1967. Charlie was a friend and an exceptional colleague.

The death of a statesman such as Charles P. Farnsley, who combined innovative thought with a Jeffersonian ideal, is a loss to Louisville, to Kentucky, and to the United States. He will be missed by his colleagues, family and friends.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 days to revise and extend their remarks on the subject of my special order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

LIMITING THE COST OF CONGRESS

The SPEAKER (Ms. KAPTUR). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. TAYLOR] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. TAYLOR. Madam Speaker, in a time of severe budget restraints, I applaud the efforts that are being made to limit overall spending and especially the efforts to have those spending cuts start in our House. I intent to support every effort to limit the cost of Congress. But the leadership in this matter must come from both the Congress and White House.

On Sunday, when the appropriations for the legislative branch is brought before this body, I will be offering a sense of Congress amendment that t(e overall budget for the White House be reduced by the same percentage as budget reductions enacted by the House and Senate. This morning I obtained the following information about the overall budget for the White House from the Subcommittee on Treasury, Postal Service and General Government Appropriations.

The President's fiscal year 1991 budget request for the 13 Executive Offices of the President accounts total $329,973,000, which is $59,155,000 above the total for fiscal year 1990 appropriations level. The White House budget is divided into several subcategories, some of which include:

Compensation of the President	$250,000
Office of Administration	24,900,000 (H)
(salaries and expenses)	25,400,000(S)
The White House office	32,000,000
(salaries and expenses)
Executive residence at the White House	8,400,000
(operating expenses)
Council of Economic Advisers	3,000,000
(salaries and expenses)
Office of Policy Development	3,400,000
(salaries and expenses)
National Security Council	5,800,000
(salaries and expenses)
Office of Management and Budget	48,300,000
Air Force One	(Classified)
President's Secret Service	(Classified)

Obviously, programs like the drug czar's office and the National Security Council are more important than other programs. That's why the sense of Congress calls for a reduction in total amount and allows the President and his staff to target the programs and areas in which to reduce appropriations.

In the Congress, we will prove that we are willing to get our own house in order and take the necessary steps to live within our means. Madam Speaker, I hope you will join me in supporting an amendment that will ask the President to set the same example.

Mr. HARRIS. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HARRIS. Madam Speaker, I just want to commend the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. TAYLOR] for bringing this information to the attention, not only of the Congress, but of the American people.

Madam Speaker, I am really shocked. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the President's budget request for 1991 is almost $60 million over 1990?

Mr. TAYLOR. Madam Speaker, the President's budget request for 1991 was $59,100,000 more than the budget he was given the previous year.

Mr. HARRIS. And do I understand further that the gentleman is saying that he was not able to find out the cost of operating Air Force One as it moves around the country?

Mr. TAYLOR. Madam Speaker, I had some calls from constituents who were concerned about the cost of the President as he went around the Nation campaigning for different candidates, and they were curious as to the total cost. One cannot get that cost. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HARRIS] and I, as Members of Congress, can never get that amount of money that it costs the President to fly around. That is classified.

Mr. HARRIS. Madam Speaker, I just wanted to offer my support for the initiative of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. TAYLOR], and I certainly hope that this body and the other body will support us in the effort to reduce the cost across the board as we tighten our belts, and I think it is fair to ask the President, in the cost of his operation, to tighten his belt also.

Mr. TAYLOR. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HARRIS] for his comments.

Just for his information, the $8.4 million cost is just operating the White House. That is not salary and expenses, and that is more money than the cost of operating my hometown of 10,000 people per year. That is only $5 million. The cost of salaries at the White House is $32 million, and that is higher than the cost of operating any city in my district, and that is what we have to do to get the cost of Government back in order.

Mrs. BENTLEY. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR. I yield to the gentlewoman from Maryland.

Mrs. BENTLEY. Madam Speaker, I appreciate what the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. TAYLOR] is pointing out, but I would like to make one point also. That is, namely, that, when the President flies on campaigns, the campaign pays for all the expenses involved, and the gentleman can rest assured; I want to tell him this, and he can ask any of the Members for whom the President has gone to campaign for, how much it costs out of that fundraising to get the President there, and they will tell the gentleman exactly that it is a very big bill.

Mr. TAYLOR. Madam Speaker, I appreciate the remarks of the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. BENTLEY].

However, Madam Speaker, I would be much more comfortable if we were given that cost from the General Accounting Office, from the Office of Management and Budget, so we could truly tell if the cost that is reimbursed by the campaign is the true cost to the Government, but I certainly appreciate her remarks.

REMEMBERING THE VOLUNTEERS WHO HELP OUT IN OUR VETERANS HOSPITALS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Ms. KAPTUR). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Madam Speaker, in this time of chronic budget problems, I am proud to pay tribute to those who volunteer in the VA medical centers.

We know about the service organizations, but we sometimes overlook groups like the Elks, one of the Nation's oldest and largest fraternal groups. Forty-four years ago, their members took this pledge: "So long as there are veterans in our hospitals, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks will never forget them."

James Damon of Mt. Vernon, OR, national president of the BPOE, recently visited with me and reminded me of this commitment by his organization. And he gave me some numbers which I would like to share with my colleagues:

Last year, the Elks and their families drove 187,400 miles and volunteered 228,028 hours in providing companionship and entertainment to hospitalized veterans. Members of the Elks generated more than $2 million to buy simple things like toothpaste and playing cards and big items like wheelchair-equipped vans and TV sets. Last spring, the Elks lodge in Alexandria, LA, even built an artificial lake near the VA medical center. Stocked with fish and a great source of recreational therapy, the lake covers 7 acres and is officially known as Elks Pond.

Such gifts—large and small—make life a little easier for thousands of patients.

Volunteers are an invaluable manpower resource for our veterans' medical facilities. Frankly, we just couldn't run our hospitals without them. In the 44-year history of the department of veterans affairs voluntary service, hundreds of thousands of individuals representing themselves and more than 350 organizations have donated more than 335 million hours of volunteer service to the compassionate care and comfort of hospitalized veterans and their visiting family members.

No action by the Congress can equal the companionship therapy of dedicated volunteers, that personal contact with patients who are suffering physical or mental wounds of war and who are fighting the ravages of alcohol, drug abuse or diseases of aging.

I am particularly impressed with the Elks' unique Adopt A Veteran Program. Last year, various Elks' lodges adopted 50,000 veterans. Elks in all 50 States got to know a patient at a nearby VA medical center. They remembered those people on their birthdays and other special occasions. They took these patients on outings—to baseball games, on fishing trips, shopping. They brought them to the local Elks lodge for dinner or a special program. They invited them into their homes for Christmas or Thanksgiving dinner.

During wartime, there is patriotic fervor, and we make promises of everlasting gratitude to those who serve. Sometimes those promises tend to fade from public memory.

I am proud to salute the Elks and other fine volunteer groups who have not forgotten those who are confined to hospitals, nursing homes, domiciliaries, and residences.

TRIBUTE TO CHIEF JUDGE ROBINSON O. EVERETT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONES] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Madam Speaker, on September 30, 1990, Robinson O. Everett of Durham, NC, retired after serving for more than a decade as chief judge of the U.S. Court of Military Appeals. Under his brilliant and charismatic leadership, the Court of Military Appeals has evolved into one of the most respected and innovative courts in America. The indefatigable, personal effort he exerted toward realizing this goal represents one of the most remarkable examples of judicial commitment and dedication that could be displayed.

His ceaseless concern has always been to reconcile the demands of highest justice with the requirements of military discipline. He has written hundreds of judicial opinions, many of which have resolved some of the most difficult questions in military and constitutional law. His many landmark decisions will surely have a lasting influence on military jurisprudence for decades to come.

Chief Judge Everett's other major accomplishments are equally stupendous. Within a year after his arrival at the court, he converted the court's docketing system to a completely electronic computerized system, which resulted in a great reduction in the cost of managing and retaining the court's recorded docket entries on all cases. This electronic capability also gave the court instantaneous access to all the court's docketing records. Furthermore, during his first year as chief judge, the court accomplished an astonishing 82 percent increase in the court's final dispositions on the master docket over the previous year, cutting in half the number of cases pending on the master docket. In recent years, the year-end pending cases have been reduced to a record low, and the time required to process cases before the court has also been dramatically reduced.

Judge Everett has been a model educator who has relentlessly sought to improve the professional skills of both military and civilian practitioners. In 1983, he reshaped the court's annual Homer Ferguson Conference and redesigned it not only to give military lawyers—but civilian lawyers as well—an opportunity to develop and maintain excellent skills required for appellate court practice within the military justice system and elsewhere. To make these training programs readily available to all lawyers, he had the conferences videotaped and made special arrangements to have portions of the conferences televised on C–SPAN. He also conceived and developed a documentary videotaped program produced for use by military lawyers and military educational institutions, as well as distribution and use by civilian law schools and community education programs both in the United States and overseas. This video, the first of its kind, explained the entire process of trial and appellate procedures in a military court-martial case with particular emphasis on the appellate judicial responsibilities of the civilian U.S. Court of Military Appeals.

The judge has been exceptionally devoted to promoting public awareness of the fairness and progressiveness of military justice. He has never been too busy to say no, and addressed military and civilian conferences, seminars, training workshops, meetings of various bar associations, and law schools throughout the country. These judicial visitations and speeches have kept the military and civilian communities fully apprised of the court's responsibility in the administration of military justice; have improved the professional and legal education of military and civilian lawyers; have provided an interchange of ideas beneficial to the military community in general; have provided the court an opportunity to ascertain the impact of its decisions on the administration of military justice; and have helped to develop a better appreciation of the operational problems in the various services.

One of Chief Judge Everett's most innovative programs was reaching out and taking the court to the people. For the first time in the court's history, the judges traveled outside their own courthouse to hear oral arguments in several actual appeal cases. Some of the cases were held at various law schools and at the West Point Military Academy. These convenient hearings provided an excellent opportunity for members of the academic community, military, civilian judges, lawyers, law students, and future military leaders of the U.S. military academies to meet with the judges and view how court-martial cases are presented by appellate advocates for decision by the court.

The court also had televised an actual hearing conducted in the courthouse, which was later televised nationwide on the C–SPAN Television Network as a part of a 3-hour special program on military justice and the appellate review of court-martial cases under the Uniform Code of Military Justice. The project exemplified great visionary and very creative leadership on Judge Everett's part. The military community, the legal profession, and the general public have become more aware and appreciative of military justice and the Court of Military Appeals, as they have never before, by seeing on television how efficiently and well it works. The court's remarkable success in allowing the first telecast of an actual Federal court proceeding may have been the catalyst of the recent decision of the Judicial Conference of the United States to reverse a ban in effect for decades in this country to allow televisions in some of the article III courts in a 3-year experimental program.

Actually, during the last decade, under the consummate leadership of Chief Judge Everett, the U.S. Court of Military Appeals has become one of the most public and most utilized courts in the Nation today. There have been various moot court competitions held in the court; various law school alumni meetings and functions; meetings and receptions held by different voluntary bar associations; and the court was recently the site of the historic administering of the first national junior high school bar examination. Furthermore, students—from preschool to college—are always visiting the court and meeting with the judges. Cadets from the military academies have worked on special projects at the court, and law schools students also have done summer interns there. Even weddings and marriages have been performed in the courtroom for the first time. It is clear that the U.S. Court of Military Appeals has now become one of the most accessible and most utilized public courthouses in America.

Perhaps, there are few judges who have so enthusiastically and relentlessly devoted so much time at promoting better understanding of the American legal system by the youth of our country than Judge Everett has. In 1987, Judge Everett directed the national student law day project, which has been described as "one of the truly most ambitious and most successful projects ever undertaken" in an effort to celebrate the Bicentennial of the United States Constitutuion. The project won first-place award in the American Bar Association's 1987 Law Day USA competition. Over 1,000 students, 30 different courts, and over 61 judges across the country participated in the project; and the project extended from Puerto Rico to Guam, and from Boston to San Francisco. Through Chief Judge Everett's magnificent leadership, a major goal was accomplished of encouraging and coordinating the nationwide cooperation of judges and court officials to sponsor courthouse visits and informal meetings with trial and appellate judges and court staffs by school students throughout the country. His impact and influence have had no limits.

Chief Judge Everett was exceptionally well-prepared for his judicial service. Earlier he had served as a commissioner on the court. He has been a law professor at Duke University for almost 35 years. Also, he has practiced law in North Carolina as well as in the District of Columbia and has held many positions in the organized bar. In fact, he was the chairman of the American Bar Association Committee on Military Law from 1977–79. During the early 1960's, he served as a special counsel to Senator Sam Ervin's Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights in conducting the hearings and studies which led to the Military Justice Act of 1968. He has written a book "Military Justice in the Armed Forces of the United States" and numerous articles on military law, criminal procedure, and evidence. Prior to his retirement in 1978 as a colonel in the Air Force Reserve, Judge Everett had acquired many years experience as a judge advocate. Moreover, during his tenure as the chief judge, he served as the first chairman of the Federal Bar Association's Judiciary Committee and the chairman of the FBA's Administration of Justice Section.

Judge Everett has been honored and has received various recognition across the country for his brilliant accomplishments as the head of the U.S. Court of Military Appeals. Recently, the Judge Advocates Association sponsored a special testimonial banquet in his honor where many, including all the judge advocates general of the various services, bestowed upon him abundant praise. A number of bar associations across the country have also recognized his unparalleled accomplishments during the last decade. This ubiquitous praise and recognition appear to be shared by everyone.

Chief Judge Everett will be returning to the Duke Law School, where he has been a tenured professor for many years. Fortunately, as a senior judge, he still will be available to assist the Court of Military Appeals from time to time. We wish to express our gratitude to this very distinguished jurist from our home State of North Carolina for his extraordinary service and dedication to his country. We extend to him our best wishes for the future.

1 YEAR LATER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PANETTA. Madam Speaker, I rise today on the 1-year anniversary of the Loma Prieta earthquake to let my colleagues know how the communities in the 16th District of California have been able to recover after the devastation of last year's earthquake. As you may know, the epicenter of the earthquake was located 4 miles north of Aptos, CA. It wreaked havoc in the communities of Santa Cruz, Watsonville, and Hollister. Billions of dollars' worth of damage was caused by the earthquake. While many families and businesses have recovered from damage and have moved on, many others are still trying to deal with the economic and psychological damage of October 17.

As many of you know, the downtown area of Santa Cruz, specifically the Pacific Garden Mall, was virtually destroyed. Before the earthquake there were 600 businesses in the downtown area; 206 of these businesses were destroyed or dislocated because of the earthquake. The city estimates that 1,400 jobs were lost because of the earthquake.

Some good news in the rebuilding process was the awarding of an economic development grant for the development of the jailhouse project in Santa Cruz. This project involves the development of an old jailhouse in Santa Cruz to house retail stores and an arts center. In addition, EDA has awarded a grant to build a downtown parking facility in Santa Cruz to help stimulate business in the downtown area. Both of these grants will provide much needed economic stimulus to revitalize the business community. In addition, the Santa Cruz Harbor received an EDA grant to repair and expand the harbor.

The city of Santa Cruz reports that 34 commercial buildings with a total area of 347,326 square feet have been demolished. A total of 375,587 square feet of commercial property has been damaged and remains unrepaired. Nine replacement commercial buildings are under construction or are in the permit process and five commercial buildings are being rehabilitated.

Another area that was badly hit by the earthquake was the city of Watsonville. The city reports that 550 residences were damaged and 406 residences received major damage. Watsonville reports that 10 percent to 15 percent of destroyed houses have been replaced and are now liveable and another 20 percent are in the process of getting necessary permits; 22 commercial buildings were demolished and 52 residential buildings have been demolished. In addition, the local airport suffered damage and water and sewer lines were damaged.

Watsonville is home to some of the largest food processors in the country. Much of the frozen food at these plants was destroyed in the earthquake and many of the canned items were damaged. While some of the companies were able to sell their product, many others have suffered economic losses that have resulted in the shutting down of at least one processing plant. This shutdown has resulted in the loss of more than 100 jobs in Watsonville.

I am pleased to report that Watsonville has also received two EDA grants. One is to build a parking structure in downtown Watsonville and the other is an economic planning grant for long-term economic development.

Another hard hit area is the small community of Hollister in San Benito County; 68 homes were destroyed and 400 damaged. Mobile homes in the area sustained extensive damage. Businesses in Hollister sustained damage as well. It will take years to rebuild these communities.

Nearly 100 families are still living in FEMA provided mobile homes. These families have been unable to find affordable housing in the area during the past year. It is my hope that these families will be able to find permanent housing within the next 6 months. However, if they should not be able to find housing, I will strongly urge FEMA to extend the April 1, 1991, deadline for this assistance.

I believe that the greatest lesson of the Loma Prieta earthquake is the great need for changes in Federal disaster assistance programs. My district has sustained a number of federally declared disasters over my years in office. Each time it seems that FEMA comes promising help and assistance and delivering frustration and disappointment. I believe that Congress must act to improve disaster assistance before another massive natural disaster affects more communities.

One of the most prevalent problems was the seeming indifference of FEMA officials toward the problems facing the victims of the disaster. In many instances, I felt that I had to exert great pressure on these officials to have them provide services that should have been provided without my intervention. This is illustrated by the nearly 900 cases handled by my staff following the earthquake. This should not be the case. FEMA should have the capability to move into a disaster area and coordinate immediately with Federal, State, and local agencies and provide needed assistance. The system is not working correctly if a Member of Congress has to make a phone call to have assistance provided.

This points to larger problems associated with Federal disaster assistance, which is the length of time and the complexity of the decisionmaking process at FEMA. I have had many years of experience with the Federal bureaucracy. I know that a bureaucracy is by nature very slow to react. However, FEMA should not fall into the category of bureaucracies. It is vitally important that assistance be provided to victims of a disaster immediately.

Following the earthquake, I organized weekly earthquake task force meetings in my district. At these meetings we would have representatives from each relevant agency present to answer questions concerning disaster assistance. This seemed to be the only way to provide complete and accurate information to my constituents. While this provided a good forum for people to get information, it should not have been necessary. FEMA should have the ability to pull these people together without outside involvement.

The application process needs to be simplified and accelerated. The most needy victims usually had to wait the longest to have their applications processed. This is certainly not the way assistance should be provided. Many of my constituents complained about the complexity of the assistance applications and many were discouraged from applying.

Earthquakes present some unique problems to FEMA. Because they cannot be accurately predicted, FEMA does not have any warning. In the case of a hurricane, FEMA can prepare while tracking the storm. It is my hope that the lessons of the Loma Prieta earthquake will lead to improvements of Federal disaster programs. For now, I will continue to work with my constituents to continue our rebuilding effort. I hope that at this time next year that I will be able to report to you that everything is back to normal in the 16th District. In addition, I hope that at this time next year that Congress will have taken a decisive step toward improving Federal disaster programs.

AN UNSUNG HERO

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Madam Speaker, Archie Bach died last week. He was my uncle.

Not a lot of people outside of his community and family would have known Archie. He stayed pretty close to home.

He worked hard, took care of his family, and like most Americans, he loved his country.

Although Archie was born in a small town and lived most of his life within 25 miles of where he was born, he did travel around the world to fight for his country.

During the Second World War, Archie Bach was involved in extensive combat in Africa and Europe. He served in an Army division that was called on for an almost unprecedented amount of time in frontline combat. Archie risked his life and served his country fighting for freedom halfway around the world.

He then returned to live in his hometown and like most Americans who fought in World War II, never talked much about it and never made a big deal of it. Yet, in many ways, Archie Bach and the countless others like him who fought for this country are America's real heroes.

In those countless acts of courage by unsung heroes, often unrecorded and unknown, lives now America's freedom.

Archie Bach, we'll miss you. But we know that because you lived, the world is a better place.

WHAT HAPPENED TO OUR FINANCIAL SYSTEM?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. BENTLEY] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mrs. BENTLEY. Madam Speaker, for sometime I have been reading stories and speaking about the problems of American business and some of the financial tactics which have helped to exacerbate the problems of our country.

Recently I had an opportunity to review a paper which summarizes one segment of these serious problems we find in the financial sector. It points out what many of us have forgotten—that the roots of our excesses are not new, and they stem from the 1950's and 1960's. I think this information is appropriate given the recent headlines in the papers about our savings and loans, the banks, and the FDIC.

The paper by Dr. Rolf Wubbells, Professor of Finance at New York University Graduate School of Business is titled, "Currents in U.S. Financial Affairs. It states:

For centuries the United States has been the attractive lodestone for people throughout the world seeking freedom and opportunity. We were envied and respected for American economic and moral leadership and, for the American lifestyle.

In recent years we have slipped from this preeminent position of respect. A dramatic change took place in the country, both ethically and financially as we shifted from being the largest creditor nation in the world, to the largest debtor nation. The prime objective became instant gratification rather than building a stronger, better and more productive society for future generations. To better understand this shift we shall examine some of the financial currents fueling the far reaching problems in the United States today.

What happened was described almost 150 years ago by Charles Makay in his classic "Extra-ordinary Popular Delusions and the Madness of Crowds." He wrote every age has its peculiar folly; some scheme, project, or phantasy into which it plunges, spurred on either by the love of gain, the necessity of excitement, or the mere force of imitation. This period we are in now has a little of all of Mackay's ingredients.

Hardly a day passes without more depressing news of our increasing financial problems. Debt, which is a claim against future earnings, has sky-rocketed at every level: federal, state, municipal, business, mortgage and personal. Debt which increases productivity and earnings may be constructive and sound. We have, however, been mortgaging our future with small and sometimes negative increases in productivity. This has to lead to economic catastrophe.

Evidence of a potential catastrophe are the savings and loan failures, the junk bond market collapse, the short-fall in pension funds, insurance companies in serious financial straights, commercial bank failures, and with time the list continues to grow.

There are a myriad of specific causes for our plight, but the core of the problem is: insatiable greed fueled by a frenzied mass histeria, neither looking to the long term future of our society or national well being.

The present savings and loan fiasco is vivid evidence of Makay's 1841 wisdom that "Every age has its peculiar folly." This peculiar age of the 1980's is one of either "insatiable greed" or "arrogance" or a combination of both thinking the bills would never come due.

The monumental losses of the savings and loans were primarily caused by the unsound, and in some cases, fraudulent mortgage loans. The secondary cause was the high yield bonds (junk) which played a significant role in relatively few savings and loans. However, with a historical view, we will be able to demonstrate how greed and avarice can cause some rational individuals to lose their perspective.

The paper further states:

The general public is still unaware of the full impact of the collapse of the junk bond market on commercial banks and insurance companies. During the period from 1980 to 1989 approximately $276 billion of high yield junk bonds were sold. Mutual funds hold about 30 percent, insurance companies 30 percent, pension funds 15 percent and savings and loans eight percent.

I would like to interject here that I recently read an article in the Wall Street Journal about junk bonds and the Resolution Trust Corporation which is handling the disposition of our dying savings and loan institutions.

That article by George Anders and Paul Duke, Jr., pointed out that the "government holds 483 different issues of high-yield junk bonds, all acquired as part of its rescue operations for insolvent thrift institutions." It stated that "these junk-bond holdings include some valued at just three cents on the dollar, as well as other valued at 80 percent to 90 percent of the initial issues price." Three cents on the dollar means the taxpayer is picking up the lion's share of the cost on some very bad financial deals. The paper also reported "the default rate on junk bonds at 34 percent."

That certainly seems to be an example of greed and underscores what Dr. Wubbels states next:

As a result of the greed we are well on the way to the greatest financial catastrophe in our history. Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady estimates more than 1,000 savings and loans, which represents 40 percent of the industry, might have to be seized by the government. The cost for those seized last year might be as high as $130 billion. The General Accounting Office estimates the cost plus interest on the bonds issued to finance the bailout could exceed $250 billion in the next ten years and over $500 billion over 30 years.

Unofficial estimates by knowledgeable individuals estimate the cost even higher at $1 trillion. How this happened is a complex story. The basic cause is the insatiable greed of a relatively small number of people who managed to misguide the public with the hope of riches without producing true wealth.

What happened is not new, but the scope of the problem and amount of greed is. Previous financial follies did not have the potential to radically alter our leadership position in the world. Insider trading and confident men have been with us throughout our history.

George Washington, in 1789, took the Oath of Office as President on Wall Street in New York City. He appointed Alexander Hamilton as Secretary of the Treasury. Hamilton issued his report for the redemption of the scrip the soldiers were paid with during the Revolutionary War. At least three syndicates began buying the scrip for pennies on the dollar from the soldiers who had fought, suffered and died for our freedom and the heirs of those who were killed in battle.

One syndicate was headed by Robert Morris, a signer of the Declaration of Independence and a close associate of Hamilton. Another syndicate was headed by Jeremiah Wadsworth, a member of Congress from Connecticut and a friend of Hamilton.

When the New York Stock Exchange was formed on May 17, 1792, the bonds issued to redeem the soldier's scrip at full face value were the first issue of securities traded publicly. Just as what has happened in today's financial climate, the average man in 1792 was a loser to the insider trader. Big is better and bribery, deceit and payoffs were always part of the financial scene.

The 1950's and '60's were the era of the conglomerate and the buzzword "synergism" which meant the whole is worth more than the parts. The merger-mania of the 1950's were driven by greed and avarice as were the leveraged buyouts of the 1980's. The LBO's had their genesis in the financial techniques used in the era of the conglomerate.

The 1950's was the time of Roy Ash's Litton Industries, David Karr's Penn-Texas, Louis E. Wolfson's Merrit, Chapman and Scott, Nicholas Salgo of Bangor Prenta, etc.

The object was to buy up as many companies as possible, pay for them with debt secured by either the assets of the company being bought and/or by the parent company.

It was the era of the subordinated debentures usually convertible into the stock of the conglomerate. Again, it was a period of Makay's 1841 piece "Extraordinary Popular Delusions and Madness of Crowds." A company made everything. For example, Textron, a New England textile company became a purveyor of zippers, pens, snowmobiles, eyeglass frames, silverware, golf carts, metal working machinery, helicopters, rocket engines, ball bearings and gas meters.

The 1960's were the Go-Go years. New issues of stock of companies with little in the way of assets, limited or no earning power, were eagerly bought by unsophisticated investors and sent soaring.

It was a period of paying for real assets with worthless papers, with securities of little inherent value, creative accounting and emphasis on the last quarter's earnings. For many managers, long-term planning meant the next quarter.

The total mergers of American businesses totaled 2,975 in 1967, 4,462 in 1968 and 6,132 in 1969. The number dropped off in 1970 and became much less significant during the financial crisis of 1969-1970 although it was actually more severe than the one of 1919-1932. Let me explain.

In the period from September to November 1919 there were four to five million stockholders with a loss of $30 billion dollars. In 1969-1970 there were 31 million stockholders who lost $300 billion in stock listed on the New York Stock Exchange, the American Stock Exchange and traded Over-the-Counter. While the loss was ten times that of 1929, the effects were less severe.

The country was richer, the loss was spread over more people and the high margin requirements (80 percent) made it unlikely an individual would be completely wiped out.

The lure of making a large profit while risking little of one's capital soon sets in after the acute pain of a financial crisis fades. At that time, new adaptations of old ways to "make a quick buck" soon surfaced. Understanding this "crisis-quick-buck" syndrome would simplify our problems if we would distinguish between money and wealth.

Money is any generally accepted medium of exchange. In the United States, it is the dollar. One measure of the value of money is its purchasing power; another measure is its worth versus other currencies.

Wealth consists of scarce transferable goods that satisfy a human want and is created by combining raw materials (land), a productive labor, productive facilities (capital) and management expertise. The true strength of a nation lies in its ability to create wealth.

I would like to add that I agree with this, as does Akio Morita, the chairman of Sony. A year ago I did a speech and stated I agree with you Mr. Morita, where we differ is the effects of foreign investment. Well, Dr. Wubbells, Akio Morita, and I all agree on the need for value-added manufacturing to create true wealth for the country.

The paper then states:

Japan, a nation with little raw materials, has become an economic powerhouse through the utilization of extremely productive labor, excellent management employing the most efficient productive manufacturing facilities available.

How we lost our economic advantage with so much natural wealth is not difficult to understand. We are all aware of the fact the United States came out of World War II as the greatest economic powerhouse the world had ever known. We were able to supply not only our own needs but those of our allies and vanquished foes.

What happened? The basic American thought was that big was better; synergism, the whole is worth more than the parts. The hope was the conglomerate's stock would sell at a higher price-earnings-ratio.

These earlier financial techniques were refined and flourished in the frenzied 1980's era of LBO's. Many of our companies were left deeply in debt. Earnings were used to serve debt rather than for needed research and development, new productive facilities and marketing, which are true wealth creating activities.

Our competitor, Japan, has for four years in a row spent more than the U.S. for new plants, equipment, and research and development. It has widened the gap between them and the U.S. at an ever increasing rate. Last year Japan invested more than $750 billion or about 24 percent of its GNP although its economy is about 60 percent the size of the U.S. The US spent $500 billion or about 10 percent of our GNP.

One advantage the Japanese companies have over American companies is they can accumulate large amounts of cash for future opportunities without fear of a corporate raider.

Who benefits from an LBO? Obviously the raider, with a small network of his own who may become the owner of a major company; the stockholders at the time of the takeover who get an amount in excess of the earlier market price; the investment bankers; the lawyers; the suppliers of the bridge loans (the money to support the raider's takeover until the junk bonds can be sold to the public.

Who loses? The biggest loser is the nation as a whole, the American people. Money that should have been used in creating wealth by investing in new plants, equipment, marketing and research and development is shifted to repay debts.

Others who are losers are in most cases the buyers of the junk bonds along with those employees that are terminated, the people who would have been employed in productive purposes, and the suppliers of plant and equipment.

The leveraged buy out objective was to invest a small amount with the hope of a huge profit. It was based on finding a company whose assets were worth much more than the financial statements indicated and that had sufficient earning power to be capable of servicing a large increased debt after the take-over: subsidiaries that might be sold profitably, a pension fund that could be looted, a company whose stock was selling substantially below break-up value and where management's holdings of stock were minor.

The raider quietly accumulates up to 5 percent of the stock at which point the Securities and Exchange Commission would have to be notified of the holding. It was a safe assumption that most of the public stockholders would agree to a quick short-term profit and not worry about the long term effects on the employees or on the nation when the buy-out offer was made public.

How does a raider discover vulnerable companies and the source of funds available? Financial statements have become so complicated that they need to be interpreted by specialists. They are not only the province of raiders, security analysts, and investment bankers, but also of specialized new letters published by financial industry personalities.

Despite the voluminous financial information disseminated by American corporations, it can be misleading unless it is correctly interpreted. Accounting is an art, not a science. There is a great deal of freedom in preparing financial statements while abiding by the established rules of the Financial Accounting Standards Board.

Land and buildings are examples of how individual items on a financial statement can be misleading. Land is carried on the books at cost. This is particularly advantageous for a major lumber company that owns thousands of acres of land, most of its purchased for a few dollars an acre. Now that land may be worth hundreds—or hundreds of thousands of dollars an acre. Buildings are carried at cost minus depreciation. There are different ways to charge depreciation. A fully depreciated building may be worth millions.

The liquidation of excess inventories may be another source of funds for the raider. Still another is the sale of advantageous long-term leases. The assignment of the leases may generate millions of dollars. The main source of funds in recent years was the sale of high risk (junk) bonds.

The most diabolical source of money for the raider which made him literally a true modern pirate, is the over-funded pension plans. He literally could use the money in the fund to pay for his take-over of the company.

This worked because a guaranteed benefits pension plan had funds accumulated over the years that developed an amount of dollars greater than needed to meet the defined payments obligations.

Our courts have held that those assets in excess of the amount needed to meet a defined benefit pension plan belongs to the corporation, not the employees. Once the raider had taken over a corporation, the pension plan was terminated, annuities were purchased for the employees to meet the pension fund's contractual obligations, and the excess was used to pay off the obligation incurred by the raider. In many cases, the raider purchased the annuities from the lowest premium cost insurance with, possibly, the least safety.

Translated, that means the most risk for the retirees and the fund.

Some of the companies whose excess pension funds were seized are Bulova Watch Co., Revlon Cosmetics, McCrory Corp., National Forge, Pacific Lumber Co., Standard Gravuire, etc.

The general belief by most employees is their pensions are protected by the government which is not strictly correct. The government's Pension Benefit Guarantee Corp. does not accept responsibility for pensions that have been exchanged for annuities offered by insurance companies. If the insurance company goes broke then the pensions of the annuity holders (the employees) are gone. In turn, the junk bonds in the portfolios of some insurance companies pose tremendous risk to hundreds of thousands of workers.

One insurance company and its subsidiary has been in the news for months. Should the subsidiary go out of business, 70,000 workers who have their annuities with the company will have lost their pensions.

In some cases when management becomes aware of a raider's intentions, they offer to buy the stock he held at a premium. The effect was to enrich the raider and impoverish the corporation. In this case, blackmail by the raider is euphemistically called "green mail.

Management having bought off one raider often encountered another. You can't win paying blackmail. We should learn with raiders, just as governments have that you cannot pay blackmail to a terrorist. To many a corporate raider is the equivalent of an economic terrorist.

We need to sweep away the excess of the last few years if we want a growing, prosperous free America. We must begin to emphasize the lone-term growth of productivity.

We need to increase our research and development, modernize our plants, improve our worker's morale and once again lead the world in producing the best products at the lowest price. Every major business decision should consider what it does for the future of the U.S., not in terms of the quick buck.

The savings and loan fiasco is estimated to cost each U.S. household $5,000 and it will not contribute one smidgen to productivity. Instead of this and other "quick-buck" financial gimmicks, we must make an effort to utilize the small and medium sized businesses which are the secret of the entrepreneurial spirit of America.

Let's do it right in the future and become the envy of even the prosperous Germans and Japanese.

I want to add that I agree that every major business decision should consider what it does for the future of the United States. At our economic leadership luncheon last year, Robert Galvin, the former chairman of Motorola made a similar statement.

He said he had a piece of legislation in his files which he would like to see passed as a policy statement. It said simply "that every businessman must be an American first in his business dealings."

That could help solve our problems quickly.

To restate the ending of Dr. Wubbell's paper—"Let's do it right in the future and become the envy of even the prosperous Germans and Japanese."

We have the ability and the ingenuity to surprise them all. The American people have the strategic sense to come out winners if they do not let avarice control them.

THERE ARE STRANGE THINGS HAPPENING HERE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. OWENS] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. OWENS of New York. Madam Speaker, I would like to begin by saluting the previous speaker, the gentlewoman from Maryland. I agree with her 100 percent. She gave a good, solid foundation for the remarks that I would like to make.

Ultimately I want to move back to the subject of the savings and loan associations, but first, I would like to point out that we are in the throes of a budget preparation scenario, a scenario which is involved in the cutting of many worthwhile programs, a scenario which is involved with the proposal of additional taxes on the American people.

I think it is important for the American people to watch this process closely, watch it very closely. There are strange things happening here in the middle of this budget-development process.

One of the strangest occurrences is the fact that no one is discussing the savings and loans bailout and what that will cost the American people. That has not appeared in the budget prepared by the House of Representatives except briefly there was a note from the budget summit saying that it was a nonnegotiable item and that they must have $74.3 billion in there over the first 3 years, and the last 2 years they will begin to recoup some of the money so they gain some of it back. But that document that was circulated surreptitiously seems to have sort of disappeared and has never appeared formally in any discussions on the floor of the House. So it evidently, we hope, has been dropped.

We almost know it can drop because I have learned just today that last week, a few days ago, the other body, the Senate, by voice vote, voted to provide $57 billion for the savings and loans. It was approved by voice vote. There was so little discussion that it did not register in the media to an extent to get our attention; $57 billion had been approved by voice vote in the other body.

I understand the request is now before the House committee responsible for this item, the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs. My colleague, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] who heads that committee I believe has asked that there be a little discussion about the $57 billion. I am told that he has requested the administration to come in and explain the request. That is the least that could happen.

Taxpayers beware. Taxpayers, listen. While taxpayers are being taxed additional money, while programs are being cut, like child care, the Student Loan Program, and Members know about the great cuts proposed for Medicare, that has been widely publicized, while these things are taking place by voice vote, we approved $57 billion additional. We are asked to approve $57 additional billion for savings and loan bailout.

Strange things are happening here. Some of those strange things add up to a bit of dishonesty. The sins of omission, just omitting to say certain things is criminal. Omitting to discuss multi-billion-dollar items while we are imposing a budget on the American people which requires additional taxes, as well as cuts in some vital programs is unconscionable. We should not tolerate it. Taxpayers, watch it closely.

We also discovered in the last few days there has been a confirmation of what I charged several months ago, a confirmation of the fact that a large percentage of the taxpayers' dollars that are going to bail out the savings and loan associations, are taxpayer dollars that are used to fill up the gap that has been created by the fact that the money the people deposited and the money that was insured by taxpayers by the Government, that money that we are being forced to replace, I said a large proportion of it was not legally our responsibility. In the scheme of this old boys' network works conspiracy and the scheme of the regulators and the administrators moving to cover up and placate, and hold the hands of the criminals, those who are outright criminals, and those who were incompetent. In an attempt to cover up for them, they are giving away the taxpayers' money to people who legally we are not responsible for today. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA] indicated that he had introduced a bill which prohibits the payment of any money to people who are not covered by the Federal regulations which say that up to $100,000 is all we are responsible for. That is quite a lot. No other country in the world covers that much in guaranteed deposits.

I assure Members, in West Germany, very prosperous West Germany, not a single dime is covered by the Government when depositors put their money in the bank in West Germany. A small percentage is covered in England, up to about $14,000 in England. Japan covers about half as much as we cover, a little less than half as much. So we are very generous as taxpayers. It has worked quite well. We do have guaranteed deposits. We are in partnership with our banks. The banks do not admit that, but we the people are in partnership with the banks because we cover their deposits. We cover them up to $100,000.

It is grossly unfair and of questionable legality to find that beyond $100,00 we are covering depositors. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA] has proposed on the basis of his findings, he found that 20 percent, and I knew it was a large number but I never had a figure, 20 percent of the taxpayers covered, the money the taxpayers are covering in these failed savings and loans is money above $100,000. Mr. REGULA has introduced a bill which will prohibit the use of taxpayers' money to cover those depositors in these banks above $100,000.

I have also said that most of them are very wealthy people, foreigners, Arab sheikhs, Japanese bankers. We will find those are a lot of the people we are covering, and we do not want to offend them by not covering them also, because they may pull their money out of other banks.

I do not have the direct quote from Mr. Seidman, but Mr. Seidman who heads this whole RTC [Resolution Trust Corporation] operation has said as much that we are scared to offend foreign investers, we are scared to offend these people by not covering their deposits also. They may pull out their money from other banks. Despite his fears, I do not know whether we are legally able to do what is being done, but according to Mr. REGULA, the situation is so bad that 20 percent of the money we are spending to bail out the S&L's is going to people who are above the $100,000 limit.

So it is another strange occurrence in the midst of all this budget development, the taxpayer beware, the taxpayers are watching very closely. I thoroughly agree with the statement by the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. BENTLEY] that at least $500 billion is what the tab is going to be for the taxpayers. At least $500 billion to bail this whole situation out.

There are some scholars, and Stanford University is one of the places, they are estimating it will be as much as $1 trillion—$1 trillion, double the conservative estimate of $500 billion. Taxpayers will pay for it. The least the taxpayers deserve is a full discussion on the floor of the House, a full discussion in the public domain by the President, by all persons in Washington, of all the commitments that we are making, all the sacrifices we will have to make to deal with those commitments.

In this strange atmosphere, there is no discussion of this huge obligation that we are always forced to assume. There are some other strange things that are happening. While we are searching for pennies everywhere we possibly can in every committee, being forced and squeezed and closely looking at school loan programs, and at one point the Child Nutrition Program, the Free Lunch Program was discussed in one committee. That is outrageous. Put it on the table and discuss it, because we got that exempted under Gramm-Rudman. Even Gramm-Rudman is not so heartless as to go after free school lunches. It has gotten that bad, but in the same atmosphere, because we know defense is still a sacred cow, they refuse to look at the situation with respect to the bases that we are continuing to maintain in places like Germany, Japan. There is no real discussion of that. They skirt the issue in every instance where that debate is on the floor. They refuse to really look at it in an intelligent way. Taxpayers will have to press forward and say we want the bases in Germany closed. We want the bases in Japan closed. It is about time they paid for their own defense, and they still need one. They are more prosperous than we are. Their standard of living is rising while ours is declining, and on and on it goes. There are many reasons why it makes sense. It is good, common sense. Any sophomore in high school could give a good reason why we should no longer maintain bases in Germany and Japan. Why should we maintain a defense budget at such a high level? We are not discussing the budget that is necessary to take care of Operation Desert Shield. Operation Desert Shield will be a separate budget.

After we get through with all the other budgets, we still have to deal with Operation Desert Shield. We know, in fact, that the Government of Saudi Arabia is earning enough money on the extra amount of dollars they get for the high price of oil to pay for the whole war. I do not know why we do not give the bill and ask them to give citizens a rebate, so that those elderly people in America who are going to have to pay more money for fuel bills this winter can also be able to benefit from the windfall that the Government of Saudi Arabia is getting. They are reaping enough money due to the increase in the price of oil. Saudi Arabia is making enough money to pay for the war and still have a lot left over, just from the extra money that they are making above where the price of oil was when the Desert Shield started and where the price of oil is now.

That gives then enough, I do not have the figures right here, but it is so many billions of dollars per week they are taking in above what they have already taken in, that could easily pay for the war, pay for the nonwar, pay for the protection that they are getting in Operation Desert Shield.

Then they could have some left over to also pay for the extra price of gasoline and fuel oil that we have to pay here in this country.

I do not think it is outrageous to propose that. I think it is outrageous to have them profiting from a situation where, because the world has rushed to their defense, the price has gone up and their profits have gone up; so that still is another dabate. We look forward and hope for a truthful and honest and open debate on the supplemental budget for Operation Desert Shield when it comes forward.

But another strange thing that has happened relates to our intelligence budget. We just finished discussing that yesterday. It was a long debate. The whole afternoon was taken up debating an amendment by the gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS]. The amendment called for a humanitarian action to be taken which at the same time would save us money. The American people would be saved about $60 million, at least $60 million would be saved if we stopped giving aid to Jonas Savimbi in Angola.

Now, there were Members of the House who brought the case and made it very forcefully, they brought photographs of children in Angola, amputees. Angola has the highest percentage of children whose legs have been blown off and who have no arms, no hands, who have been damaged by land mines and various other devices. They have the highest percentage of amputees in the whole world that is in Angola as a result of this war waged by an American-backed guerilla outfit called UNITA.

Now, we say we must maintain UNITA because UNITA is noble, UNITA is an improvement and far to be desired over the Government of Angola. Whatever you may say, the official Government of Angola is the government that we are funding to fight against. The Government of Angola, they say, is Communist and we cannot allow those Communists to win. I think we have just seen the situation do a flip-flop in the past year where the President of the United States is calling the head of the Communist government in the Soviet Union by a nickname. President Bush calls President Gorbachev "Gorby." They are good friends. We are united in the United Nations against Iraq in Operation Desert Shield.

Communism is sending students to study how we do our Wall Street, which they once criticized as being the monster of the modern world. Wall Street is now being studied by students from the Soviet Union. A whole lot of things are happening.

If Angola was ever a menace to the United States, if Angola ever was worthy of our concern, it would have been via the Soviet Union, that Angola would be another place the Soviet Union could establish bases as a way to threaten the security of our Nation. That seems to me to be a viable, a credible concern, that we could justify being involved in Angola to stop the Soviet Union from expanding its bases throughout the world, and we have to get involved even to the point of supporting a character like Jonas Savimbi. Great nations have to make these decisions, and sometimes you end up supporting people who are questionable. Mr. Savimbi is one of the most questionable recipients of United States aid that you find anywhere in the world. Savimbi, who went to Moscow and asked the Soviet Union, those horrible Communists, asked them for aid. He was a Communist when he thought he could get money from them.

Then Mr. Savimbi later, when he could not get money from the Soviet Union and the Russian Communists, he went to the Chinese Communists and tried to get money from them.

The Chinese Communists, in their particular extreme ideology, more extreme than Soviet communism, but they would not give him enough money, so he ended up coming to the United States and there he got the money he needed, so now he is a capitalist. He is our noble advocate in Angola.

Jonas Savimbi obviously is an opportunist. Jonas Savimbi, if he lived in my district, would probably be a drug dealer. Since he goes where the money goes, that is where the money is in the urban cities, so Jonas Savimbi probably would be a drug dealer.

When Jonas Savimbi comes to this country, he hobnobs with a lot of opportunists and parasites of his same ilk. I can think of nobody worse than Jonas Savimbi for taxpayers to be financing. We are financing Jonas Savimbi to the tune of at least $60 million a year.

What the gentleman from California [Mr. DELLUMS] was saying on the floor was that you can take away that $60 million and save it, at the same time you will save the children of Angola. You will do a humanitarian thing and save money at the same time.

Now, American taxpayers, why did so many people stand up on the floor and argue for hours that it was necessary in this day and age to prevent a takeover in Angola by communism, so therefore we must give $60 million to Jonas Savimbi? We must insist that he continues to take our $60 million.

Taxpayers, beware. Strange, weird, sick kinds of things are happening. That is a very sick development, that we are insisting that in order to stop the Russians from getting a foothold in Angola, or maybe to stop communism in general. It is not clear what they want to accomplish, because I suspect all Mr. Savimbi will do when it is all over is take off to some secluded place to use the money that he has deposited in some Swiss bank account to live well the rest of his life.

The man has no firm ideological base. There are no principles that we are able to discern. He has moved through so many spheres of ideology until one thing is certain. He is not worthy of the support of American taxpayers.

How many more sick situations like that are we still financing? How many more rogues are we still financing through the intelligence budget? We cannot tell you as Members of Congress. We do not know. I estimate $60 million. Most newspapers and people knowledgeable about the situation in Angola estimate that Jonas Savimbi is receiving at least $60 million, probably more, but we do not know because the intelligence budget is not a public budget. You cannot openly talk about it. As a Member of Congress, you do have the privilege of going to the little room where they keep the budget and you can look at it there, but then you are bound forever to secrecy. You cannot say anything about it, so I choose not to go to get handcuffs and to have my lips sealed. I will take the newspaper estimates and I will take the estimates of the experts. At least $60 million of the money of the American people is being forced into the situation in Angola and into the pockets of Jonas Savimbi and his gang.

Why, when we are being asked to pay higher taxes, when we are squeezing worthy programs, are we still doing things like that, Why do we have an intelligence budget which is still probably at the same level it was before? Again, I do not know. It is estimated to be between $8 and $10 billion.

As I said before, this is one place where I agree with the people of Russia. The Soviet Union citizens are demanding that the KGB be stripped and the budget of the KGB be cut down to very little. The KGB and the CIA are roughly equivalent, and there is no longer a need to spend as much money on cloak-and-dagger operations which primarily were set up by the two superpowers to deal with each other.

So why can we not take those billions and use them to take care of some of these other situations, like Medicare commitments and student loan commitments and child care commitments? Why can we not?

The savings and loan issue, as I said before, may be discussed in a lame duck session. I do not know. I have not heard anything like that. The savings and loan association issue may be brought to us at midnight or 1 or 2 o'clock in the morning and with everybody tired and bleary-eyed, we will vote on it, no matter what it looks like, but I think when you are talking about $57 billion, as the latest amount of money that they need, we are doing a great disservice to the American people who are being asked to bear new burdens and to accept less service and cuts which hurt.

But the savings and loan situation is still one that this administration will not face up to.

I have said before that it is an old-boys network, it is a group of people who feel that they have the privilege of not being held accountable.

Our Justice Department has moved in a way which shows at least to me that there is a damage control strategy. And the kingpin of the damage control strategy is the Justice Department determination not to move zealously, not to move with the kind of intensity it ought to have in prosecuting savings-and-loan crooks. If you do not move to prosecute them and you do not move with dispatch, you do not go after the big ones, then the magnitude of the scandal, the kind of fingers that it has reaching into the reputable, respectable world will never be revealed.

That is the reason damage control is being practiced. It is the reason that the Attorney General, Richard Thornburgh, has made repeated statements that much of this money can never be recovered. Mr. Thornburgh, along with the FBI agents, keep insisting most of this crime is too complicated, too complicated to deal with. We cannot deal with it, it is too complicated.

We can deal with a couple of thugs robbing a grocery store and put them away, but when billions are taken, our hand are tied.

That is the message that we are getting from our Justice Department, that it is too complicated.

Now, they have a number of convictions that they can hand you or cite when you press them to see how many people have been investigated, how many people have been indicted, how many people have been convicted.

We are talking about losses which are mounting into hundreds of billions of dollars, so it seems to me there ought to be correlation between the amount of convictions and the amount of money involved or, in addition to convictions, how much money have we recovered?

In many cases, they give a defendant a number of years in jail plus they order him to pay back some of the money. How much money have they recovered? What efforts have been made to press for the recovery of the money?

Mr. Charles Keating is in jail. I think they might have let him out today. There was a news article which said that they had reduced his bail from $5 million in Los Angeles to $300,000.

Mr. Keating is in jail claiming he has no money, yet his Lincoln Savings & Loan Association is one of the biggest among the savings and loans that swindled the American people.

Mr. Keating is in jail today not because the Federal Government put him there, not because Mr. Thornburgh took action, but because of a local prosecutor.

The Los Angeles prosecutor moved to indict Mr. Keating, put him in jail on the basis of the fact that more than 21,000 people had been sold junk bonds in the lobbies of the banks under Lincoln Savings & Loan's control. They were sold junk bonds and made to believe they were guaranteed by Federal deposit. So the local prosecutors moved.

The only thing that Thornburgh and the FBI and the operators of the Federal Government have done to Mr. Keating to date is to sue him. He has been sued.

Now, Slick Willie Sutton was a notorious bank robber, and there are a lot of romantic stories told about him. He is legendary. But he was really a pathetic creature when you consider the fact that Willie Sutton throughout his bank robbing career, if you add up all the money that he stole and got away with it, with the amount of money that he was trying to get, it was less than $1 million. He was in and out of jail, being caught and escaping and being caught again all the time.

Less than $1 million. Now, we did not sue Slick Willie Sutton. We put him in jail. Now, these are bank robbers who sit in their offices and rob, and we cannot even find our way to indict him. We cannot indict him. We sued him instead.

I have a letter from a constituent in my district, a former judge who is retired. Years ago, when he ran for office the first time, he was an inspiration to many of us younger politicians. He is retired now, one of the few people in my district that I know who read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

So in commenting on something that I said in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, he wrote to comment on what it means to have all of this money that the savings and loan associations have taken not be available to do things. He cites the fact that a giveback of only $2 billion of the money that has been stolen by S&L directors, attorneys, accountants, et cetera, a giveback would completely rebuild two of the poorest communities in Brooklyn, Brownsville, and Bedford-Stuyvesant. It would furnish decent and affordable housing for the homeless people and the poor in that total community. Even a $1 billion disaster area grant from the Federal Government would save the health and sanity of thousands of homeless families who are now being recommitted to welfare hotels by the mayor because we cannot find housing for them. And there are numerous examples of what one could do with $500 billion.

I think the best graphic illustration of what it means to have this savings and loan debacle inflicted upon us can be found in this November 5, 1990, issue of Fortune magazine. It may not be out on the newsstands yet, but we have it already.

They have a whole section called the "S&L Felons." I am going to read some sections from this because there have been many people who have contacted my office and asked how can it be true? We could not have lost that much money. Where did it go? Surely the Federal Government, with the FBI and Treasury Department and the Internal Revenue Service, can go out and get the money back. They could not have gotten away with that much money. How can it be? Let me read to you some sections from Fortune magazine.

They are talking mainly about the felons, but as they discuss and give the photo and a brief summary of each person who has been convicted, you get some idea of what is going on.

Three hundred and thirty-one felons have been convicted over 2 years. Many others are awaiting trial. I think 331 convicted is a very small percentage when you consider the amount of money involved and the number of institutions involved.

That is a very poor record. But that is a fact that we will take.

They have a graphic illustration here of one of the biggest felons, a wanted poster, "Person Wanted by U.S. Marshalls." His name is Tom Billman. He is wanted for racketeering, mail fraud, wire fraud, and conspiracy.

He is said to have gotten away with $22 million, after he was on the observation list. After he realized he was about to be caught, he wired $22 million to Europe.

Mr. Billman has still not been caught. He is still out there spending his $22 million.

Fortune magazine reads as follows:

When you are looking at the first graduating class of these felons, these cheats, these 282 men and 49 women, they have set a standard which later classes will be praying to match. They victimized 368 institutions, they caused $3.5 billion in direct losses, and while courts have imposed $4.3 million in fines on them and the courts have demanded another $208 million in restitution, they have paid but pennies on the dollar.

Most of them claim they are bankrupt.

Now, listen carefully. "Of the 331 who have been caught, part of their sentence has called for restitution." The 331 who have been caught are estimated to be responsible for losses totaling $3.5 billion, but the courts have only imposed fines on them of $4.3 million. Listen to the millions and the billions.

They are responsible for losses totaling $3.5 billion, and the courts have fined them $4.3 million. That is a good deal.

□ 1940

Madame Speaker, the courts have demanded another $280 million in restitution, but the record shows that most of this has not been paid back. None of them had paid a substantial amount of what they were asked to pay. Most of the money is still missing.

By Justice Department standards, to quote Fortune magazine again, each felon here described was the subject of a major prosecution.

Now the people who are among these 331 are supposed to have been the subjects of a major prosecution. A major prosecution is defined as: First, a case where the amount of fraud or loss was a hundred thousand dollars or more; second, the fraud involved several borrowers in the same thrift; or, third, the guilty party was an officer, director, owner, or shareholder of the institution. Chief executive officers, chairmen, presidents, account for 15 percent of the convictions. Another 28 percent were directors or other officers among those who were convicted.

Madame Speaker, I read this. I went through the whole article. I do not agree. I think there are a lot of small fish included in these 313. I think two-thirds of the 331 are very small fish, people who were observing day in and day out the people at the top, the boards of directors, the CEO's, people underneath them in the middle management who, upon observing their stealing began stealing themselves in ways that were less exotic and easier to understand. So, they have been caught in greater numbers. Two-thirds of these numbers are just small fish, and the real culprits, the billion-dollar culprits, have still not been apprehended in any great numbers.

To quote Fortune magazine again:

Historians already have begun to speak of these frauds as rivaling in aggregate those of the Gilded Age, but the most luminous bubble of that time, of the Gilded Age, a railroad kickback scheme known as Credit Mobillaire, netted its perpetrators only $243 million in current dollars. Teapot Dome was small stuff, $3 million. Ponzi, $87 million. Billie Saul Estes, the great swindler during the Kennedy Camelot era made off with just $102 million.

Fortune magazine does us another favor by explaining what some of the favorite gimmicks of the felons were, and people have asked, "How can you do that? How could you possibly get away with that much money? How is it possible?"

Madame Speaker, the background is too complicated to go into now. We have the era of Ronald Reagan, Reaganomics, which said, "If you give rich people a chance to make more money, then all of us will benefit from that. So, therefore, take the regulations away, and let rich people do what they want to do." And they even guaranteed that with taxpayers' money, that we will have a great economy. That is the background.

Madam Speaker, we pulled away the regulators at the same time we made available more opportunities for people to steal. But in more detail Fortune magazine cites several ways in which it was done. Misapplication of funds is one, obtaining loans for a given purpose, then using them for another purpose, which is not sanctioned by the lender. Borrower A, who is lent $100,000 to build an apartment complex uses the money instead to pay defaulted interest on some other loan. That was one example.

Another way the felons operate was through land flips. Land flips: The fraudulent inflation of property's value through multiple sales. This is a favorite gimmick of the S&L crooks because, when they are caught, it looks all legal, and it is hard to prove conspiracy, especially if they are part of the old boys network, and one really does not want to prove it. Party A buys a property for $100,000. Then he sells it to confederate B for $400,000. B sells to confederate C for $700,000. Confederate D then goes to the S&L association and says he wants to buy the much sought after property for its most recent price. The savings and loan approves it, they all get together, and they divide up the proceeds because, after all, it was only worth $100,000, so they made a $600,000 profit. The lender and the appraiser in many cases may not know what is going on in this deal, but, after a while, everyone caught on, and every one of the thrifts must be held responsible for knowing these kinds of things were going on, and many of them cut themselves in on the deals. In the Silverado Bank deal a department store in Denver, CO, sold for $26 million. It was worth only $13 million. Everybody knew it was worth only $13 million. Silverado board of directors, Silverado officers, made a deal with the purchasers to give, to deposit, $13 million back into their bank. They approved the deal on condition that they would put $13 million back in the bank, so that is a clear conspiracy.

There is another deal down in Florida with one of the banks. I think a person named Jeb Bush is involved in this one where a building was worth $6.9 million. Six point nine million dollars. It was sold for $9 million. Sold for $9 million. In addition to selling it for $9 million and going to the bank to get a loan, they got an additional loan of $4 million. The total loan, plus mortgage, was $11 million for a building worth $6 million.

Madame Speaker, the taxpayers are being asked to pay for a worthless building, overvalued building. It is not worth more than $6 million, and yet the commitment of the savings and loan is $11 million, and taxpayers have at least put in $4 million already to help bail everyone out. That was a land flip, sophisticated land flip.

Another way the S&L felons operate is through nominee loans. By law, an S&L can lend no more than 15 percent of its capital to one borrower. Party A borrows the maximum, then tells shill D to borrow an equal amount from the same institution. B gives his money to A. The bankers sometimes play along as a way of circumventing the lending cap. The term also applies when bankers use shills to borrow for their own accounts.

Madame Speaker, there are many situations where bankers recruited people to do this, so they would ride in on the whole violation.

Check kiting is another technique used in S&L felonies. The classic original white collar con has been around for a long time. The perpetrator, with $10,000 in account X, he draws a check for $20,000, deposits it in account Y, whose balance previously was zero. He then draws a check on Y for $10,000, depositing that amount in account X. Float, the time required for checks to clear, makes the game possible, so long as the money keeps moving.

However, Madame Speaker, instead of $10,000, our S&L crooks were playing with $10 million, $20 million, and it all added up.

Kickbacks are another obvious tool that the felons use. Payment of anything of value to a person in exchange for a service. Party A seeks a $100,000 loan. Banker B reviews A's application and says, "You must be kidding. You don't have the collateral. You're not qualified for this loan." But then A shows just how serious he is by offering the banker 10 percent of the loan as a kickback, and they call that a consulting fee, or servicing fee, or something else that sounds legal.

So, for those people who ask the question: "How could they do it? How could they get away with this much money without being caught? How could it go on for years and years? How could it total billions of dollars?" They can get some idea of how, under the cloak of legality, all these things could take place if they have collusion from the people at the top in the bank, the directors, the CEO's and others.

Madame Speaker, before I quote again from Fortune magazine, I would like to say that I like quoting from Fortune magazine. As my colleagues know, this is a bastion of our capitalist economy, and, as my colleagues know, we have every reason to believe that Fortune magazine dug for the truth and would not distort the truth in any way on matters relating to business. So, Fortune magazine, I salute you.

"They deserve blame, too, for opportunity costs the United States must pay."

Continuing to quote Fortune magazine:

Take competitiveness. Depending on whose estimate you accept, Germany will invest from 500 billion to 100 trillion deutsche marks over the next 5 years in what used to be East Germany. At current exchange rates, the higher number would be about $660 billion. That 1 trillion deutsche marks would equal about 660 billion U.S. dollars, or slightly more than what the United States might have to spend to fix its savings and loans. The estimated cost for the United States S&L's would cost us about $500 billion, at least.

In exchange for its investment, however, Germany will gain 16 million new consumers, 8.5 million workers, a modern infrastructure of roads and communications that will last for decades, and a gross national product at least 10 percent larger than they had before. That is what the Germans will gain for spending the same amount of money we are going to spend on bailing out the savings and loans.

Our money is down the drain. We will have nothing to show for it.

Let us take a few examples, as I close, of some of the individuals involved in these cases cited by Fortune magazine.

Robert Mikkelsen, 53, executive vice president of Baldwin County Savings & Loan in Robertsdale, AL.

Most of the savings and loan failures were in Texas. Close to 70 percent of the institutions were in Texas. Florida and California ranked second, and then you find them all over the country after that.

Robertsdale, AL. Mr. Mikkelsen pushed through a $1.5 million loan for three business associates, supposedly to develop a marina on a piece of swamp known as the Quarantine property. As Mikkelsen knew, this boggy swamp, where turn-of-the-century passenger ships let off people with infectious diseases, was worthless. The loan went bust.

The three partners that he had were acquitted. He got 1 year probation.

He got away with $1.5 million, and all he got was 1 year probation.

John Steven Bracy, 44, president of Unifirst Federal in Trumann, AR, loaned two business associates $500,000 more than they needed, and got it back. All $500,000 got back in his pocket. He got 3 years.

Otha B. Chandler, 50, a senior loan officer at Savers Federal in Little Rock, AR, ignored the regulations that capped loans to a single borrower and handed out $20 million, 55 percent of the portfolio of that savings and loan association. He handed it out to just two Little Rock developers.

The loans, which financed a failed Mississippi condo project and the purchase of a private jet, among other things, all went bust. They could not pay it back. So Mr. Chandler got 4 years.

Janet McKinzie, and these are all little people, relatively speaking, an executive assistant to the chairman of North America Savings & Loan of Santa Ana, CA, was the ringleader of a scam that cost her savings and loan association $16 million.

Working with David Morgan, 53, a real estate investor, she set up a fake escrow account and submitted phony invoices to get funds for her own use.

Secretaries Victoria Walker, 48, and Kathleen Taormina, 33, provided the paper trail.

When caught, McKinzie was ordered to pay back $13 million, which matched the $10 million plus the interest she collected from the insurance policy of another person in on it, but had died, and she got 20 years.

McKinzie got 20 years in prison. Her cohorts got 90 days. One got 90 days, and the other community service and a $5,000 fine.

Just as an aside, I think Ms. McKinzie got a raw deal. Nobody else got a sentence of 20 years. There were many deals much more diabolic and outrageous than this one.

Roderick D. Reed, 42, president of FirstSouth Savings in Pine Bluff, AR, got 2½ years for embezzling $8.5 million.

Richard J. Mariucci, 32, branch manager of Gibraltar Federal in San Francisco, oversaw some very large deposits. He used his position at the branch to help himself to $3.3 million, which he spent on gambling and racehorses.

He got 27 months. Maybe that was not such a bad deal.

Daniel Burkhart, a stock broker, and Gina Loren, an investment manager, and Charles Lusin, an attorney, conned California thrifts, individuals, and an order of nuns out of $4.1 million. Ms. Loren got 6 years in prison.

John L. Molinaro and Donald T. Mangano, Molinaro was the chairman of Ramona Savings & Loan in Organe, CA, and Mangano was ex-business manager of singer Jose Feliciano, used 25 percent of the savings and loan's assets to build a 180-unit condo in Palm Springs. When only 7 units sold, they found strawmen to borrow $30 million to buy the condos and sign them over to Mangano.

The bank lost all of the $30 million. Both men are responsible for restoring $6.7 million. Molinaro was given 12 years in prison, and Mangano, 15 years.

Jay and Leif Soderling are a unique case. Both of these were former top officers of Golden Pacific Savings & Loan in Santa Rosa, CA. They pleaded guilty in 1987 to misapplying the funds of their failed thrift, and were ordered to pay several million in restitution. They were given 1 year in prison, 1 year's probation, and all the punishment was was to pay restitution.

After the year in prison, they used funds gained illegally from a promissory note that had come due on a $500,000 spending spree. The second time around, the judge slapped them with 6 years in prison each.

On and on it goes. I do not want to bore you. If you are interested in knowing how it is done, get the Fortune magazine for November 5 and you will find out how it is done.

As I said, many of these are small-time operators. Let me conclude with a big-time example, the Vernon Savings & Loan Association.

Vernon's owner, it was owned by a man named Don Dixon. He has only recently been indicted. The owner, the top dog, the person overseeing the entire operation, he has only recently been indicted. But a number of people under him have already been indicted and tried and convicted.

There is a problem in all of these people who have not been indicted yet in places like Texas and a few others. You should check the statute of limitations. The statute of limitations is running. In some cases, some of the criminals will walk off scot-free because the statute of limitations will run out.

In the case of Vernon Savings & Loan, a man named Woody Lemons was the chairman of the now legendary Vernon Savings & Loan Association. He earned the spotlight the hard way: he stole it. He led his band of thieves on a merry chase that few will ever match for stupidity, and I am taking from Fortune.

When Vernon finally failed in March 1987, it held a portfolio of loans that were 96 percent delinquent. Ninety-six percent of all the loans they had were delinquent.

Lemons was nailed for arranging an inflated loan to buy and develop property in Arlington, TX. Half of the $3.5 million loan was slated to make its way back into his pockets.

Another colleague of Mr. Lemons, Patrick G. King, conspired with Pat Malone, president of Vernon's Dallas division, to reimburse all of his offices for $55,000 in political campaign contributions made with Vernon funds. Before he joined in Vernon in 1983, Mr. King had been director of regulatory supervision for Texas savings and loan associations.

He got 3 years probation and was ordered to repay the $55,000.

It is important to note that in Texas, where the greatest percentage of the failed savings and loan associations are located, all of the savings and loan associations were regulated by a State organization, a State agency.

□ 2000

The U.S. taxpayer, you and I, the U.S. Government, guaranteed the deposits in this Texas savings and loan, but they were regulated under the State charter by a State regulatory agency.

To get back to Vernon:

Then there are Vernon's slippery customers. Jack D. Atkinson, 54, a Dallas real estate developer, failed to mention when he applied for a loan that part of the money would go to pay rent on a beach house in Solana Beach, California, which was frequented by a senior Vernon official. Over 3 years Atkinson paid rent of some $600,000

Laurence B. Vineyard, Jr., 41, a local businessman, had been paying other debts and expenses with a $12.7 million loan from Vernon since 1984. In June 1986 he used $2.6 million to pay $1.4 million in cash for a house in Dallas, to set up a trust for his kids, and for other personal expenses. Vineyard, who claimed the loan was for a stock purchase, was convicted for misusing the $2.6 million, ordered to pay it back, and sentenced to 5 years in prison. He is also serving a consecutive 5-year sentence for a 1987 fraud conviction involving Key Savings and Loan of Englewood, Colorado.

And it goes on. I urge Members, if they want to really know how it was done, if they want to really know how the best and the brightest minds in the financial world of America were involved in this $500-billion-plus swindle, it will be worth it to get a copy of Fortune magazine and just read these little capsule biographies of the people who did it.

The point here is that the American people have been taken, they have been swindled unlike any group of people ever in the history of the world, probably, not just the United States, but the entire world. We will probably not find ever a swindle like this, and yet there is no discussion of it here in Washington on the scale which equals the magnitude of the crime.

The American people will pay very dearly in many ways, and yet the leaders of the American people are not ready to openly discuss the problem with them.

The Justice Department of the United States which is responsible for prosecuting insists that this problem is too complicated, this problem is a lost cause, we cannot really recover the money. They want to minimize the involvement in investigations, prosecutions, and convictions.

A gross injustice is being done, and we should all remember the lines of Shakespeare, King Lear, "Fool me not so much to bear it tamely; touch me with noble anger."

There is a time to get angry, and when you look at your tax bill, and when you look at the cuts that are being made in services, I do not have to explain that this is now a time to get angry, and make Washington feel your wrath.

I yield back the balance of my time.

THE CIVIL RIGHTS ACT OF 1990

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WASHINGTON] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Madam Speaker, I would like to change the subject just a bit, but first commend my colleague from New York for his studious dissertation on other aspects of the many problems that we face. I would like to turn our attention back very briefly, for not more than perhaps 10 to 15 minutes, to the question of the civil rights bill of 1990 that now sits on the President's desk for a decision to be made by him as to whether he will exercise his constitutional authority to sign that legislation, or whether, as he has threatened to do on so many occasions, he will exercise his constitutional prerogative to veto that legislation.

I hope with all my heart that the President signs the bill, because he is the leader of our country, and I do not think it presents a very healthy picture for our country to have the President of the United States against civil rights, particularly in 1990.

I come to the well this evening, Madam Speaker, to address what has been the central criticism aimed at this legislation. I have heard from the time that the bill was introduced that first of all it was a quota bill, and then when those arguments could not stand up the argument was changed and the defense was that it would create quotas, and then finally that it would lead to quotas. I believe I read in the Washington Post today the statement by Mr. Marlin Fitzwater, who is the President's press person and his principal spokesman to the American people, that the inception of the bill being signed into law would result in employers using the defense mechanism of assigning jobs by quotas in order to avoid the implications of the bill.

Unfortunately, Madam Speaker, I have arrived at the sad conclusion that the use of the word "quotas" is nothing more than a code word for what was in 1954 "all deliberate speed" for those who are actually opposed to civil rights, but are afraid and do not have the courage to stand up and say I am opposed to civil rights.

This is not a quota bill. I have been attempting to engage some of my colleagues who suggest that it is a quota bill in debate since the term has been used, at every opportunity, both in the Committee on Education and Labor, upon which I am privileged to serve, and in the Committee on the Judiciary, on which I am also privileged to serve. From that day, that is the day that the bill was introduced in March to this day, no one has dared come forward and entered into a serious discussion or debate to attempt to prove that this is a quota bill.

Under our law, Madam Speaker, anyone who makes a claim is required to prove that claim in a court of law. So if a person says that another person ran over them in an automobile, and that they were negligent, or the person was at fault in a divorce, in any kind of a civil proceeding, or a person's will was not properly contested, the person who makes the accusation is the person who has to prove it, and for the last 6 months I have been attempting to disprove something that never was fully thought out in their minds at all. I have attempted to disprove to my colleagues that the civil rights bill of 1990 is a quota bill, when nothing could be further from the truth.

It is my sad duty to report that the conclusion that I have reached is that the use of the word "quotas" is just a place to hide for people who are not honest enough to come forward and say that they are opposed to a civil rights bill. The reason for this conclusion is I finally had time to go back and look at the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which I guess I should have done at the beginning, at the time this bill was introduced, and sadly I found that those who were opposed to the civil rights bill in 1964, you guessed it, said that that was a quota bill. They attempted to hide behind the allegation that the 1964 civil rights bill was a quota bill, because no one wants to be against civil rights. No one wants to stand up and face the American people and say I am not in favor of civil rights for women, and for Asians, and for blacks, and for disabled people, and for Hispanic people, and all of the people who have been left out of the fiber and content of our society. No one is willing to come forward and say I oppose civil rights, so they say I am for civil rights; but I am not for this bill because it is a quota bill.

In 1964 on January 31, in a discussion in the very House of Representatives where I now stand, which is found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on page 1517 of that date, the following conversation was had, and I quote in part, and I will insert the entire excerpt in the RECORD.

Much unfair and unreasonable criticism has been leveled at the civil rights bill of 1964. This criticism falls into three main categories, and we heard some of that criticism just a few moments ago from the very distinguished and eminent Member of the House, the gentleman from Mississippi. Opponents cry with alarm about what they claim are infringements of the rights of nonminority American citizens. They invoke the baleful specter of Federal inspectors wielding unlimited power over the innocent victims of governmental tyranny. Finally, they attack the constitutionality of the proposed legislation. No one can object to legitimate criticism of any bill, no matter how worthy its objectives. What is objectionable about much of the criticism directed against the civil rights bill * * *

And I remind you parenthetically that we are not talking about the present bill, we are talking about 25 years ago.

* * * what is objectionable about much of the criticism directed against the civil rights bill is that it seriously misrepresents what the bill would do and grossly distorts its effects. The bill seeks simply to protect the rights of American citizens to be free from racial and religious discrimination and to guarantee to them the full enjoyment of the rights of citizenship. It is a constitutionally and morally justified exercise of the obligations and authority of the Federal Government. Let me cite some specifics. It has been claimed that the bill would deprive employers, workers and union members of the right to be free to control their business affairs and their membership. Specifically the charges have been made that the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission to be established by title VII of the bill would have the power to prevent a business from employing and promoting the people it wished and that the "Federal inspector" could then order the hiring and promotion of employees of certain races or religious groups, in other words, quotas. This description of the bill is entirely wrong. The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission would be empowered merely to investigate specific charges of discrimination and to attempt to mediate and conciliate the disputes. It would have no authority to issue any orders to anyone. In the event that wholly voluntary settlements proved to be impossible, the Commission could seek redress in the Federal courts, but it would be required to prove in the court that the particular employer had in fact discriminated against one or more of his employees because of race, religion, or national origin. The employer would have ample opportunity to disprove any of the charges involved and would be the benefit the protection of all the usual judicial procedures.

Further on, on page 1518,

It is likewise not true that the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission would have power to rectify existing "racial or religious imbalance" in employment by requiring the hiring of certain people without regard to their qualifications simply because they are of a given race or religion.

Again, the question of quotas comes up. The answer then was, and is now, only actual discrimination could be stopped, and there is, of course, no provision whatever for depriving unions of the rights and benefits under existing law.

This is a colloquy by Representative Emanual Celler of New York made on January 31, 1964, in response to the same spurious argument that is now being made over and over again about the civil rights bill of 1990. Then, on February 8, 1964, Madam Speaker, in the very House of Representatives in which we now stand, the following colloquy took place between Mr. Gross of Iowa and Mr. Roosevelt of California: "Mr. Chairman," and this is Mr. Gross:

I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I have in the district which I have the honor to represent a fine insurance company known as the Lutheran Mutual Life Insurance Co. How would this bill affect the hiring practices of the Lutheran Mutual Life Insurance Co.?

Mr. ROOSEVELT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Yes, I yield.

Here is Mr. Roosevelt of California giving the answer:

It would affect it only in this manner, that whenever there was a proper, bona fide reason why Lutheran Insurance Co. should have a Lutheran to do a particular job, he would be allowed to do so, but let me give you an example, being a little bit in the insurance business, they would not be able to do, if they would be hiring an actuary, they would not be able to say that it would have to be a Lutheran actuary, because that obviously would not be a bona fide skill necessary to the job, no quotas.

Further in the conversation, the colloquy between Mr. Gross, again, and Mr. Rivers of South Carolina:

Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman to yield to me to ask a pertinent question, and this is very pertinent. We have many thousands of ships coming into the harbor of Charleston, South Carolina, and we also have a very large naval base. Our only longshoreman's union is exclusively colored. Would this affect that union? If it does, my port is out of business.

"Mr. Roosevelt of California," in response, "I would simply have to say to the gentleman that if there was a bona fide reason why only Negroes should be longshoremen, then, of course, they would have to prove it. I could not myself understand such a justification."

Then later in the U.S. Senate on April 23, 1964, during the Senate debate, Senator Williams of New York replied to charges that the measure would require quota hiring on a racial basis, and he stated that. "Quota hiring would be just as unlawful as other forms of discrimination."

April 23, 1964, in the U.S. Senate, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at page 8921, "Mr. President, it is charged," quoting Mr. Williams:

Mr. President, it is also charged that employers including farmers would have to hire employees according to race to establish racial balance in every job classification, and it is said that quotas will be imposed forcing businessmen to hire incompetent and unqualified personnel. Now, turn to the facts. For some reason, the fact that there is nothing whatever in the bill that provides for racial balances or quotas in employment has not been understood by those opposed to civil-rights legislation. They persist in opposing a provision which is not only not contained in the bill but is specifically excluded from it.

Funny how the more, parenthetically, things change, the more they stay the same. Twenty-five years ago people opposed to civil rights made the same argument that people who are afraid and disingenuous enough not to say that they are opposed to civil rights make today. They persist in opposing a provision which is not only not in the law but not contained in the bill.

Those opposed to H.R. 7152 should realize that to hire a Negro solely because he is a Negro is racial discrimination just as much as a white-only employment policy. Both forms of discrimination are prohibited by Title VII of this bill.

Further in the debate, and the reason that I am putting all of this in the RECORD, if I may pause parenthetically, Madam Speaker, and Members, is because I genuinely believe that it is the responsibility of Members of Congress to be serious about the work that we do. I genuinely believe that we have not the responsibility to tell something to the American people unless we truly believe it.

I genuinely believe that one of the problems we have with politics in this country is we have too many politicians who do not say the truth, who say anything and everything to people that they think that people think that they want to hear and do not come forward and be honest and straightforward with the American people.

I want the record forever to reflect whether the President signs this bill or whether the President vetoes this bill, Madam Speaker, that there is not a cold record, that there is an answer even though no one Democrat or Republican who opposed this bill would have the decency to stand up and debate me on many occasions here on the House floor when I asked for persons who allege this to be a quota bill to yield so that we enter into a discussion, not an argument, but a discussion, because if they could prove they were right, the bill ought not pass.

They would not even yield to give me an opportunity to engage in discussion, and that I find to be disingenous. It is disingenuous, because you cannot hide behind the word quotas when we are talking about something as fundamental in our society as the rights of people, because the sooner we put the matter of race and gender and ethnicity and religion behind us, the sooner we can get on to solving the real problems that exist in this country.

So I make this record, not because I think that it will change the President's mind, Madam Speaker, but so that the American people will know and so the that there will be a permanent record in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that at least there was one voice crying in the wilderness who was able to prove not only that this is not a quota bill but that they know this is not a quota bill.

I cannot believe that anybody who has been licensed to practice law as long as the Attorney General and the White House counsel in the person of Mr. Thornburgh and Mr. Boyden Gray with 61 years of experience in the practice of law between them, could not come up with three or four sentences that explained to the American people the facts.

You see, asserting that it is a quota bill is a conclusion.

That is like saying that this Chamber is square. The proof of the pudding is in the eating. If we prove it is a square by giving the dimensions because it may be rectangular and not square, the American people, if they are going to believe their President, if he vetoes this bill, are entitled to have a straightforward answer from him. A straightforward answer is not that I am in favor of civil rights in this country, but I veto this bill because it is a quota bill. Explain. I wish the President would explain to the American people. Not in legal mumbo-jumbo, but with 3,000 lawyers that we pay for, working for the Justice Department, and with an Attorney General and a White House counsel and lots of other lawyers, I know that those people are smart enough to come up with three or four sentences to just explain in clear, precise language that this is a quota bill because look on page so and so, and it does this. Look on page so and so and it does this. If we put these things together, that will mean that employers will be hiring unqualified people. Members see my point is that no one is in favor of quotas. Everyone is looking for an opportunity in this country. No one is trying to force any person to hire an unqualified worker.

What we are trying to do is force people to stop discriminating against qualified workers because there have been too many women, and too many Asians, and too many blacks, and too many whites males as a matter of fact, too many Hispanics, too many disabled people, people not part of the good old boy network who do not have an uncle who works for the company, and who do not know when job opportunities come up. These are the people who suffer because they do not have an opportunity to serve, the people who train, the people who become their supervisers, because they happen to know somebody. We need to end all forms of discrimination. We need to end it now.

I am making this record in order to ensure that perhaps one day someone will look back and say, here is a cold record that clearly demonstrates not only was there a discussion that this was not a quota bill now, but how could it be in 1964? We see the same argument was made. It is nothing but a guest in an evening gown. It is a guess that this is a quota bill, but we can wrap it up and put it up, but if we put earrings on a hog, it is still a hog. That is all they are trying to say is it is a quota bill. They do not change the fact that it is not a quota bill. They do not want to be generous enough to come forward and give the American people intelligent reasons why they suggested it is a quota bill, because they cannot. They can never explain to the American people straightforward and directly that this is a quota bill because of one, two, three. Before the President of the United States, Madam Speaker, takes this consitutional responsibility to veto a civil rights bill, I think the American people are entitled to an explanation.

Back on May 4 1964 Senator Allott of Colorado introduced an amendment making clear that Congress in an act entitled seven, did not intend to impose a quota system on employers and in unions, and did not intend to force them to overcome racial imbalance. The sense of this amendment was incorporated in a Dixon-Manson compromise and appears in section 703(j) of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 at pages 9881 and 9882 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the Senate of the United States, of the day of May 4, 1964. The following is found:

Mr. ALLOTT. Mr. President, I have heard over and over again in the last few weeks the charge that title VII, the Equal Employment Opportunity section, would impose a quota system on employers and labor unions. There are 2 variations of the argument. One is that because title VI specifically says that "desegregation" shall not mean assignment of students to public schools in order to overcome racial imbalance, and title VII contains no such disclaimer in relation to employment practices, then it follows that title VII is intended to require hiring to overcome racial imbalance in the work force.

The other variation is that employers will hire members of minority groups regardless of their qualifications, to avoid having any problems with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

Parenthetically, I heard those words as late as yesterday, Madam Speaker, and it chills me that people could make the same argument 25 years ago and not have anything to stand on except a bare allegation, because we have 24 years of history, is the point I am trying to make when I drive to my conclusion. They were wrong then, and they are wrong now because we have had 25 years of history, and no employer has been to this Congress asking Congress to repeal title VII of the Civil Rights Act, and been able to demonstrate that we have any quotas. We do not have any quotas in this country.

Back to the text, I get a little swept away sometimes.

The result, either way, so the argument goes, is that a quota system will be imposed with employers hiring in unions except members on the basis of the percentage of population represented by each specific minority group.

Of course, we know that is not true, or I would not be standing in the well today. Others would be standing in the well, and I would be standing with them to abolish the Civil Rights Act because the people who have been discriminated against do not want to end up discriminating against other people. That is not what we are here for. Back to the text.

I do not agree with the argument. The junior Senator from Florida, Mr. Smathers and I discussed this for the RECORD one evening here on the Senate floor. I believe I made it clear at that time that I do not believe title VII would result in imposition of a quota system. Further, I believe that a quota system of hiring would be a terrible mistake not only from the viewpoint of the employer, but from the viewpoint of the employee. From the viewpoint of the minority, as well as the majority. Basically, I believe that the color of a man's skin or the faith to which he adheres should be completely extraneous considerations when an employer hires, or labor union admits to membership, just as it should be estraneous in granting the right to vote and assigning him to a school. But the argument has been made, and I am, that employers are also concerned with the argument. I have, therefore, prepared an amendment which I believe makes it clear that no quota system will be imposed if title VII becomes law. Very briefly it provides that no finding on unlawful employment practices may be made solely on the basis of racial imbalance.

That provision is not only in existing law of title 703(j), but is again written out in boxcar letters in the civil rights bill of 1990.

My point is this, over and over again, the argument is made that this is a quota bill. That is the only defense that the President has put forward against signing this legislation. That is the only defense that those who proclaim to be great saviors of liberty and justice for all people have put forward as a reason for voting against the civil rights bill.

The second argument is that this is a lawyers' bonanza. I happen to be a lawyer, and I think quite a bit of lawyers, not because I am one, but because I have eyes and ears, and I can look around and see it is easy to jump on lawyers because they are not very popular. They are, I think, next to used car salesmen, the most distrusted people in the hierarchy of professions in our society. However, some lawyers do do good work. We would not have the bill that advises a person that a garbage truck or dump truck is about to back over someone, like a worker down in a ditch digging, except for lawyers. We would not have the warning that is on toys and on plastic bags that keep people from suffocating their children, except for lawyers. We would not have the warnings and the Product Safety Commission to make sure the devices are tested and manufacturers would have the incentive to make sure that products are safe. Automobiles, airbags, seatbelts, except for lawyers, because lawyers brought cases showing that it was cheaper to do those things than it was to injure people. All Members remember that case in a 1964 Pinto automobile, we cannot leave manufacturers free to make decisions about our safety. We cannot leave manufacturers free to make decisions about job discrimination because the same manufacturers, Ford Motor Co., 1964, knew from tests that they had run that the gasoline tank on a 1964 Comet automobile would cause statistically a certain number of automobile accidents, and they knew that if a rear-end collision occurred, that because of the way that this faulty construction of the gas tank, that a certain number of those cars would burst into flames.

They knew that based upon the number of those cars on the highway, they could statistically tell approximately the number of people who would burn to death in these cars, but it was cheaper for them to pay the families of those people who got burned up in the cars than it was to recall all the cars and replace it with a $15 collar to prevent that gasoline tank from exploding and burning these people alive. It was called cost-benefit analysis.

I do not want that kind of company making that kind of decision about who goes to work on their jobs. We need Government regulations, and the reason we have it is because lawyers sued them and they should have.

Whenever you hear people talking ill about lawyers, first consider the source and them consider that lawyers are not prefect. They are good and bad and indifferent just like the rest of the people in our socieity; but once in a while they do good work.

This is not a lawyers' bonanza. First of all, discrimination cases come in two categories, people who do not get hired at all on the job or people who get fired on the job. Most people, especially women, suffer the indignities of the discrimination if they get the job, because jobs are hard to get in our society. There is nothing magic about my saying that. Everybody here knows that. Everybody within the sound of my voice knows that jobs are hard to get.

So then if a woman, say, is working on a job and she is victimized by sexual harassment or otherwise discriminated against, 9 times out of 10 she is going to stay on the job and suffer the indignities and keep the job, so she never ends up in a lawyer's office. It is the person who does not get hired at all, who gets fired, or the woman who gets sick and tired of it and finally leaves the job, who ends up in a lawyer's office.

Now, this person is on unemployment compensation, if they are lucky enough to get that. Those who would say this is a lawyer's bonanza because some lawyer is willing to take that case after the person has gone through the EEOC, they forget about the EEOC that they also argued against in 1964. Oh, they said it was going to be the most horrible thing that ever happened.

The EEOC has been a great savior for the over-litigious in our society. It kept a lot of cases out of litigation, because the EEOC acts as a sieve. Cases have to be filed with the EEOC. The average lawyer, before he or she invests $25,000 or $35,000 of their money in one of these cases, because that is about what you have tc invest, and most lawyers are not that wealthy, so first you have to make the money on another EEOC case or an automobile accident case or a lot of divorce cases or criminal cases. You have to earn the $25,000 that you invest in this civil rights case to begin with. You have to earn that money first, pay taxes on it, then invest in it this lawsuit. Then if you get to court, most lawyers before they will invest that kind on money, and it costs that kind of money because, guess what, the manufacturer or the company hires the most expensive, most prestigious, largest law firm in Duluth, MN, in Podunk, TX, in San Diego, CA. They get the big law firm. The injured worker, the alleged injured worker, injured by way of discrimination, gets the individual practitioner. I am not trying to put them down, but it is usually a David against Goliath situation to begin with.

Their lawyers charge $500 per hour. When I practiced title VII law, I had one standing request on the few occasions when I was able to win one of these cases, because you have to persuade the judge, who is the trier of the facts in most cases, that the person has geen discriminated against. Most title VII lawsuits, most title VII claims are filtered out by the EEOC. Probably somewhere between 10 and 15 percent ever get beyond the EEOC, so 85 percent of the cases never get to the court for the lawyer's bonanza to begin with. Of the 15 percent that end up in court, fully 65 percent or those get settled short of trial; of the 35 percent or the 15 percent that end up going to trial, the claimant loses in at least 75 percent of the cases.

Now, if you can get to the point where you get the judge who tries the cases to decide that your client has been discriminated against, then you come to the amount of money that the person is owed for the wages that they lost, because most of the time people who have been discriminated against only get back wages, so the employer gets to fire them, keep them off the job, unconstitutionally and against their rights for 5 years, and then gives them what they would have earned had they worked for that 5 years, with interest back. That is the ways it works.

So if you want to discriminate against a woman, just go ahead and fire her and you put her salary aside, and at the end of 5 years, if you end up paying that, you probably would end up paying 50 cents on the dollar anyway.

This is not a bonanza for lawyers, but while we are on the subject of lawyers, when you hear those, Madam Speaker, speak of the fact that this is a lawyers' bonanza, they leave out one important fact. They are afraid of juries, because the civil rights bill of 1990 provides for compensatory damages or punitive damages. Compensatory damages would be the amount of money that a jury would find would fairly and reasonably compensate the person for the harm done to them above the wages that they lost. In other words, if they have a nervous breakdown or if they feel less of themselves as a human being or they are not able to find other employment or the usual case that they get fired from the job because they are discriminated against and then they end up and cannot find another job because they are blackballed, so they end up losing their house and they end up losing their car. That is compensation the jury may be able to award them to make up for what they lost over and above the salary that they lost.

Madam Speaker, I will wrap this up briefly. The point I wanted to make about jury trials is that I am fearful of people who are afraid of jury trials, because it is voters who serve on juries. Voters serve on juries, the same people who are smart enough to elect the President and all the Members of Congress, they say the people who do not want jury trials say that you are not smart enough to decide whether a person has been discriminated against, and if so, how much money they should get. They are not going to make that argument to you, though, but the next time you hear some Member of Congress say they are opposed to jury trials in discrimination cases, ask them, "Do you not think that if I am smart enough to elect you, that I am smart enough to sit on a jury and decide whether a person has been discriminated against?"

I guess they think that lawyers are going to pull the wool over your eyes.

For myself, I trust juries and I think that those who do not smack of elitism when they do not trust juries.

I hope the President signs this bill, not for me, because by the grace of God I have got to the point in my life where I can fend off discrimination in any form, but most people never have the great privileges that God has given me. He has given me the opportunity not just to be here as a Member of Congress, but he has given me the opportunity to have many things in my life. And it is not for my children. The President does not need to sign the civil rights bill for my children, because as long as I have breath, I promise them that I will ensure all five of them that they will never be the victims of discrimination of any kind or character.

But I would like personally for the President to sign this civil rights bill, Madam Speaker, for my father, because my father was subjected to discrimination. There is nothing he can do about it, except that he is still alive. I think that somehow in some small way all of the indignities that he suffered, all the ditches that he dug when he was much more qualified, when he worked at a Sinclair Oil refinery in Houston, TX, all the toiling that he did with his hands because they not only had segregated jobs there, but they had segregated washrooms where people showered. I think that the indignities that he suffered and the pride that he has in his son because he was able to get me an education would be made whole if we did not have to fight for civil rights any more.

Behind me on this beautiful wood there are five words written, and I wonder how often the Members of this House really look back there to see them. I really wonder how often the Members of this House listen to the prayer every morning. The Chaplain prayed this morning that we have the wisdom to do what is right and the courage to do it in God's name.

Those words behind me are "Union, Justice, Tolerance, Liberty and Peace." I think that is what we ought to be here for.

Sometimes we cannot see the forest for the trees. We have many problems to solve in this country, much more important than fighting a fight for civil rights in 1990.

There are some of us who have talent, Madam Speaker, there are some of us who have gifts that God gave us. But as long as we have to stand here and watch the gate so that women and Asians and blacks and Hispanics and Jewish people and disabled people and people do not step on each other just because something about our nature as human beings make us feel a little bit better if we are able to step on somebody. That is what discrimination is. If we could just pass enough laws to stop that from happening and if the President would sign this bill, then we could turn our talents away from that. I am not saying I have any talents, but I promise, instead of attempting to pass civil rights legislation for the next 20 years that I am in Congress, we can solve problems like homelessness, because this a country where we should not have people sleeping on benches, sleeping in parks, on bridges, with no places to sleep at night.

This is America.

Hunger, we throw away enough food in restaurants every night to feed the hungry people in this country. We have grain sitting in silos spoiling, Madam Speaker, because we do not have a distribution system to feed our people. This is not India, this is America. We need housing for our people, for all of our people, decent housing for our people. We need to educate our people. It costs $42,000 to send one of them to prison for a year. It costs $42,000 to send one of them to Harvard University for a year. Something is wrong. Those of us who have committed our lives to fighting to civil rights ought to be able to put that sword down and pick up the plowshare to fight for education and housing and health care.

We have 37 million working Americans who do not have any kind of insurance. If they got sick tonight, they would have to go to the charity hospital in whatever town they live in.

Let me put down my sword fighting for civil rights; I did not come to Congress to fight for civil rights. I came to Congress to fight for all people, to do something about crime. There is nothing magic about the fact that 98 percent of the people in prison have an 8th grade education. We are failing them in our educational system.

Let us stop fighting for civil rights and pick up the plowshare of fighting together so that we may have no more crime, no more hunger. People with skills and jobs, education, housing, and health care.

In Second Corinthians it says, "If my people who are called by my name will humble themselves and pray and seek my faith and turn from their wicked ways, then will I hear from heaven and heal their land."

Our land needs healing.

Mr. President, I cannot address you; Madam Speaker, I can address you. He really ought to sign this civil rights bill. He ought to let us as Americans together go down the road as one people. We ought to stop looking at each other being tall, short, old, young, rich, poor, black, white; we ought to start looking at each other as Americans.

We all got here in one boat or another, and it does not matter what boat we got here in, we are in the same boat now. And we have problems.

Too many of us have to spend our lives and our liberty and our fortune fighting for something that was guaranteed to us in the Bill of Rights.

Sign this bill, Mr. President, and let us move on to the challenges of America. God bless you.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conferees expect the Department and the Office of Management and Budget to adhere to the 1991 program detailed in the following table:

[2] Numbers in brackets represent units/amounts funded in a separate account.

The conference agreement includes $1,337,443,000 for a restructured section 202 housing for the elderly or handicapped program. This funding level will provide for a fiscal year 1991 program of 12,000 incremental units for elderly and handicapped persons, 5,033 units more than proposed in the budget request. Of the 12,000 units provided for, 10,000 are for elderly and 2,000 are for handicapped, with 500 of the handicapped units to be allocated for individuals suffering from acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

The conference agreement includes $440,600,000 for 16,500 section 8 loan management set asides to address the prepayment issue. This is the same amount recommended by both the House and Senate. The conferees have also agreed to include language permitting up to $200,000,000 of the loan management funds to be available for the new preservation activities as provided for in the conference agreement on the housing authorization bill. The conferees urge the Department to give a high priority to implementing the prepayment provisions of the housing authorization bill when it is enacted into law.

The conference agreement includes $54,250,000 for special grants to be used in accordance with the terms and conditions specified in this report. The conference agreement also includes language making $14,000,000 of fiscal year 1990 community development grant funds available for technical assistance grants for economic development-type projects. The conferees understand that this $14,000,000 is no longer needed to replenish the basic community development grants account as urban development action grant recaptures are sufficient to cover basic program needs.

Amendment No. 19: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate providing that of the funds appropriated for contract renewals $3,654,519,750 shall be for existing certificates, $3,102,872,600 shall be for housing vouchers, and $977,593,050 shall be for loan management units.

Amendments No. 20: Deletes language proposed by the Senate that will permit the Department to renew units for less than a five-year period in the event of sequestration.

Amendment No. 21: Restores language proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate permitting the transfer of up to $300,000,000 from amendment funds in the annual contributions for assisted housing account to meet any shortfalls in funds for section 8 renewals, amended to permit the transfer of up to $150,000,000.

The conferees direct that the Department request any additional funds necessary due to shortfalls in the estimate or as a result of sequestration in a 1991 supplemental or in the 1992 budget.

Amendment No. 22: Appropriates $70,000,000 for rental rehabilitation grants as proposed by the Senate, instead of $135,000,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 23: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate deleting the House language appropriating $491,570,000 for 8,035 section 202 units and including language providing in 1991 for the use of funds transferred from the annual contributions for assisted housing account and limiting the interest rate on direct loans to 9.25 percent, including an allowance adequate to cover administrative costs and probable losses.

The conferees have agreed to delete the House language regarding the section 202 program due to the restructuring of this program and the inclusion of $1,337,443,000 for 12,000 section 202 units in the annual contributions for assisted housing account.

The preparation and submission of applications for the section 202 program require the investment of substantial time and money by the applicants. Moreover, they often involve the negotiation of commitments from churches, foundations and local governments. An application that is rejected on technical grounds because of a mistake of fact or interpretation by the Department of Housing and Urban Development is a loss to the program, to the applicant, and to the elderly residents that the project would have served. The committee of conference is informed that during its fiscal year 1990 rounds, HUD caused an undue hardship to United Church Homes by rejecting its application on technical grounds, without giving notice of the rejection, and not affording the applicant a reasonable and timely opportunity to respond. For these reasons, the conferees hereby urge the Secretary to give a priority in the fiscal year 1991 section 202 allocations to any of the United Church Homes projects determined qualified, but which were not funded from amounts available in fiscal year 1990.

Amendments No. 24: Appropriates $9,500,000 for congregate services, instead of $7,000,000 as proposed by the House and $12,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 25: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

$2,100,000,000: Provided, That of the funds made available under this heading, $125,000,000 shall not become available for obligation until September 20, 1991, and pursuant to section 202(b) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Reaffirmation Act of 1987, this action is a necessary (but secondary) result of a significant policy change: Provided further, That the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall report to the Committees on Appropriations by February 1, 1991, as to whether or not funds provided under this heading are sufficient to satisfy 100 percent of the performance funding system for fiscal year 1991, unadjusted by unrealized or estimated savings

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

Amendment No. 26: Appropriates $8,000,000 for housing counseling assistance as proposed by the Senate, instead of $5,000,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 27: Deletes language proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate that referenced $70,000,000 of excess rental receipts that were to be transferred to the annual contributions for assisted housing account. The conference agreement in the annual contributions for assisted housing account does not include the transfer of $70,000,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 28: Restores language proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate establishing a limitation of $1,100,000 for nonprofit sponsored assistance loans in fiscal year 1991.

Amendment No. 29: Appropriates $150,000,000 for drug elimination grants for low-income housing as proposed by the Senate, instead of $100,000,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 30: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate delaying the availability of funds, except for the $1,000,000 for contracts, technical assistance, and training, until September 1, 1991.

HOMELESS ASSISTANCE

Amendment No. 31: Appropriates $73,164,000 for the emergency shelter grants program as proposed by the Senate, instead of $75,000,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 32: Appropriates $150,000,000 for the transitional and supportive housing demonstration program as proposed by the House, instead of $143,592,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 33: Appropriates $11,263,000 for supplemental assistance for facilities to assist the homeless as proposed by the Senate, instead of $15,000,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 34: Appropriates $105,000,000 for section 8 moderate rehabilitation single room occupancy as proposed by the Senate, instead of $100,000,000 as proposed by the House.

SOLAR ENERGY AND ENERGY CONSERVATION BANK

Amendment No. 35: Restores language proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate withdrawing any recaptured funds in the assistance for solar and conservation improvements account. The conferees have agreed to this action because the amounts estimated to be withdrawn are too small to effectively continue the program. The conferees direct the Secretary to undertake a comprehensive review of actions which could be taken to improve energy conservation and efficiency in single and multifamily housing in light of the growing price of oil caused by potential oil shortages. The report should be submitted by November 1, 1991.

COMMUNITY PLANNING AND DEVELOPMENT

Amendment No. 36: Appropriates $3,200,000,000 for community development grants as proposed by the Senate, instead of $3,000,000,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 37: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate earmarking $31,930,000 for grants to Indian tribes.

Amendment Nos. 38, 39 and 40: Inserts conforming technical changes to language as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 41: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate earmarking $2,000,000 for a neighborhood development demonstration program.

Amendment No. 42: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate raising the limitation on guaranteed loans under section 108 to $250,000,000, instead of $140,000,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 43: Appropriates $13,000,000 for urban homesteading as proposed by the Senate, instead of $15,000,000 as proposed by the House.

POLICY DEVELOPMENT AND RESEARCH

Amendment No. 44: Appropriates $28,500,000 for research and technology, instead of $30,000,000 as proposed by the House and $27,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The conferees are in agreement on the following changes to the budget request:

+$8,000,000 for program evaluation and monitoring activities. This amount, together with a $2,160,000 increase in the salaries and expenses account and a $1,443,000 increase in the Office of Inspector General, will permit a total of $11,603,000 for evaluation and monitoring activities.

−$3,375,000 as a general reduction to be applied at the discretion of the Department, except that none of the reduction is to be applied to the annual housing survey.

+$125,000 to determine the literacy and education needs in public and Indian housing projects throughout the Nation.

+$250,000 for research and technical assistance projects specifically related to persons with disabilities.

+$250,000 for lead paint research. This amount is in addition to the $250,000 requested in the budget.

+$250,000 for joint labor-management training programs to specifically address lead paint worker protection.

The 1990 conference agreement added $500,000 above the budget request for housing technology research. The committee of conference expects that HUD will continue this important research.

FAIR HOUSING AND EQUAL OPPORTUNITY

Amendment No. 45: Appropriates $12,410,000 for fair housing activities as proposed by the Senate, instead of $12,200,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 46: Earmarks $5,810,000 for the fair housing initiatives as proposed by the Senate, instead of $5,600,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 47: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate extending the Fair Housing Initiatives Demonstration Program under section 561(e) until September 30, 1991.

MANAGEMENT AND ADMINISTRATION

Amendment No. 48: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

For necessary administrative and nonadministrative expenses of the Department of Housing and Urban Development, not otherwise provided for, including not to exceed $7,000 for official reception and representation expenses, $825,500,000, of which $396,000,000 shall be provided from the various funds of the Federal Housing Administration: Provided, That during fiscal year 1991, notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Department of Housing and Urban Development shall maintain an average employment of at least 1,411 for public and Indian housing programs and an average field employment of at least 1,950 staff years for multifamily insured mortgage programs and activities.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conferees are in agreement with the following changes from the budget estimate:

+$10,800,000 for 200 staff years in the Federal Housing Administration. The conferees agree that these additional staff years are to be allocated only to field offices.

+$1,400,000 for the Housing Assistance Council.

+$2,160,000 for 40 staff years to increase HUD's in-house program evaluation and monitoring activities. The conferees agree that of the increased staff years, 20 are for the Office of Policy Development and Research, 10 are for the Office of Housing, 5 are for the Office of Public and Indian Housing, 3 are for the Office of Community Planning and Development, and 2 are for the Office of Fair Housing and Equal Opportunity.

+$1,750,000 for 35 field staff years in the public and Indian housing programs, to be allocated only to field offices.

+$486,000 for 9 staff years to support the Office of Drug-Free Neighborhoods, which is being transferred from the Office of General Counsel.

−$486,000 for 9 staff years to support the Office of Drug-Free Neighborhoods. This office is being transferred to the Office of Public and Indian Housing.

+$2,057,000 for 38 staff years in the Office of General Counsel. This decrease is offset by an addition of 40 staff years for HUD's field legal services.

+$1,350,000 for 25 staff years for data management improvement and preservation activities in the Washington Office of Housing.

−$270,000 for five staff years in the Office of Policy Development and Research.

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following:

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, regulation or other requirement, the Secretary shall not require any public housing agency or Indian housing authority to seek competitive bids for the procurement of any line of insurance when such public housing agency or Indian housing authority purchases such line of insurance from a nonprofit insurance entity, owned and controlled by public housing agencies or Indian housing authorities, and approved by the Secretary. In establishing standards for approval of such nonprofit insurance entities, the Secretary shall be assured that such entities have sufficient surplus capital to meet reasonably expected losses, reliable accounting systems, sound actuarial projections, and employees experienced in the insurance industry. The Secretary shall not place restrictions on the investment of funds of any such entity that is regulated by the insurance department of any State that describes the types of investments insurance companies licensed in such State may make. With regard to such entities that are not so regulated, the Secretary may establish investment guidelines that are comparable to State law regulating the investments of insurance companies.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

In the mid-1980's, many public housing authorities were unable to obtain liability or property insurance or were required to pay very large premiums to obtain minimal coverage. In response to that crisis, a number of public housing authorities banded together and formed nonprofit insurance pools and risk retention groups under State intragovernmental cooperation laws or the Federal Risk Retention Act of 1986. All of these groups were formed at the encouragement, and in many instances, with the assistance of the Department of Housing and Urban Development. When HUD approved the formation and operating plans of these groups, it granted a waiver from the requirement that insurance be procured only by competitive bidding to public housing authorities that joined such groups. These groups have been extremely successful in providing low cost insurance to public and Indian housing authorities. The Department has proposed regulations that would revoke the waiver. The committee of conference agrees that the waiver should be continued and has included language to permit that. Housing authorities will still be able to make the decision from which company they wish to obtain insurance coverage.

Amendment No. 63: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate revising the community development grant allocation formula for cities and counties affected by annexation.

The conferees are in agreement on the following changes to the budget request:

+$1,000,000 for the Technical Study Group on Cigarettes and Little Cigar Safety. Of the $1,000,000 the CPSC shall transfer $600,000 to the National Institute of Standards and Technology for designing and implementing the further technical work and studies that are mandated by the Fire Safe Cigarette Act (P.L. 101-352). ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY Amendment No. 68: Appropriates $974,700,000 for salaries and expenses, instead of $995,000,000 as proposed by the House and $949,700,000 as proposed by the Senate.

+$1,250,000 and 17.5 workyears for title III, Community-Right-to-Know, including 7 workyears for emergency planning, 7 workyears for emissions inventory, and 3.5 workyears for enforcement,

−$1,500,000 from the Office of Policy, Planning and Evaluation,

−$400,000 from the Office of Administration and Resources Management.

The Committee of conference agrees with the underlying concern expressed in the Senate Committee Report regarding the Office of Pollution Prevention. However, the conferees will not require the Office of Pollution Prevention to move to the Office of the Administrator as directed by the Senate. Rather, the Environmental Protection Agency will be provided with one additional fiscal year to develop a credible waste reduction, or pollution prevention, program. If, based upon the criteria stated below, the agency is unable to demonstrate that it has developed a program to minimize the production of waste that enters the Nation's air, land, and water other than through treatment, storage, or disposal of waste already generated, EPA can expect that the Office of Pollution Prevention will be moved to the Office of the Administrator.

The conferees intend to evaluate EPA's pollution prevention commitment based on the following:

1. Development and implementation of a pollution prevention strategy that addresses the full range of environmental problems including agriculture, energy, and Federal agency activity, as well as from industrial point sources.

2. Development of analytical tools that can be used by both the Federal government and the private sector to identify the economic benefits of pollution prevention.

3. Development of a strategy that articulates how the agency's strategic planning process and other management systems will be utilized to promote pollution prevention.

4. Development and support for an aggressive outreach program that involves business and industry, citizen and consumer organizations, and all levels of government in promoting the Nation's pollution prevention efforts.

5. Development of a process that assures full and explicit consideration of pollution prevention opportunities in the agency's development of regulations, and

6. Development of a program for promoting pollution prevention by providing information to the public on the environmental implications of consumer products.

Amendment No. 70: Allows $13,107,000 of the appropriation for the office of inspector general to be derived from the Hazardous Substance Superfund trust fund as proposed by the House, instead of $11,941,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 71: Allows $575,000 of the appropriation for the office of the inspector general to be derived from the Leaking Underground storage Tank Trust Fund as proposed by the House, instead of $524,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 72: Appropriates $254,900,000 for research and development as proposed by the House, instead of $249,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The committee of the conference is in agreement on the following changes to the budget request:

+$400,000 for the Institute for Environmental Issues and Policy Assessment at Southern University of Louisiana,

+$200,000 for a research project on the Formosan subterranean termite at Louisiana State University,

−$7,000,000 from the Exploratory Grants Program,

+$750,000 for electric and magnetic field research,

+$2,000,000 for oil spill research,

−$1,000,000 from supplies, equipment, and other operating expenses.

Amendment No. 73: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate limiting to $35,600,000 the amount available for laboratory equipment, supplies, and other operating expenses in support of research and development instead of $11,600,000 as proposed by the House. The limitation includes supplies and other operating expenses, which was not included by the House.

Amendment No. 74: Appropriates $1,006,525,000 for abatement, control, and compliance as proposed by the House, instead of $985,300,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 75: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following:

: Provided further, That notwithstanding any other provision of law, the lease or purchase of a computer, from funds appropriated under this paragraph, to support the regional acid deposition monitoring program, and the planning and site acquisition for a new DPA Center for Ecology Research and Training, shall be established in the Bay City, Michigan, vicinity: Provided further, That notwithstanding any other provisions of law, from funds appropriated under this heading, the Administrator is authorized to make grants to "Federally recognized Indian tribes" on such terms and conditions as he deems appropriate for the development of multimedia environmental programs.

The conferees agree to the siting and acquisition of the computer for acid rain deposition monitoring in the Bay City, Michigan, vicinity. The conferees agree to insert language permitting multimedia environmental demonstration grants for Indian tribes. This language will assist Indian tribes in developing the capacity to manage their own environmental program by providing a less cumbersome means for the tribes to receive Federal assistance.

Amendment No. 76: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: $40,000,000.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate. The conferees agree to the following changes from the budget request:

+$21,000,000 for the Ann Arbor Mobile Vehicle Emissions Laboratory and facilities,

+$6,000,000 for the Christopher Columbus Center of Marine Research and Exploration,

+$500,000 for the Robert S. Kerr Environmental Research Laboratory in Ada, Oklahoma, −$500,000 as a general reduction to be applied at the Administrator's discretion.

Amendment No. 77: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

: Provided, That none of the funds previously appropriated for the design and renovation of a Superfund laboratory at Edison, New Jersey to test and evaluate innovative technologies, except for those funds necessary for education outreach or permit applications, including design work essential to such applications, shall be spent in fiscal year 1991.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate. The committee of conference supports research and development of innovative hazardous waste treatment technologies. The Congress appropriated $5,600,000 in fiscal year 1988 for the design and renovation of a Superfund laboratory at Edison, New Jersey, to test and evaluate innovative technologies. Recently, representatives of the regional office of the EPA have suggested that an additional $8,000,000 is required to construct and complete the project. No formal Administration request has been made. This raises serious questions about the overall scope and design of the project. Moreover, the EPA has failed to satisfy environmental concerns of local officials and to secure the support of the State. Until such time as the agency prepares a formal plan for the project and secures local and state cooperation, the committee of conference has serious reservations about proceeding with the expenditure of the funds previously appropriated for design, renovation, or acquisition of equipment for the proposed facility. Consequently, the committee of conference has restricted the expenditure of such for the project, while allowing EPA to proceed to engage in community education and outreach efforts and to proceed with the permitting process, including design work essential to those applications.

Amendment No. 78: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate inserting language appropriating $1,616,228,000 for the hazardous substance superfund, instead of $1,610,200,000 as proposed by the House. The amendment offered by the Senate provides that $860,900,000 is derived from general revenues with the balance derived from the trust fund.

The conferees are in agreement on the following changes to the budget request:

+$5,000,000 for Koppers Texarkana Superfund site relocation,

+$10,000,000 for the National Institute for Environmental Health Sciences (NIEHS) university based research and education program,

+$300,000 for small, minority, and women contractor clean up training grants,

+$10,000,000 for NIEHS worker training,

+$400,000 for a NOAA study at the dump site off the Farallon Islands,

+$2,000,000 for Superfund research at Clark Atlanta University,

+$3,500,000 to establish a pilot program for treating mining wastes in Butte, Montana,

+$100,000 for technical assistance to local governments named as potentially responsible parties in Vermont,

+$495,000 for the Energy and Environmental Research Center at the University of North Dakota,

+$2,500,000 for the Gulf Coast Hazardous Substance Research Center in Beaumont, Texas,

+$4,000,000 for the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry.

−$162,067,000 as a general reduction to be applied at the Administrator's discretion.

The House report stated that EPA should track measures of Superfund program success that focus on achievements, or outputs. The Committee directed the agency to establish a baseline of these outputs and provide the Committees on Appropriations this information. While the information received was a step in the right direction, there are several further steps needed to enable EPA to better present its achievements to the public.

The conferees direct EPA to supplementing and expand the information they are currently collecting to present a better overall picture of Superfund achievements. The agency should consider supplement its information by tracking site management on a site-by-site basis; developing a site history including a list of community contacts involved in the site; providing more comprehensive information on the potentially responsible parties (PRP) and the PRP search; demonstrating how major health threats have been identified and dealt with at each site; tracking the amount of money recovered by the Agency as compared to its cost expended on a site; tracking the time from National Priorities List listing to the first actual removal; and finally, reviewing the results of the application of the technologies employed at the various sites. The conferees, therefore, direct EPA to develop a plan to incorporate the above suggestions into their current work measuring Superfund outputs. This plan should be submitted to the Committees by December 31, 1990.

Amendment No. 79: Limits funds available to the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry to $48,500,000, instead of $47,500,000 as proposed by the House and $50,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 80: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate permitting $7,000 in interest payments to be paid to the City of New Brighton, Minnesota.

Amendment No. 81: Appropriates $65,000,000 for the Leaking Underground Storage Tank Trust fund as proposed by the Senate, instead of $75,000,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 82: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

For necessary expenses to carry out the purposes of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, as amended, and the Water Quality Act of 1987, $2,100,000,000, to remain available until expended, of which $2,047,800,000 shall be for title VI of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, as amended; and $16,500,000 shall be for making grants authorized under section 104(b)(3) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, as amended; and $35,700,000 shall be for title V of the Water Quality Act of 1987, consisting of $15,700,000 for section 510 and $20,000,000 for section 513: Provided, That notwithstanding any other provision of law, the $15,700,000 for section 510 and all funds that have been or will be appropriated under Section 510 or Public Law 98-386, as amended by Public Law 99-88, shall be used to construct an international sewage treatment plant and related facilities in San Diego to treat Tijuana wastewater, and to carry out all activities, including planning, design, right-of-way acquisition, and building, which are necessary to complete that construction: Provided further, That, notwithstanding sections 602(b)(6) or 201(g)(1) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, as amended, of the funds appropriated in this paragraph, amounts awarded in a capitalization grant to an agency of any State, including funds transferred pursuant to section 205(m), shall be available for providing assistance in that State for the construction of publicly owned treatment works as defined in section 212 of that Act.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate. The conferees direct EPA to administratively restore $4,272,877 in wastewater construction grant funding previously awarded to the City of Watsonville, California, EPA Grant No. C-06-1128-120. This grant is for eligible and allowable cost increases.

Amendment No. 83: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate adding grants and loans to the provision requiring the Administrator to annually establish a goal of at least 8 percent of total contracts awarded to minority- and women-owned businesses.

Amendment No. 84: A comma will be inserted after the word "grants" as proposed by the Senate, instead of without the comma as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 85: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

During fiscal year 1991, notwithstanding any other provision of law, average employment in the headquarter's offices of the Environmental Protection Agency shall not exceed: (1) 45 workyears for the Immediate Office of the Administrator, including 1 to support the Superfund program; (2) 52 workyears for the Office of Congressional and Legislative Affairs, including 2 to support the Superfund program; (3) 66 workyears for the Office of Communications and Public Affairs, including 3 to support the Superfund program; (4) 169 workyears for the Office of General Counsel, including 12 to support the Superfund program, 11 to support program management, 1 to support the Leaking Underground Storage Tank Trust Fund program, and 1 to support the implementaton of the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act Amendments of 1988; (5) 52 workyears for the Office of International Activities; (6) 35 workyears for the Office of Federal Activities; (7) 270 workyears for the Office of Policy, Planning, and Evaluation, including 13 to support the Superfund program and 1 to support the Leaking Underground Storage Tank Trust Fund program; (8) 1,367 workyears for the Office of Administration and Resources Management, including 263 to support the Superfund program, 9 to support the Leaking Underground Storage Tank Trust Fund program, and 13 to support to the implementation of the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act Amendments of 1988.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

Amendment No. 86: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate directing EPA to issue a final decision on the Sanitation Districts of Los Angeles County's pending 301(h) application.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

Amendment No. 87: Appropriates $1,873,000 for the Council on Environmental Quality, instead of $2,780,000 as proposed by the House and $1,465,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 88: Appropriates $1,363,000 for the National Space Council as proposed by the Senate, instead of $1,000,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 89: Appropriates $3,560,000 for the Office of Science and Technology Policy as proposed by the Senate, instead of $3,300,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 90: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

POINTS OF LIGHT FOUNDATION

For necessary expenses of the President in carrying out title III of the National and Community Service Act of 1990 (S. 1430, as passed by the Senate on October 16, 1990), relating to the Points of Light Foundation's promotion of local problem solving through voluntary community service, $5,000,000: Provided, That not later than 6 months after the date of enactment of this Act the President shall prepare and submit to the appropriate committees of Congress a report describing the use of funds made available by this appropriation.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

This new foundation is a government, nonprofit corporation within the Executive Office of the President which encourages individuals to volunteer their time and services to community service projects.

FEDERAL EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT AGENCY

Amendment No. 91: Appropriates no funds for disaster relief as proposed by the Senate, instead of $100,000,000 as proposed by the House. The committee of conference notes that FEMA's carryover of unobligated funds from fiscal year 1990, plus its anticipated recaptures of prior years' funds will be approximately $280,000,000, which is $10,000,000 more than the amount requested for fiscal year 1991.

The conferees urge the Federal Emergency Management Agency to give consideration to providing funds for the restoration of buildings damaged in national disasters so as to restore them to their original, historic integrity and/or to restore older historic structures to a standard consistent with and/or required by local safety codes as of the time of the reconstruction, including any mitigation of future risks deemed appropriate.

Amendment No. 92: Appropriates $143,000,000 for salaries and expenses as proposed by the Senate, instead of $143,459,000 as proposed by the House.

The committee of conference is in agreement on the following changes to the budget request:

+$125,000 and 3 FTE for management of section 305(a) grants authorized by the Superfund Amendments and Reauthorization Act,

+$125,000 for personnel salaries and travel expenses at the U.S. Fire Administration,

+$200,000 and 2 FTE for the National Fire Academy,

−$784,000 as a general reduction to be applied at the Director's discretion.

Amendment No. 93: Appropriates $3,351,000 for the office of inspector general, instead of $3,905,000 as proposed by the House and $2,751,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 94: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: $282,624,000

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate. The conferees agree to the following changes from the budget request:

+$3,000,000 for emergency assistance grants,

+$252,000 for training and education, instructional programs and materials and training field deployment systems to restore programs to 1990 levels,

+$5,000,000 for section 305(a) grants authorized by Superfund Amendments and Reauthorization Act, title III,

+$147,000 for training and fire, in the Emergency Management Institute's instructional programs and materials and the resident program to restore these activities to the 1990 levels,

+$134,000 for training and fire, in the National Fire Academy's training field deployment systems to restore the program to the 1990 level,

−$10,000,000 from federal preparedness, government preparedness program,

+$4,600,000 to correct fire and safety code violations at the National Emergency Training Center in Emmitsburg, Maryland,

+$70,000 to monitor and replace leaking emergency broadcast system diesel fuel storage tanks in Vermont,

+$750,000 to augment the Earthquake Hazards Reduction Program,

+$750,000 to augment State and private funds to construct an earthquake engineering center at the University of Nevada, Reno,

+$170,000 to provide matching Federal funds to complete a firefighters' hazardous materials training facility in Vermont,

+$250,000 to help the Navajo Nation establish hazardous materials response teams,

+$2,078,000 for state and local control and warning, emergency operating centers,

−$1,619,000 as a general reduction to be taken at the Director's discretion.

The conferees recognize the threat that significant seismic activities pose to the central United States. This area includes the States of Arkansas, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Mississippi, Missouri, and Tennessee and is the most active seismic region east of the Rocky Mountains. The conferees encourage cooperative efforts between universities and federal, state, and local emergency management agencies designed to address the potential hazard in this region of the country. In particular, the conferees acknowledge and view favorably the cooperative emergency management/research project presently being considered at Memphis State University.

EMERGENCY FOOD AND SHELTER

The committee of conference is concerned with the distribution formula used in the emergency food and shelter program. It strongly urges FEMA to review the alternatives included in the December 11, 1989, report to Congress and to take such administrative steps as are necessary to implement either one or a combination of alternatives so the program will accurately reflect homeless statistics.

Amendment No. 95: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate transferring all authority including funding and program responsibilities over the National Fire Academy to the U.S. Fire Administration.

Amendment No. 96: Deletes language inserted by the Senate allowing the temporary hire of Federal and military retirees to aid in disaster response.

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES

OFFICE OF CONSUMER AFFAIRS

Amendment No. 97: Appropriates $1,964,000 for the Office of Consumer Affairs as proposed by the Senate, instead of $1,889,000 as proposed by the House.

INTERAGENCY COUNCIL ON THE HOMELESS

Amendment No. 98: Appropriates $1,083,000 for the Interagency Council on the Homeless as proposed by the Senate, instead of $1,214,000 as proposed by the House.

NATIONAL AERONAUTICS AND SPACE ADMINISTRATION

Amendment No. 99: Inserts language appropriating $6,023,600,000 for research and development, instead of language appropriating $7,027,994,000 as proposed by the House and language appropriating $5,600,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The conferees agree to the following changes from the budget request:

—$551,000,000 from the $2,451,000,000 requested for space station.

The committee of conference has included an appropriation of $1,900,000,000 for the space station program. This amount is a reduction of $551,000,000 below the budget request. Included within the amount is $106,300,000—the budget request for the flight telerobotic servicer. The conferees also agree that $10,000,000 is included for solar dynamic power research within the total available for the space station program.

The conferees have recommended this reduction as a direct result of a 302(b) allocation that is nearly $1,000,000,000 in budget outlays less than that requested by the President for the VA, HUD, and Independent Agencies Appropriations bill.

While the committee of conference has reluctantly taken this action—it should not have come as a surprise. The Committees on Appropriations have warned since the outset of this program that future budget constraints would render it virtually impossible to design, test, and build the space station envisioned in 1984. Each year the Committees have found it increasingly difficult to provide sufficient funding to support the then current space station design.

In the past, the Committees on Appropriations have suggested that NASA should examine the possibility of an incremental approach. In short, the space station should be developed in useful phases—beginning with a man tended capability—followed by a manned capability and concluding with a permanently manned space station. The conferees believe that concept or a similar approach should be implemented now—if any station is to survive.

In that context, it is essential that the agency recognize that the budget crisis is only beginning. The five-year budget agreement assumes an annual growth rate in domestic discretionary spending, and therefore in the VA, HUD, and Independent Agencies Appropriations bill, of approximately five to seven percent. That fact suggests that the maximum annual growth in NASA's budget cannot exceed eight to 10 percent.

In view of that, the conferees direct NASA to immediately implement a revised space station design and assembly sequence which reflects an incremental approach—and which assumes an outyear growth in the station funding profile of approximately 10 percent per year with a peak year funding level of from $2.5 to $2.6 billion. The conferees believe that this approach is workable and could yield a man-tended capability on orbit as early as flight three or four of the assembly sequence.

The committee of conference directs NASA to make its recommendations within 90 days of the enactment of this bill. It is expected that the new approach be based on an "incremental concept" which permits each phase to be discrete and independent of the next phase. In the interim the conferees have agreed to "cap" the space station program at $640,000,000—or approximately $160,000,000 per month—in accordance with the agreement as outlined in the letter from NASA to the Committees dated August 9, 1984. Should circumstances require, the Committees on Appropriations will give consideration to an extension of time and an increase in the above "cap".

The Committees believe that if the funding profile outlined above is appropriated, the first phase should be devoted to a microgravity function, followed by a life science function and permanent manned capability. However, the committee on conference also expects that each phase be sufficiently independent to achieve on orbit operation of that phase should new funding threats evolve.

The conferees also note that it is doubtful if today's space station design could be supported by the current shuttle launch system. The existing design requires approximately 30 shuttle flights to complete. When utilization flights are factored into the launch schedule, the station may require up to eight flights per year. Recent experience suggests that it is unlikely that the shuttle system will support that or even a lower launch rate that is exclusively dedicated to station. The conferees, therefore, suggest that any rescoping should consider a realistic shuttle launch rate.

Also, as part of the 90-day study, the conferees direct that the essential principles previously committed to the Committees by NASA be retained. In summary these are:

A. A fully equipped U.S. micro-gravity laboratory (consistent with the availability of user payloads) before the launch of any habitat.

B. A requisite number of utilization flights per annum following the launch of the U.S. micro-gravity laboratory (during the man-tended phase).

C. Life science, centrifuge, and related support equipment shall be placed in an area other than the U.S. micro-gravity laboratory (such as a second laboratory, a node, an international partners module, etc.).

D. A total of 75 kw of power (if all phases of the station are developed)—with at least 30 kw of power available to the users and with power and modules added in increments that will ensure that user power will not be seriously degraded.

Finally, the conferees again want to stress that the existent space station design cannot be supported within the context of the fiscal year 1991 and outyear allocations to the VA, HUD, and Independent Agencies Subcommittees. Therefore, it is essential that NASA redirect its efforts to designing a space station that incorporates an early manned capability and can be accommodated within the anticipated outyear funding available in the domestic discretionary spending arena.

—$16,000,000 from the assured crew rescue vehicle.

—$30,000,000 from the $53,900,000 requested for advanced transportation technology. Within the $23,900,000 provided, the conferees agree that $10,500,000 shall be allocated for shuttle "C." The balance is available for the advanced launch systems program.

—$85,400,000 from the orbital maneuvering vehicle (OMV).

—$25,000,000 from life sciences. The conferees agree that within the balance of funds available in this activity, $12,100,000 shall be allocated to the search for extraterrestrial intelligence and $2,000,000 for Lifesat.

—$15,000,000 from the $15,000,000 requested for the Mars Observer mission enhancements supporting the Moon-Mars program.

—$44,000,000 from the $132,000,000 requested for the earth observing system (EOS) polar platform.

—$36,000,000 from the $103,000,000 requested for the Earth Observing System (EOS) to be transferred as an addition of $36,000,000 to a new line in the Earth Sciences and Applications budget, designated for the EOS Data Information System (EOSDIS).

+$36,000,000 for the EOS Data Information System (EOSDIS) as a new line in the Earth Sciences and Application budget.

+$8,000,000 for continued work on requirements definitions for the EOS consortium for international earth science information networks (CIESIN) program.

+$31,000,000 to the $25,000,000 requested for the earth probes, to be allocated in accordance with the Senate report. In connection with the $5,000,000 provided for the sea-wide field sensor (SeaWiFs) the conferees understand that a substantial amount of preliminary work has been done on this project and direct NASA to proceed as expeditiously as possible consistent with sound procurement practices. The conferees also direct that if any additional funds are necessary to proceed with this program, a reprogramming request shall be forwarded to the Committees on Appropriations. The conferees note the inability to provide funds for the Synthetic Aperture Radar. However, the conferees recognize the critical importance of the project to Mission to Planet Earth and encourage NASA to use existing funds to the extent available during FY 1991 for continuing studies and preliminary work on this important program.

+$5,000,000 to the $97,300,000 requested for materials processing.

—$3,000,000 from the $148,000,000 requested for the Comet Rendezvous Asteroid Fly-by (CRAF/Cassini) mission.

+3,000,000 to the $68,000,000 requested for the Ocean Topography Experiment (TOPEX).

+$10,000,000 to the $2,400,000 requested for interdisciplinary research activities.

+$5,000,000 to the $41,300,000 requested for modeling and data analysis to be used to improve the predictive capabilities of general circulation models.

—$11,000,000 from the $46,700,000 requested for the shuttle test of relativity experiment (Gravity Probe B), and Phase B activities on the Orbiting Solar Laboratory (OSL), and the Space Infra-red Telescope Facility (SRITF). In applying the reduction, the conferees direct that priority be given to protecting the funding required for the Gravity Probe B mission.

+$30,000,000 to the $293,900,000 requested for mission operations and data analysis for upgrading of the instruments and related activities of the Hubble Space Telescope project.

−$12,000,000 from the $15,000,000 requested for Space Station Integrated and Attached Payload activities.

−$5,000,000 from the $130,700,000 requested for Space Lab.

−$31,000,000 from engineering and technical base and payload operations and support equipment to be allocated at the agency's discretion.

−$37,000,000 from exploration missions studies. The conferees have deferred consideration of the proposed Space Exploration Initiative (SEI) due to severe budgetary constraints which limit the agency's ability to maintain previously authorized projects and activities. It is implicit in the conduct of the Nation's civil space program that such human exploration of our solar system is inevitable. Although initiation of a focused program is not possible at this time, the conferees recognize that relevant research and technology development activities should be continued by NASA and that preliminary conceptual design studies will be considered if appropriate resources are identified or made available.

−$210,000,000 from Space Research and Technology. This will provide for an appropriation of $285,900,000, the same level as the 1990 amount. The reduction is associated with and should be taken from the increase requested for activities for the Space Exploration Initiative (SEI).

+$5,000,000 to the $50,100,000 requested for academic programs.

+$(2,000,000) for the Advanced Communication Technology Satellite (ACTS) program for user community experimentors.

−$15,000,000 from the $101,000,000 requested for commercial programs. Within the commercial program office, the conferees agree to the following changes:

−$3,000,000 for the construction of the wake shield facility, which has been transferred to the "Construction of Facilities" account.

−$13,625,000 as a general reduction, to be taken at the agency's discretion, subject to the normal reprogramming requirements.

+$1,000,000 to the $3,000,000 requested for the AdaNET program.

−$24,000,000 from the $119,000,000 requested for the National Aerospace Plane (NASP).

−$15,000,000 as a general reduction to be taken at the agency's discretion, subject to the normal reprogramming requirements, from the request of $512,000,000 for Aeronautics and Space Technology.

+$15,000,000 for high performance computing and activities consistent with NASA's role in the Federal high performance computer program.

Finally, the conferees have agreed to a general reduction of $40,000,000 in the Office of Space, Science and Applications. The reduction may be taken at the agency's discretion, subject to the normal reprogramming guidelines, to all science programs not otherwise specified for increases, reductions, or earmarks in this report.

Amendment No. 100: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

For necessary expenses, not otherwise provided for; in support of space flight, spacecraft control and communications activities of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, including operations, production, services, minor construction, maintenance, repair, rehabilitation, and modification of real and personal property; tracking and data relay satellite services as authorized by law; purchase, hire, maintenance and operation of other than administrative aircraft; $6,334,132,000, to remain available until September 30, 1992, of which $1,209,732,000 shall be used only for the purpose of payment, to the Federal Financing Bank, for the Tracking and Data Relay Satellite System (TDRSS) loan: Provided, That such payment shall constitute settlement of all amounts owed on said loan: Provided further, That of the amounts provided herein for development and production of the advanced solid rocket motor (ASRM), $15,000,000 shall be available without fiscal year limitation for the competitive award of a contract to develop either (1) a second domestic source for the development and production of the ASRM carbon/carbon integral throat entrance (ITE) or (2) a second domestic source for the production of the ASRM carbon/carbon ITE unless the Administrator of NASA certifies to the Congress by February 1, 1991, that such application of funds is not in the best interest of the United States space program on the basis of cost, added assurance of reliable supply, expanded technology base, and technical risk reduction.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conferees agree to the following changes from the budget request:

−$125,000,000 from the $4,420,600,000 requested for shuttle production and operations. The reduction shall be subject to the normal review in the proposed operating plan and the normal reprogramming guidelines.

−$40,000,000 from the $868,000,000 requested for tracking and data acquisition activities.

In addition, the conferees have agreed to accept the Senate bill language, with a technical change, requested by the President in the amount of $1,209,732,000 to eliminate NASA's outstanding debt to the Federal Financing Bank. None of these funds may be used by NASA for any agency programs or activities.

The committee on conference has also included bill language concerning the potential second sourcing of the advanced solid rocket motor carbon/carbon integral throat entrance (ITE).

Amendment No. 101: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment, insert the following:

and, notwithstanding the limitations on the availability of funds appropriated under this heading by this appropriations Act, an amount of $10,000,000 appropriated hereunder is to remain available without fiscal year limitation and is appropriated for the operation and maintenance of a new visitor center on the Lyndon B. Johnson Space Center to be constructed solely through the use of nonappropriated funds and for the provision of ancillary features such as roads, parking lots, utility services, and exhibits, and without regard to 31 USC 3302, such amount or portions thereof may be invested in securities of the United States Government and the interest earned thereon may be retained and used for the aforesaid purposes, except that these appropriated funds and interest earned thereon shall not be used to construct the new visitor center building nor for the payment, directly and indirectly, of principal or interest on any debt obligation incurred with respect to the new visitor center building, $497,900,000

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conferees agree to the following changes from the budget request:

−$15,000,000 from the $15,000,000 requested for the Neutral Buoyancy Laboratory for Space Station.

+$20,000,000 for the initiation of deferred rehabilitation and major maintenance activities at NASA's field centers.

+$3,000,000 for construction of the Wake Shield Facility, consistent with prior year construction activity in the commercial program office.

+$4,000,000 for construction associated with the Classroom of the Future software program in Space Science Education.

+$1,000,000 to begin preliminary planning for facilities for the Consortium for International Earth Science Information Networks (CIESIN) in connection with its designation by NASA as an affiliated data archives center.

+$10,000,000 for the purpose of acquiring, operating, and maintaining a new Johnson Space Center visitor center.

−$23,000,000 as a general reduction to be taken at the agency's discretion, subject to the normal reprogramming guidelines.

Amendment No. 102: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

For necessary expenses of research in Government laboratories, management of programs and other activities of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, not otherwise provided for, including uniforms or allowances therefore, as authorized by law (5 USC 5901-5902); awards, lease, hire, maintenance and operation of administrative aircraft; purchase (not to exceed thirty-three for replacement only) and hire of passenger motor vehicles; and maintenance and repair of real and personal property, and not in excess of $200,000 per project for construction of new facilities and additions to existing facilities, repairs, and rehabilitation and modification of facilities; $2,219,400,000: Provided, That contracts may be entered into under this appropriation for maintenance and operation of facilities, and for other services, to be provided during the next fiscal year: Provided further, That not to exceed $35,000 of the foregoing amount shall be available for scientific consultations or extraordinary expense, to be expended upon the approval or authority of the Administrator and his determination shall be final and conclusive.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conferees agree to the following changes from the budget request:

−$2,300,000 and 46 FTEs (full-time equivalents) from the Space Station level II office (Reston).

−$2,000,000 from the $54,056,000 requested for travel.

—$13,780,000 from operation of installations funds designated in the budget for an additional NASA administrative aircraft.

—$21,920,000 as a general reduction, subject to the normal reprogramming requirements. While the conferees have not specifically identified where these reductions should be made, they expect that the overwhelming majority of them will be made in NASA's headquarters operations.

+$6,500,000 for additional health and retirement benefit costs at NASA's field centers.

Amendment No. 103: Appropriates $10,500,000 for the Office of Inspector General as proposed by the House, instead of $11,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 104: Changes center heading as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 105: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

During fiscal year 1991, notwithstanding any other provision of law, average employment in the headquarter's offices of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration shall not exceed: (1) 48 staff years for the Office of the Administrator; (2) 184 staff years for the Headquarters Operations; (3) 44 staff years for the Office of Commercial Programs; (4) 10 staff years for the Office of Explorations; (5) 40 staff years for the Office of General Counsel; (6) 189 staff years for Agency Management; (7) 75 staff years for the Office of External Relations; (8) 29 staff years for the Office of Legislative Affairs; (9) 229 staff years for the Office of Space Science and Applications; (10) 144 staff years for the Office of Aeronautics and Space Technology; (11) 482 staff years for the Office of Space Flight, including Level I and Level II activities for the Space Station; (12) 61 staff years for the Office of Space Operations; (13) 111 staff years for the Office of the Comptroller: Provided, That no funds may be used from amounts provided in this or any other Act for details of employees from any organization in the National Aeronautics and Space Administration to any organization included under the budget activity "Research and program management", except those details which involve developmental or critical short-term staffing assignments.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF BUILDING SCIENCES

Amendment No. 106: Appropriates no funds for the National Institute of Building Sciences as proposed by the Senate, instead of $250,000 as proposed by the House.

NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION

Amendment No. 107: Deletes language proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate in connection with salaries and expense activities and addresses this function in a new account.

Amendment No. 108: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment, insert the following: $1,734,200,000

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conferees are in agreement with the following changes to the budget request:

—$47,000,000 from the $47,000,000 requested for the Laser Interferometer Gravitational Wave Observatory (LIGO).

+$500,000 for LIGO activities within the Mathematics and Physical Sciences Directorate for continued engineering and design work. The conferees direct that none of these or any other funds may be used to initiate a new start for this project.

—$5,500,000 from the $5,500,000 requested for the National Science Foundation's agency relocation. The conferees agree that if the National Science Foundation and the General Services Administration reach an agreement on the NSF relocation issue, the Committees on Appropriations will consider a reprogramming of funds.

—$20,000,000 from academic facilities. This activity is provided for in a separate account.

—$102,500,000 from program development and management. This activity is included in a separate account at the level of $101,000,000.

+$1,200,000 for the experimental program to stimulate competitive research (EPSCoR) program. In connection with this activity, the conferees direct the NSF to expedite as soon as possible the award of the fiscal yar 1991 EPSCoR grants.

—$22,350,000 from programs transferred from the Scientific, Technological International Affairs Directorate to the Education and Human Resources activities account.

+$1,000,000 for advanced planning for a space communications station at the Green Bank, West Virginia Radio Observatory.

—$25,150,000 as a general reduction, to be taken at the agency's discretion, but subject to the normal reprogramming guidelines.

The conferees have included $4,000,000 requested for engineering design studies and the purchase of glass for two new eight meter optical telescopes. The conferees expect that the U.S. share of this project will not exceed $88,000,000—or one-half of the cost of the project as estimated by the NSF. The conferees direct the NSF to obligate fiscal year 1991 funds solely for work on the U.S. eight meter telescope until a firm, fixed, cost-sharing arrangement has been concluded with all foreign partners. If no foreign participation is ultimately agreed to, the cost of a single telescope may not exceed $88,000,000.

Finally, the conferees are concerned that the criteria for selecting major grant or contract recipients at the National Science Foundation are not widely understood. Therefore, the conferees direct the NSF to arrange with the National Academy of Sciences a study by the Academy of the elements weighed by the NSF in awarding research grants and contracts. The conferees ask, in particular, that the Academy assess the role in the decision process of merit review by outside scientists and executive agency staff.

Amendment No. 109: Deletes language proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate concerning salaries and expense functions which are addressed in a new separate account.

Amendment No. 110: Appropriates $20,478,000 for academic research facilities as proposed by the Senate, instead of $20,000,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 111: Makes a technical change in the availability of academic research facilities funds.

Amendment No. 112; Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

Insert language proposed by said amendment, amended to change the second dollar amount to $101,000,000.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

Amendment No. 113: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate appropriating $322,350,000 as proposed by the Senate instead of $285,000,000 as proposed by the House and changing the title of the Science Education Activities account to the Education and Human Resources Activities account.

The conferees have agreed on the following changes from the budget requst:

+$30,000,000 for teacher preparation and enhancement.

+$6,000,000 for informal science education.

+$4,000,000 for research career development.

+$5,000,000 for science and mathematics education networks.

+$4,000,000 for studies and program assessment.

+$22,350,000 for programs transferred from the Scientific, Technological and International Affairs Directorate.

Amendment No. 114: Appropriates $3,000,000 for the Office of Inspector General as proposed by the House, instead of $2,714,000 as proposed by the Senate.

NEIGHBORHOOD REINVESTMENT CORPORATION

Amendment No. 115: Appropriates $25,554,000 for payment to the Neighborhood Reinvestment Corporation as proposed by the Senate, instead of $24,500,000 as proposed by the House.

TITLE IV—CORPORATIONS

Amendment No. 116: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

$22,000,000,000

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The budget requested an indefinite appropriation to liquidate remaining obligations of the former Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation. The estimated cost at that time was $2,915,744,000. The House provided the requested language. The Senate provided a specific appropriation of $4,398,000,000 which was based on the Administration's best estimate at that time. On October 11, 1990, the House Subcommittee on VA, HUD, and Independent Agencies held a hearing with representatives from the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the Resolution Trust Corporation. The witnesses testified that a definite appropriation of $4,398,000,000 would not be sufficient to cover necessary costs in fiscal year 1991. The Senate based its recommendation on the current best estimate, but that estimate had been revised to approximately $4,800,000,000.

The witnesses also indicated the potential need for additional funds if estimated savings of approximately $2,000,000,000 were to be achieved. The conferees have agreed to an appropriation of $22,000,000,000 for the FSLIC Resolution Fund in fiscal year 1991.

This will permit the payment of basic obligations. In addition, it will provide sufficient funds to permit the prepayment of certain higher interest rate obligations and thus realize a savings of approximately $2,000,000,000.

TITLE V—GENERAL PROVISIONS

Amendment No. 117: Deletes language proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate which denies community development grant funds to municipalities that permit the use of excessive force against non-violent civil rights demonstrators. The conferees have agreed to delete such language as the matter is being addressed in the conference on the housing authorization bill.

Amendment No. 118: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate limiting the number of non-career senior executive service appointees at the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

Amendment No. 119: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following:

Sec. 517. None of the funds appropriated under title II of this Act, or otherwise available to the Department of Housing and Urban Development, shall be used for first class travel of any Department official or employee unless required by medical necessity or on airplane flights longer than seven hours.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

Amendment No. 120: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following:

Sec. 518. None of the funds appropriated in title I of this Act shall be used to enter into any new lease of real property if the estimated annual rental is more than $300,000, unless the Secretary submits, in writing, a report to the Committees on Appropriations of the Congress and a period of 30 days has expired following the date on which the report is received by the Committees on Appropriations.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conferees have modified the Senate proposal to prohibit the VA from entering into long-term leases that exceed $300,000. The conferees do not wish to restrict the use of leases when it is deemed necessary, but are concerned that at times this method has been used to circumvent the normal construction appropriations process.

Amendment No. 121: Deletes language proposed by the Senate codifying all aspects of the Committees' reports with respect to HUD.

The conferees have deleted a provision, proposed by the Senate, that would have incorporated into the fiscal year 1991 VA, HUD and Independent Agencies Appropriations Act, all report language related to the Department of Housing and Urban Development included in House Report 101-556 and Senate Report 101-474. The Senate reluctantly included this provision after a decision by the Department earlier this year to reverse its longstanding agreement with the Committees on Appropriations to seek prior notification and concurrence on all reprogramming actions involving amounts equal to, or greater than, $250,000.

Since fiscal year 1977, the Senate Committee on Appropriations has included language in the VA, HUD and Independent Agencies Appropriations report that requires agencies, commissions and departments funded through that bill to comply with these guidelines, which also apply to any substantial reorganization of offices, programs or activities prior to the implementation of such reorganizations. These reprogramming guidelines, which have been required by the House Committee on Appropriations as well, have served both the executive and legislative branches well in balancing their respective roles under the Constitution. These guidelines permit federal agencies and departments to retain the maximum executive branch flexibility in administering programs and managing personnel, while permitting the Congress to exercise the oversight responsibilities entrusted to it by the American taxpayer.

In deleting the Senate provision, the conferees note that the letter of October 11, 1990 from the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development to the Committees on Appropriations restates the Department's commitment to fully abide by the Committee's reprogramming guidelines: to obtain the concurrence of the Appropriations Committees before proceeding with any reprogramming action, or before expending funds over the ceilings identified in the conference report for each HUD program. The conferees therefore accept the Secretary's, and the Department's, commitment to comply with these guidelines, and have therefore deleted the far more restrictive and less flexible statutory language proposed by the Senate.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

IN MEMORY OF ELEANOR FITZSIMONS

HON. BILL GREEN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. GREEN of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commemorate the memory of Eleanor FitzSimons, a distinguished woman who resided in my congressional district until her death on August 24, 1990.

Eleanor FitzSimons had a résumé filled with accomplishments and achievements, each demonstrating her dedication to public service. Ms. FitzSimons served as vice chairman of the Bowling Green Association, and was on the board of directors of the Citizens Budget Commission, the Talbot Perkins Children's Services Association, The Friends of THIRTEEN, Inc., and the Advertising Women of New York. Among other awards, Eleanor received the Citation for Meritorious Service by the President's Committee on Employment of the Handicapped, and the Distinguished Service Citation by the New York Foreign Press Association.

Secretary of the Treasury Nicholas Brady and his wife paid their respects by issuing a statement in Eleanor's honor which was read by Louis Weintraub, her friend and partner in the public relations firm they founded jointly, at her memorial service. In addition to Eleanor's family, that event was attended by several hundreds of her friends and associates.

At this time, I should like to request that my colleagues join me in honoring Eleanor FitzSimons, a remarkable woman whose memory will linger forever in the hearts of all those who knew her. I should also like to offer my best regards to Eleanor's daughter, Leslie and grandsons, Brandon and Douglas.

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Speaker, on January 13 of this year my home county—Graves County, KY—lost one of our finest citizens when Lana Joyce Duke died at age 48.

Lana Duke, of Wingo, Route 1, was admired and liked by the many who knew her.

Lana Duke was a proud Kentuckian who was a dedicated Christian, wife, and mother.

Lana Duke was a beautiful, talented, and personable lady whose death was so untimely and so saddening to those of us who continue to miss her.

Lana Duke is survived by her husband, Billy Joe Duke; two sons, Monty Duke of Eureka, MO, and Chet Duke of Wingo; her mother, Lillie Mae Richmond of Wingo; a sister, Linda Nunley of Paducah, KY, and three grandchildren.

Her father, James Richmond, and a brother, James Watts Richmond, preceded her in death.

My wife Carol and I again extend to Lana's family our sympathy.

THE MILOSEVICH'S CELEBRATE GOLDEN WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

HON. PETER J. VISCLOSKY

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to note the 50th wedding anniversary of Fred and Doris Milosevich, longtime residents of the First District of Indiana and a couple that I admire and respect. Married on October 20, 1940, the Milosevich's are an inspiration to their family and friends.

Fred's roots trace back to Hibbing, MN, where he was born and raised. In 1933, the Milosevich family moved to Gary, IN, where Fred completed his education at Emerson High School. Doris Komenich, his future bride, is a native of Gary and graduated from Lew Wallace High School. Fred, being quite an athlete, went on to play minor league baseball for the Chicago White Sox and was well on his way to playing in the major leagues, but instead chose to marry Doris and begin a less tumultuous life together.

Fred and Doris were both employed at United States Steel-Gary Works for a number of years before Fred left to manage his own Standard service station. Today, Fred remains an active member in the Knights of Columbus, CFU Lodge, and the CCU. He also continues his love of sports by golfing all summer and bowling in the winter.

Fred and Doris can be proud that they have a family rich in excellence. Doris' brother, Milo, was an all-American while playing basketball at the University of Wyoming. Doris' nephew, Kim Komenich, received a Pulitzer Prize in 1987 for journalism in news photography. Fred is related to Kevin McHale, an all-star basketball player for the Boston Celtics and his niece, Dr. Judith Murovic, is a practicing neurosurgeon in New York City.

Fred and Doris are fortunate to be blessed with each other. In this era in which divorce rates are high, it is truly special to see this couple reach their golden anniversary. That is why, Mr. Speaker, I know that you and our colleagues will join me in congratulating Fred and Doris Milosevich on this momentous occasion.

COMPLAINT FILED AGAINST PRO-ISRAEL GROUPS

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I include this article into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

COMPLAINT FILED AGAINST PRO-ISRAEL GROUPS

WASHINGTON.—A group of prominent Americans is filing a complaint today against 54 pro-Israel lobbying and political action committees charging them with violating federal election laws.

Among the complainants are James E. Akins, formerly ambassador to Saudi Arabia; George Ball, who served as undersecretary of state in the Kennedy and Johnson administrations; Paul Findley, a former Illinois congressman who contends he was defeated in 1982 because of a campaign by the pro-Israeli lobby; and Retired Adm. Robert J. Hanks, who headed the Navy's Middle East Task Force.

The petition to the Federal Election Commission focuses primarily on the activities of an influential pro-Israel lobby called the American Israel Public Affairs Committee. It contends AIPAC violated the law by failing to register as a political action committee even though it allegedly targets political candidates for support and contributes to their campaigns.

The plaintiffs are demanding that AIPAC be forced to register as a PAC bound by laws of disclosure of its activities—a move that would greatly limit its effectiveness as a behind-the-scenes lobbyist.

The plaintiffs have long contended that AIPAC exercises undue influence over legislators and administration officials, skewing U.S. policy in favor of Israel and against Arab states.

"The work of AIPAC is so effective that it creates a broad level of intimidation which is very harmful for our foreign policy interests," Findley said. Excerpts from his 1985 book "They Dare To Speak Out," which chronicles his defeat, are included among the exhibits.

The complaint, supported by more than 100 pages of exhibits, also charges that 53 pro-Israel PACs made excessive contributions to candidates in the 1984, 1986 and 1988 election cycles.

VISIT OF UKRAINIAN OPPOSITION LEADER MYKHAILO HORYN

HON. STENY H. HOYER

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, Ukrainian opposition leader Mykhailo Horyn visited Washington

recently to focus attention on the dramatic developments taking place in Ukraine today. His meetings in Washington were arranged by the Washington office of the Ukrainian National Association and Ukraine 2000—the Washington Committee in Support of Ukraine.

As the Chairman of the Secretariat of the Popular Movement of Ukraine [Rukh], and a member of the Ukrainian Parliament, Mykhailo Horyn has been in the forefront in promoting democratic changes in Ukraine. His role is especially crucial in the context of Ukraine's rapid moves in the direction of independence, as illustrated by the Ukrainian Supreme Soviet's July 16 declaration of sovereignty. This declaration, which passed by a 355-to-4 vote, asserted the supremacy of Ukrainian law over Soviet law, Ukraine's right to its own army, currency and banking system, and declared Ukraine a neutral, nuclear-free state.

Mr. Speaker, Mykhailo Horyn has been no stranger to the Helsinki Commission, which I cochair. During the 12 years in Soviet labor camps until his release in 1987, the Helsinki Commission pressed for his release and for the release of his fellow imprisoned Ukrainian human and national rights activists. A number of these former political prisoners—on whose behalf many of our colleagues in the House also worked tirelessly over the last decade—are now elected representatives in the Ukrainian Parliament and leaders of the democratic opposition.

In view of rapidly changing events in the Soviet Union and the implications this has on United States policy, it is essential that we understand the forces shaping events in its largest non-Russian republic. In that regard, Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with my colleagues a few of the key issues raised by Mr. Horyn during his various Washington meetings as provided to me recently by Ukraine 2000:

SUMMARY OF MYKHAILO HORYN'S COMMENTS DURING WASHINGTON MEETINGS

Over a very short period of time Ukraine has had an extraordinary rebirth of national consciousness * * *. Nevertheless we are experiencing an unusually rapid national rebirth and this national rebirth goes hand in hand with the construction of a Ukrainian national state. We are building a Ukrainian state, and that state will be democratic. Ukrainian society will be a civil society founded upon international law and the principles of individual human rights.

Ukraine's population is very diverse in its composition. Out of a total population of 52 million people, there are 11 million ethnic Russians within Ukraine. There are Poles, Jews, Byelorussians and others. Thus the nationalities policy we pursue will determine our success in cosntructing our nation. We proceed from the basis that individuals from all ethnic groups have equal rights under the law. This democratic principle is fundamental to the beliefs and the approach of Rukh and this is incorporated into the very structure of Rukh * * *.

Every citizen suffers in the aftermath of Chernobyl. The people of Ukraine know what Chernobyl was the result of the imperial policies of Moscow. No one in Ukraine believes that Moscow is capable of protecting them from new Chernobyls. A common line in Ukraine is: "We all, regardless of national background, cultivate the same poisoned land, breathe the same poisoned air, drink the same poisoned water, eat the same poisoned food and, therefore, our future can only be seen in light of the creation of an independent state." The common goal is a democratic nation where the people can express themselves and influence the policies that effect their lives.

The Supreme Soviet of the Ukrainian SSR is our parliament. For the first time ever we have a parliament with opposition. Although the opposition Democratic Bloc's deputies are a minority, since July we have been able to pass three very important laws. They are the Declaration of Sovereignty of Ukraine, The Law on Economic Independence of Ukraine, and the resolution that all Ukrainians serving in the Soviet Army be stationed in the territory of the Ukrainian Republic * * *.

The Democratic Bloc's deputies in the parliament believe in rapid evolutionary change toward an independent Ukraine. With each legislative win we move forward on the road to independence. We have won great victories in the parliament but we face the difficult task of implementation. The ministries still are all controlled by the Party * * *. By taking the evolutionary and parliamentary path, we hope to achieve success along the line of the Czechoslovakian model, and not the Romanian one. We are making every effort to assure that our road to independence will not create economic or social anarchy. Our nationalities policies and our objectives continue to solidify the people behind our efforts. We have sent groups of Democratic deputies to the other republics charging them with the responsibility of negotiating and establishing horizontal economic and trade agreements between our republics, avoiding the vertical controls of Gorbachev and the center * * *.

In July a poll conducted by the National Academy of Science in Moscow surveyed the views of the people of Kiev. Only 2 percent of the population opposed the Declaration of Sovereignty and over 50 percent favored secession.

Churches are being opened and church property returned. Yet, while this is being done there are complications including diferences between the members of the different churches who express claims to the churches their forefathers helped build. The Democratic Bloc believes in separation of Church and State but efforts are underway to mediate differences. Rukh espouses tolerance and believes that acceptable resolutions will be achieved.

What about federalism? Rukh supports an independent Russia but that is different than subscribing to a Russian-based federation. Ukraine must recognize that Russia does not have a democratic history. Rukh and the People's Council must preserve the democratic identity of the people of Ukraine. Losing the identity of the people of Ukraine can not be risked. It is better that we enter the European house where we belong.

Rukh is completely committed to human rights for all of the people of Ukraine. Ukrainians, Russians, Jews, Poles, Byelorussians, are all to share equal protections and freedoms under a democratic civil society. Persecution against anyone is persecution against all.

While the 500 day economic plan may have some elements that could be utilized in Ukraine, it contemplates the continuation of the center and thus runs against the objectives of the center and thus runs against the objectives of Rukh.

Ukraine has declared itself a nuclear weapons free nation. It does not want nuclear weapons on its soil. Ukraine, however, does not want Soviet nuclear weapons to fall into the hands of other nations and must design a plan for their destruction and/or disposal.

TRIBUTE TO THE HOY SUN NING YUNG BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION

HON. BILL GREEN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. GREEN of New York. Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity to bring to the attention of my colleagues the efforts of the Hoy Sun Ning Yung Benevolent Association, a constituent organization in my congressional district, which is celebrating its 138th anniversary this year.

The Hoy Sun Association was established in 1852, and has been representing Chinese-Americans of Toi-Shan—Hoy Sun—descent in Metropolitan New York since that time. The Toi-Shan descendants were one of the first groups of Chinese immigrants to come to the United States, and have subsequently made tremendous contributions to this country. The anniversary celebration will include the publication of a historical book documenting all of the activities of the organization, with specific attention to Chinese-Americans who have distinguished themselves in the United States.

I should like to congratulate the Hoy Sun Ning Yung Benevolent Association for all of its fine accomplishments and to wish the organization all the best for a successful anniversary celebration.

A TRIBUTE TO FARLAND ROBBINS

HON. CARROLL HUBBARD, JR.

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Speaker, a longtime friend and neighbor of mine, Ewing Farland Robbins, died at age 78 on June 9 this year at Community Hospital in Mayfield, KY.

Farland Robbins was an outstanding Kentuckian.

When I began a law practice in Mayfield in 1962, one of my first friends was Farland Robbins. He was instrumental in my joining the Mayfield Rotary Club.

It was my honor to date his beautiful daughter, Adelaide Robbins, on several occasions.

Farland robbins was a terrific lawyer and was known for his being always prepared in the courtroom. He would arrive at this office sometimes at mid-morning but many nights the office lights of Farland Robbins were burning late, late upstairs at 127 South Seventh Street in Mayfield.

Farland Robbins successfully practiced law in Mayfield for over 53 years. He and his lovely wife, Elwyn Lyon Robbins, loved to travel. And Farland Robbins' favorite "hobby" was a successful travel agency he owned in Mayfield, named—appropriately—Far Lands Travel Agency.

A former Graves County attorney first elected in 1945, Farland Robbins was understandably proud when his oldest son, Gayle B. Robbins, was elected Graves County attorney in 1981. Gayle Robbins has served as Graves County attorney from 1982 until now, this being his third 4-year term.

Farland Robbins was awarded the American Bar Association's 50-year award. He was an elder, deacon, and trustee at Mayfield's First Presbyterian Church and served as president of the Mayfield Kiwanis and Rotary Clubs.

He was a graduate of Vanderbilt University and its College of Law and was a World War II Navy veteran.

The last time I visited with my friend Farland Robbins was on May 16 this year here on Capitol Hill. Farland and I enjoyed breakfast together in room G-50 in the Dirksen Senate Office Building. It was the annual congressional breakfast hosted by the Kentucky Association of Electric Cooperatives, which Farland had attended many times. Farland Robbins was for 52 years the attorney/counsel for West Kentucky Rural Electric Cooperative Corp. in Mayfield. He actually drew up the articles of incorporation for his hometown electric cooperative corporation. The first meeting of the board of directors of the Mayfield-based electric cooperative was held in Farland Robbins' law office on April 23, 1938.

After the May 16 breakfast, Michael Alderice, manager of West Kentucky R.E.C.C., and board of directors members Carolyn Wood, Jewell Conner, and Paul Burd joined Farland Robbins and me in walking over from the Dirksen Building to the House steps of the U.S. Capitol for our annual picture-taking and discussion of issues currently before Congress. None of us knew that 24 days later our friend Farland Robbins would no longer be with us.

Survivors of Farland Robbins other than his wife Elwyn, son Gayle, and daughter Adelaide—Mrs. Roger Schoenfeldt of Murray, Ky.—are another talented son, Kent Marshall Robbins, of Hendersonville, TN, a sister, Mrs. Kirk Byrn, Jr., of Mayfield, and six grandchildren.

My wife Carol and I extend to the family of Farland Robbins our sympathy.

GARY REGIONAL AIRPORT TO EXPAND

HON. PETER J. VISCLOSKY

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Mr. Speaker, today, I have introduced legislation that will permit further development of the Gary Regional Airport.

The last decade was very hard on northwest Indiana and the city of Gary particularly. The recession in the early 1980's and the dramatic restructing of the steel industry, the region's primary employer, resulted in unemployment rates that were the highest in the State. Thousands of families were forced to move to seek other opportunities.

However, as we enter the new decade, there are indications that we have turned the corner and I am optimistic about the future. In Gary, the airport is one of the cornerstones that can be utilized to revitalize the city and help enhance the economic growth of the entire region. Since being elected to serve in Congress, I have worked with local, State and Federal officials to assist the development of the Gary Regional Airport.

My legislation is necessary to allow the airport to utilize several of its land parcels as part of its efforts to establish a U.S. foreign trade zone at the facility. It was recently brought to my attention that restrictions were placed upon the parcels in the 1940's when they were transferred to the city by the War Assets Administration.

Today, all agree that these restrictions are dated and removing them will improve the ability of the airport to progress. They Gary Regional Airport has made significant strides in recent years and I commend them on their efforts. My legislation will allow the airport to proceed as it prepares to meet the challenges of the 21st century.

ROSTY'S BALLAD OF CAPITAL GAINS

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to my chairman, the Honorable DAN ROSTENKOWSKI of the Committee on Ways and Means. Under his leadership the committee has formulated the crucial revenue provisions of the Democratic alternative budget that has been approved by the House of Representatives. The House may take pride in its action, for the budget is based on long-held principles of fairness and tax progressivity.

While successfully addressing the critical issue of deficit reduction, the Democratic alternative budget is tempered by the realization that the burden of spending cuts must not unduly hurt the poor, and that those who can afford it must pay their fair share. And I might add, where there are opportunities for incentives, this budget successfully spreads the benefits across the income spectrum, rather than limiting them to the rich.

Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of my colleagues, I would like to introduce for the RECORD the following newspaper commentary on the historic budget writing performance by chairman DAN ROSTENKOWSKI. The article was written by Christopher Matthews and appeared in the Washington Times.

BALLAD OF CAPITAL GAINS

Like Gen. Douglas MacArthur at Inchon, Democrat Dan Rostenkowski of Illinois has outflanked President Bush and amputated his supply lines.

The issue is capital-gains taxation. For the first time on record, Mr. Rostenkowski has seized this political prize from the country's financial elite and presented it, gift-wrapped, to the great American middle class.

Consider the deal that the 61-year-old Ways and Means chairman is offering us as the budget standoff reaches its final days!

Under Rosty's plan, included in the House-approved budget bill, every U.S. citizen can sell any item of property—a plot of land, a summer home, a boat, an antique, a vintage car, anything that's increased in value—and get a 50 percent tax cut on the profits.

As you might expect in these times of budget crunch, there's a limit to this bonanza. To ensure that everyone gets a piece of the action and the U.S. Treasury doesn't suffer another leak, Rosty's national garage sale would be limited to $200,000 a taxpayer.

While this $200,000, once-in-a-lifetime opportunity may not arouse much interest in some mahogany-rich boardroom, it's a jackpot to folks who figure their financial future on the kitchen table.

What effect will the Democratic plan have on next month's congressional elections?

A stampede is one possibility, and not in the direction of Mr. Bush's Republicans.

Consider the two parties' relative field positions as the budget story reaches its suspenseful climax. Just two weeks ago, Mr. Bush was the guy pitching a cut in capital gains. He was the fellow on the side of economic growth, the leader pushing tax incentives to stimulate the economy and avert full-scale recession.

Now, hardly two weeks before elections, the debate is totally different. Due to the Ways and Means chairman's maneuver, the question is no longer whether Congress should support Mr. Bush's plan to help the elite but whether Mr. Bush himself should obstruct Mr. Rostenkowski's plan to share the capital-gains windfall among the country's struggling class, those tens of millions in the economic middle.

This puts all the political cards in the opposition's hand. The Democrats, not Mr. Bush, are the folks pushing a cap-gains tax break on the evening of the election. They, not Mr. Bush, are the party of "fairness"—a buzzword which gains new, emergency voltage as more and more sectors of the American economy switch from "on" to "off."

Mr. Rostenkowski's plan isn't perfect. It denies taxpayers credit for inflation, for example, while failing to slap an energy-conserving tax on gasoline. It is the best vehicle the Democrats have rushed to market since New Frontier days.

Rosty's tax plan is also a personal milestone. It is a prime-time argument against moves such as California's Proposition 140 to limit the terms of legislators. Mr. Rostenkowski came to Congress in 1958 as a captain in Chicago's Daley machine. Today, he's a legislative MacArthur.

Anyone who doubts Rosty's tactical success on the capital gains issue should watch the lips and hips of the man he beat.

After spending two years serenading Chamber of Commerce and Rotary luncheons with his high-C call for capital gains, the ex-booster in the Oval Office no longer wants to hear about it.

While Mr. Rostenkowski shows the value of having a grown-up around the house, Mr. Bush is like the little rich kid who, seeing the other side about to score, wants to stop the game and close the government.

"It's my ball," he says, "and I want to go home!"

SOLVE THE BUDGET PROBLEM

HON. DAN BURTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the majority of the American people want the budget problem solved, and they want it solved now. I believe that the people want this problem solved in such a way that they won't have to pay a great deal of additional taxes. I believe that they want to see a solution that focuses on spending cuts instead of tax increases on an already overburdened populace.

Mr. Speaker, I have here a letter from the students of Elwood Community High School that demonstrates the concern that the people of the Sixth District of Indiana have about this problem. I think the students of Elwood High School express very well not only the sentiments of the people of the Sixth District, but the sentiments of all Americans. These students and their teachers should be commended.

I insert the text of this letter at this point in the RECORD:

ELWOOD COMMUNITY HIGH SCHOOL,
Elwood, IN, October 18, 1990.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN BURTON: We are members of Mr. Bomholt's economic class at Elwood Community High School. With the help and guidance of Junior Achievement we have formed a student company known as Three B Enterprises. Along with learning how to start and operate a business, our class has also been studying the national government debt and deficit problems.

While the President and the Congress continue to procrastinate and play politics, we would like to express our concern about the tough choices that have to be made in this matter. We must get deficit spending and the debt under control!

Three B Enterprises would like to take this opportunity to illustrate just how concerned we are about all of this. This student operated company would like to take a portion of our after tax profits and make a contribution to the United States Treasury toward the reduction of our national debt. Although this donation is a small token, it represents a very large concern. We hope this action will help to encourage the President and Congress to put politics aside and do what is necessary to put a plan into action to reduce the deficit.

Sincerely yours,

MICHELE STONE,
President, Three B Enterprises.

FOOLING AROUND WITH TAXES

HON. BILL FRENZEL

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, yesterday's New York Times' lead editorial was titled "Fooling Around With Taxes." It was not flattering to the Republican deficit plan, but its denunciation of the Democrat plan was even more vigorous.

The House Democrat tax plan was described as reverberating with ignorance—or cynicism. It was described as "demagogy."

The Times says Congress is "fooling around with taxes." That's the way it looks to the American people, too.

The editorial follows:

FOOLING AROUND WITH TAXES

The House is on the verge of passing a $500 billion deficit reduction package. But it is hard to take the bill seriously. It includes amendments imposing stiff tax increases, aimed at the rich, that are unlikely to pass the Senate and that President Bush is sure to veto.

The principle of taxing the rich more than the poor to pay for deficit reduction might be noble. But the amendments amount to demagogy. They would eliminate an increase in the gas tax, undermining energy conservation. They would postpone correction of the income tax code for inflation, leaving an invisible tax on the middle class. They would lower the capital gains tax for exactly the wrong kinds of investments.

The House plan was well designed to embarrass Republicans into voting against a package weighted in favor of the poor. The Republicans responded with some demagogy of their own, proposing a deficit reduction package that pretended to cut the deficit without raising taxes. Congress owes the country a responsible deficit reduction package. Three days before the deadline for closing down the Government again, the country is still waiting.

Last month's budget summit produced a plan to cut the deficit by $500 billion over five years. But it would have raised taxes on the poorest families three times as much as on the richest. That was the main reason the House rejected the package.

The alternative plan approved last week by the House Ways and Means Committee, similar to one before the Senate Finance Committee, would have increased taxes on gasoline, alcohol, cigarettes and several luxury items. It would also have reduced the total amount of deductions for rich families and expanded tax credits for the working poor. Roughly speaking, it would have affected most income groups proportionately.

The plan voted in the House yesterday drops the tax hike on gasoline and postpones for a year the indexing of tax rates and personal exemptions for inflation. That's a cynical way to hit the middle class with an invisible rather than a visible tax. And it would undo a boost for energy conservation.

The House plan would also raise the tax rate on the highest incomes to 33 percent from 28, and raise the tax on wealthy families that take advantage of enormous amounts of deductions and exemptions. But the Democrats surely know that Mr. Bush would veto any package that raised income taxes unless it also capitulated to his obsessive quest for a capital gains tax cut.

It is precisely on capital gains that the House plan reverberates with ignorance—or cynicism. It would allow individuals $100,000 of capital gains free of income tax over a lifetime—but only on the sale of real estate, farms, businesses and timber, not stocks. The tax code already heavily favors investments in real estate and timber. To direct more precious resources their way is shameless.

The budget clock is still tickling. Congress is still fooling around.

ETHICS IN FOREIGN LOBBYING ACT

HON. MARCY KAPTUR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, every year foreign interests spend millions of dollars to influence the U.S. political process. More and more of this money is spent in U.S. elections by PAC contributions from foreign controlled corporations or trade associations. This system of campaign financing threatens to make our political system vulnerable to the concerns of foreign interests. It is essential that foreign lobbies clearly understand that the Congress of the United States is not for sale. We do not permit foreign citizens to contribute to U.S. campaigns, why should we permit foreign companies or their trade associations.

At the present time, the political contributions data collection system is disjointed and incomplete, providing a veil of secrecy for foreign lobbying. For example, business entities organized under U.S. laws maintaining their principle place of business in the United States, are not classified as foreign principals.

Today, I introduce with Congressman FRANK GUARINI and 33 original cosponsors, the Ethics in Foreign Lobbying Act which has three important components:

First, it establishes a clearinghouse, within the Federal Election Commission, for the collection and disclosure of information regarding the lobbying activities of foreign nationals, foreign controlled corporations, and individuals representing foreign principals.

Second, it amends the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to prohibit contributions from political action committees controlled by corporations that are at least 50 percent owned by persons other than U.S. citizens.

Third, it bans trade associations which derive more than 50 percent of their budgets from foreign-owned corporations from making political contributions.

The Federal Election Commission prohibits contributions from foreign nationals to U.S. political campaigns, but foreign companies and trade associations have been allowed to contribute and influence the campaign process through the establishment of PAC's. In fact, the last election cycle foreign-controlled PAC's contributed $2.7 million. The Ethics in Foreign Lobbying Act will eliminate foreign-controlled PAC contributions and allow Americans to retain our sovereignty in the election process.

Campaign reform must become a reality. Establishing a clearinghouse to monitor foreign lobbying efforts and banning contributions from foreign-controlled corporations and trade associations should be an integral part of that reform. I strongly urge my colleagues to support the Ethics in Foreign Lobbying Act. Attached is a summary of the bill.

ETHICS IN FOREIGN LOBBYING ACT OF 1990

SUMMARY

(1) The Act establishes a clearinghouse of existing lobbying activities information within the Federal Election Commission

A TIDE OF COCAINE RISES IN PANAMA

HON. FORTNEY (PETE) STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, a mere 10 months after Operation Just Cause and the removal of Panamanian dictator Manuel Noriega, apparently little has changed on the reason given for the American invasion: Drug trafficking to feed the insatiable appetite for illicit narcotics in the United States.

An article from the Christian Science Monitor of last week detailed how drug trafficking continues in Panama, "flush with cocaine bound for the United States."

Operation Just Cause was a wash. The problem of Panamanian drug trafficking originates here at home. As Attorney General Richard Thornburgh has stated repeatedly, "if you want to lose the 'war on drugs', leave it just to law enforcement." Interdiction alone will do nothing long-term to help solve this problem. As President Bush said in his first address to Congress, "We will win the 'war on drugs' when we reduce the demand for drugs."

The United States has 5 percent of the world's population, but consumes an estimated 65 percent of the world's cocaine. Demand is driving supply. Period.

The conditions in Panama are shameful, and the root cause of their dilemma begins within our borders. Unfortunately, despite Operation Just Cause, with all its lost lives, bloodshed, and Pentagon expense, little has changed.

The following article is recommended:

[From the Christian Science Monitor]

A TIDE OF COCAINE RISES IN PANAMA—VULNERABLE COAST, NORIEGA LEGACY, LITTLE ANTIDRUG MONEY MAKE COUNTRY A HAVEN FOR TRAFFICKERS

(By Laura Brooks)

Panama is flush with cocaine bound for the United States.

With its sprawling and unguarded coastline, Panama is luring smugglers from neighboring Colombia, where drug lords are on the run. Panamanian officials have seized tons of cocaine in recent months, but say they are only skimming the surface.

"There's still a lot of drugs going through Panama," says Deane Hinton, U.S. Ambassador to Panama. "If you are seizing this much with a . . . small, untrained narcotics force, the conclusion's got to be there's probably a lot that nobody's getting."

When the U.S. invaded Panama last December and arrested Gen. Manuel Noriega on drug charges, it was hailed as a major blow against drug trafficking. Under Noriega's corrupt regime, Panama's drug flow went from a gurgle to a gush. Drug enforcement, meanwhile, was "selective."

"The only drugs captured were from traffickers who didn't pay off [the regime,]" says Rodrigo Arosemena, Panama's customs director.

But with Noriega gone, many hoped Colombia's drug cartels would be shut out. Instead, traffickers appear to be moving in.

Police say it is "likely" the cartels have set up a cocaine factory in Darien, a jungle province bordering Colombia. The U.S. is planning an aerial survey to detect labs and airstrips, U.S. officials say.

Panama's rambling Atlantic and Pacific coasts are a smuggler's dream, with nearly wide-open access. South American smugglers spirit U.S.-bound cocaine by boat to remote Panamanian ports, then through a tangle of smuggling trails. Traffickers rarely run afoul of Panama's tiny Coast Guard fleet: just two fishing skiffs and a patrol boat that guard 1,250 miles of shoreline.

On land, police agens armed with revolvers and Taiwanese rifles raid suspecting drug dens in a low-budget version of Miami Vice.

So far this year agents have seized about four tons of cocaine, one ton more than last year's catch. Last month, police captured a $52 million shipment.

But the rest slips through—by air, sea, and land—to the U.S., Europe and to Panama. "One would presume it's a lot, based on the seizures," a U.S. official says.

Still, some reject the idea that when more cocaine is seized, more cocaine is being shipped.

"There is the sense that the movement is greater," says Ramiro Jarvis, Chief of Panama's 50-man anti-narcotics force. "But I think its based more than anything on police and customs efforts to do a professional job."

Some also say the cocaine pipeline is clogged with old shipments, not fresh arrivals. "There still may be drugs in Panama from the previous government," says Mr. Arosemena. "Maybe because [traffickers] haven't been able to totally get rid of them."

Colombia's year-long crack-down on drug lords has complicated Panama's problems. With Colombian police striking at traffickers, the cartels are seeking relief. Given its lax enforcement and shared border with Colombia, Panama is a natural refuge.

"They think its safer to put [drugs] in Panama, where they know there's a reorganization process, than in Colombia where there's a fight against drug trafficking." Mr. Jarvis says.

Panama's customs service works with police to detect drugs. At airports, drug-sniffing dogs poke at baggage while inspectors spot-check cargo.

Yet, customs and police sometime seem to be battling each other instead of traffickers. Police complain customs has squeezed them out of airports; customs agents say police need to be watched.

Poorly paid government workers still are ripe for smugglers' bribes. "We have a couple of fellows about whom we have some doubt," says Mr. Hinton, referring to unidentified lower- and middle-level officials. "The payoff is so great for badly paid people that they do these things."

The U.S. ambassador praises Panama's cooperation on drug matters, but is also "disturbed" by delays in letting the U.S. Coast Guard start joint sea partols. Panama says the partols may violate its territorial soverignty.

"We've lost a lot of time and a lot of drugs have come in," says Hinton, adding that both sides are close to agreement.

Meanwhile, Washington is pumping half a million dollars into training and equipment for drug agents.

But Panama's economic crisis has pinched drug control funds. Agents need everything from cars to guns and money for informants.

On a recent night raid in Panama City's Predregal neighborhood, police failed to chase a suspected smuggler. Agents had no flashlights to guide them up a dark passage where he fled.

Hinton admits U.S. money may not go very far. "When the allocations were originally made, we thought that maybe [trafficking] wouldn't be as bad as it turned out to be," he says.

BALLISTIC MISSILE DEFENSE IN A CHANGING WORLD

HON. ROBERT K. DORNAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, more and more Members are becoming aware that the policy of assured destruction is anachronistic. This is especially true as more nations join the ballistic missile club and the chemical-biological-terror weapons—the so-called poor man's A-bombs—club.

The days of immoral reliance on mutual assured destruction, aptly referred to as MAD, are gone. This doctrine was premised on the concept of keeping the civilian populations of both the United States and the Soviet Union hostage to the threat of nuclear annihilation. Former Secretary of Defense, Robert Strange McNamara, foisted this doctrine on the U.S. military in the late 1960's and forswore deployment of missile defenses. His only worry was the rationality of the Soviet and Chinese leadership—rationality that offensive stalemate would assuage a crisis before it reached the nuclear threshold. Two decades later the spread of ballistic missile technology and weapons of mass destruction to Third World nations has changed that situation. With the invasion of Kuwait by the madman Saddam Hussein, the likelihood of the United States or its allies being threatened by a third country is no longer a theoretical probability but a problematical reality.

The superpowers can no longer broker a deal among themselves. Instead of only a few leaders with nuclear guns pointed at each other's civilians, there will be nearly two dozen. William Webster, the Director of Central Intelligence, testified that by the turn of the century as many as 20 developing nations will have ballistic missile launch capability. Imagine some of the members of the international community whose judgment and stability are oftimes questionable—Iran, Iraq, Syria, and Libya—with the ability to aim nuclear and/or chemical guns at one another or at the United States and its allies. Rationalism within this diverse group cannot be presumed. The knowledge of assured retaliation did not prevent Iran and Iraq from unleashing chemical weapons and long-range cruise missiles on one another's civilian populations. With pariah regimes, as with terrorists, the end always justify the means.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with my colleagues an excellent, succinct and thought-provoking essay by Julie Horn. Ms. Horn discusses the exigency of theater ballistic missile defense as the dynamics of international relations move forward and demonstrates clearly that ballistic missile defense makes more sense than ever before. I urge my colleagues to read this timely article and ponder the implications for our national security.

THEATER MISSILE DEFENSE IN THE CHANGING GEOPOLITICAL ENVIRONMENT

(Iraq launches a military takeover of Kuwait, installs a puppet leadership, promises to leave, and stays. Soldiers detain a number of Western citizens for an undetermined period of time and the world's oil market is threatened. Troops are sent into the 100-plus degree weather in head-to-toe chemical protective suits, fearful that Saddam Hussein will once again choose to use chemical tipped theater ballistic missile weaponry against his opposition.)

Although the threat of an all out nuclear conflict between the Soviet Union and the United States has diminished, smaller scale regional conflicts have the potential for tremendous political and economic disruption with global effects. The recent Persian Gulf crisis brings this clearly into view. The potential for introduction of chemical and unclear warheads into these conflicts is also increasing. In addition to warhead development, many countries have acquired theater-range ballistic missile delivery capabilities, either through purchase or internal development. Perhaps the greatest threat in a regional conflict will be the use of ballistic missiles to strike targets at ranges of 500-2000 km with little or no warning. Advanced layered air defense will be needed to effectively defend from this type of attack. It is likely that an Active Theater Missile Defense (ATMD) would provide the needed top layer to existing air defense systems, enhance deterrence, and defend against military aggression in theaters worldwide.

THE CHANGING GEOPOLITICAL ENVIRONMENT

Changes in the relationship between the two superpowers, the United States and Soviet Union, combined with the rise of new economic and geopolitical powers, is likely to result in a multi-polar world power structure by the early 21st century. National "power" may be measured by combinations of economic, technological, military, and political power that may vary considerably and be subject to frequent change. As a result, alliance structures are likely to become equally changeable, less predictable, and less enduring.

Arms control between the U.S. and the Soviet Union has advanced in recent years with the Intermediate Nuclear Force (INF) Treaty, the ongoing Strategic Arms Reduction (START) talks; and, the Conventional Armed Forces in Europe (CFE) talks. However, verification still pervades arms reduction talks. Measures such as on-site inspections and overhead surveillance improve confidence between participants, but are far from fool-proof. More germane to the theater-level condition is the fact that while these agreements have had some effect on theater-range ballistic missiles, most theater level engagements limited in these arms agreements could be achieved with modernized forces that have not been effected.

Changes in other traditional international relationships are contributing to the situation as well: The face of NATO is changing, but it is unknown at this time what its fate, or affect on Western alliances will be. The United States is facing forced reductions in defense spending while maintaining commitments worldwide. German reunification is affecting alliance East and West, and European Communities 1992 will open up market opportunities in Europe to enable easier international trade and technology transfer.

Outside the superpower arena, meaningful arms control agreements are even less likely to provide a means to reducing military tension, and may become more difficult to obtain as alliance become more subject to change and less defined. In fact, the development of missile technology and warhead capabilities could be viewed as a means for some military-advancing countries to gain access and climb the "world power" ladder. Changing world power structure, and eagerness of some countries to gain access to the world power ladder through military build-up contribute to lessening theater stability worldwide.

MISSILE AND WARHEAD PROLIFERATION

In view of global changes in economies and military power, it is likely that the production and proliferation of ballistic and other theater-level missiles will increase. The Soviet Union has indicated to the West that they are committed to reducing their conventional military forces. Yet they still maintain a strong strategic nuclear force, even under START. The Soviets have not only continued deployment of MIRVed ICBMs, but have enhanced their strategic posture through deployment of MIRVed SLBMs. And, while the Soviets began eliminating some theater nuclear missiles in 1988, such as the SS-20, that were subject to the INF Treaty, many of the potential theater-level targets can still be covered by modernized ICBMs, SLBMs, and bombers with cruise missles. Weakness in the Soviet economy, further stressed by Eastern European countries' moves toward independence, maintains the likelihood that the Soviets will continue selling ballistic missile techology to lesser powers. The possibility also exists that existing delivery systems or fissile material could be transferred to an emerging power in the event of an uprising or conflict.

Proliferation is not limited to export from the Soviet Union. Western missile technologies which in the past have only been available to the military are becoming increasingly available on the Western commercial market. High quality inertial measurement units, global positioning systems, high capacity computers and booster technologies are easily attainable and will become even more available as trade barriers fall in Europe.

Furthering the proliferation of theater-range ballistic missiles is the increasing number of missile producers and exporters. It is expected that by the year 2000, as least 15 countries will be producing their own ballistic missles. China has sold and transferred ballistic missile technology to countries such as Iran and Saudi Arabia, and is developing a new family of ballistic missiles, starting with the mobile 650-kilometer M-9, with interest from Iran, Libya, Pakistan and Syria. Brazil is developing five ballistic missiles, with the SS-1000 potentially the most destablizing. India has also recently tested two ballistic missiles, including the highly-accurate 2500 kilometer Agni. Roughly 20 countries currently possess ballistic missile capabilities, shown in Figure 1, and a significant number of those are aggressive pursuing a production and export capability.

In the Iran/Iraq War, employment of chemical tipped ballistic missiles effectively ended the war. Over 500 ballistic missiles were fired between the two countries in less than two months beginning in February 1988. While economic factors also contributed to Iran's initiation of the cease fire, Iraq's use of a chemical weapon posed the threat that forced the end of the conflict. Considering the demonstrated effectiveness, availability, and affordability of ballistic missiles, acquisition and advancement of missile technology will likely become more desirable to emerging powers and increases the likelihood of use in regional conflicts.

ADDRESSING THE SITUATION

The threat of military retaliation may no longer be enough to dissuade attack from an emerging power. This approach is only useful if the aggressor is concerned about the effects of retaliation. Reducing the aggressors probability of success may be a greater deterrent than threat of retaliation. Lowering the probability of success can be achieved somewhat in a tactical scenario with mobile offensive forces, but can be maximized with the use of a layered ATMD defense. An area with a deployed ATMD system would be less intimidated and less susceptible to terrorist missile threats and bullying. If deterrence failed, a deployed ATMD system would enhance offensive force survivability and allow an effective response to attack. When mixed with a mobile offensive force an ATMD defense would increase the survivability of retaliatory forces and increase the cost of launching an attack.

THE ANTITHEATER BALLISTIC MISSILE ALTERNATIVE

The increasing risk of theater ballistic missile use in regional conflicts provides the rationale for deployment of ATMD systems worldwide. The formidable array of missiles held by closely situated countries and the increasing likelihood of ballistic missile use in regional "hot spots" increases the need for ATMD deployments. Regions that cannot be adequately defended by an air defense systems alone should be augmented by a transportable and dormant ATMD system.

Currently deployed air defense systems, such as Patriot and Hawk, are not able to defend some critical areas in the "hot spots" that have emerged. An ATMD system would provide defense to the vertical battlespace at extended ranges and higher altitudes.

The vertical battlespace ATMD concept evolves from the convergence of several technologies. While Hawk and Patriot systems provide point defense, advanced interceptor technologies developed for exoatmospheric use will inevitably contribute to the development of cost-effective, producible ATMD systems capable of defending large regions. Advancements in several technological arenas have already taken place:

Sensors—Production of low-cost infrared focal plane arrays, fast and reliable cyrogenic coolers, faster signal processing, compact and lightweight antenna designs, and high density data fusion have all contributed to improving the effectiveness and cost reduction of infrared and millimeter wave/sensors required to engage ATMD targets.

Materials—Lightweight materials, capable of withstanding high launch loads and extreme aerodynamic heating loads, are developing at a fast pace. Within the next decade, continued advancement in material science and applications across the aerospace community will contribute substantially to the production of ATMD systems.

Miniaturization—Miniaturized electronic systems, such as those used in guidance and control, signal processing, data processing and data fusion systems will continue to mature as the demands from both the commercial and military sectors increase. Miniaturized components for lighter-weight, less expensive ATMD systems are already available, and the rapid pace of development is staggering.

While today's ballistic missile threats are medium range, several countries have longer-range missiles under development. Over the next few years, ballistic missiles with ranges greater than 2,000 kilometers will probably emerge that will increase the need for theater-strategic ballistic missile defense. A layered defense could provide defense against both medium and long range missiles. Sample ballistic missile footprints are shown in Figure 5. A ground-based endoatmospheric interceptor could defend against the short to medium range missiles and an exoatmospheric interceptor could defend against the longer range missiles.

A critical factor in the deployment of an ATMD system is its cost. Low life-cycle cost can be achieved by maximizing automation and mobile dormant deployment. Automation systems from component manufacturing through system operation, is critical to minimal life-cycle cost. Modular components that can be manufactured using automated systems ensure consistency of performance. Similarly, an automated ATMD system can be quickly fielded and readied for operation. A deployed defense could lie dormant for several years with minimal maintenance while operational readiness is maintained. The use of standardized military containers and launch systems would not only enhance mobility, but encourage the use of readily available off-the-shelf components.

CONCLUSIONS

In the quickly changing geopolitical environment, smaller scale regional conflicts are more likely than an all out nuclear exchange between superpowers. The threat of military retaliation may no longer be enough to deter an aggressive attack by an emerging power, and technologies could be utilized that would enhance deterrence and stability. In a time when nuclear and chemical theater missile technology is proliferating quickly, and the likelihood of their use is increasing, ATMD defenses could be deployed with existing air defenses in regions worldwide to enhance deterrence against attack, enhance survivability of offensive forces in the event of attack, and provide defense in an escalated conflict.

ON THE CONGRESSIONAL AND EXECUTIVE PAY RAISE AND DEFICIT REDUCTION

HON. WAYNE OWENS

OF UTAH

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. OWENS of Utah. Mr. Speaker, lost in the lingo of budget summits and sequestration is the notion that the decisions we make on spending and taxation will affect the lives of every American. And lost in the crisis days of this new fiscal year is the idea that we should each bear the burden equally.

I rise to introduce a bill which will correct the most glaring inequity in the budget reconciliation which recently passed the House, and each of the proposals which preceded it. Lower and middle-income groups bore the brunt of budget summit agreement, and those with gross incomes of more than $200,000 were hard hit by the democratic alternative. The one group that remarkably remained unscathed by an budget proposal are Members of Congress and high officials in the executive branch, precisely those who engineered this budget fiasco.

My bill delays the 25-percent pay raise that Congress voted itself and officials in the executive schedule until deficit reduction gets back on track. If this exercise in budget gridlock is repeated next year and the deficit exceeds the Gramm-Rudman target for 1992, then no pay raise. Period. This not only makes high ranking members of Government responsible for a situation they created, it encourages a more responsible process next year.

Mr. Speaker, the fiscal irresponsibility of the past decade is matched only by the paralysis of Congress in an elected year. According to a DSG study, middle-income families were not better off at the beginning of the decade than at the end. This is true despite the fact that a great many mothers entered the work force to shore up family earnings.

The Congressional Budget Office reports that from 1977 to 1990, real family income grew by $1.2 trillion. But when this figure is corrected for the increase in the number of families, real income growth amounted to only $418 billion; $273 billion of that 65 percent went to that 1 percent families with the highest income in the country. The remaining 35 percent of this family income growth went entirely to families in the top 10 percent. The lower 90 percent of American families got none of the growth. This means that on average, families in the lower 90 percent had less income in 1990 than they had in 1977.

The Democratic budget which passed this House is far more equitable than the one which preceded it. Among other things, it eliminated the income tax bubble, which enabled tax rates to drop from 33 to 28 percent as incomes rose above $260,000. It placed a 10-percent surtax on incomes over $1 million. It provided a 50-percent exclusion for income of up to $420,000 during a taxpayer's lifetime derived from capital gains. It is a step in the right direction.

However, it is appalling that these measures were necessary at all. Since the country first questioned the borrow and spend budgets of past decades, the trick has been to repay loans ahead of schedule, shift Federal paydays from fiscal year to fiscal year, lease instead of buy, and if it costs too much, take it off the ledger.

Even more appalling is the notion that the officers of Government responsible for this fiscal paralysis and ineptitude are getting a pay raise in January. This is unconscionable. I cannot see how Congress and the administration can prescribe pain for the Nation without sharing in the burden.

Unlike the 40 percent of senior citizens who have incomes less than $12,000, those eligible for the congressional pay raise will not feel the bite of increased Medicare premiums and deductibles. Nor will they take much notice of most of the tax provisions which will emerge in a final budget reconciliation.

For the people of my home State, this budget process rightly represents the failure of Government. Plain and simple. A 25-percent pay raise this January is a slap in the face of every American who has watched the paralysis of their elected Representatives in disgust. It adds insult to grievous injury that will get worse long before it gets better.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is a pay cut. It revokes the pay raise Congress provided itself in January, yet it maintains the ban on honoraria, limitations on outside earned income, and other important ethics reform provisions.

This bill adds our names to the long list of Americans who must pay the price for the spending spree of the last decade. I strongly urge your support.

COMPENSATION FOR VICTIMS OF OCCUPATIONAL DISEASE

HON. PAT WILLIAMS

OF MONTANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, we have been grappling in this body for many years with the economic disaster that befalls workers in our society who have fallen victim to diseases from exposure to toxic substances and processes in the workplace. The record of the Committee on Education and Labor is replete with evidence of the failure of our State workers' compensation systems to deal with occupational illness, and for more than two decades the Congress has explored initiatives to assist the victims of our industrial process. These efforts have included proposals to reform the workers' compensation system and my own proposal of 1985 to provide a Federal occupational disease compensation program. In the last Congress, the House passed, the High Risk Notification Act to attempt to provide assistance and medical surveillance to populations of workers who had been exposed to toxic substances and processes. Our major success has been limited to the now 20-year-old program to assist victims of coal mines in the black lung benefits program.

Every bit as horrible as the situation with coal miners' pneumoconiosis, is the scourge of asbestos related disease. In the last 15 years we have witnessed an enormous increase in the numbers of individuals afflicted with asbestos related disease, including thousands of deaths from cancer and respiratory illnesses. The estimates are that more than 18 million American workers suffered exposure to this deadly substance before, during and after World War II in industry and shipbuilding, and millions more in construction. While asbestos as a building product has been banned in this country for more than 15 years, there still will be more victims from those who are now dealing with the difficult process of removing the already installed asbestos, as well as those working in areas where they are exposed to damaged asbestos.

Hundreds of thousands of these workers have already suffered the consequences of the exposure to this deadly substance, and we know that in the next 20 to 25 years we will see hundreds of thousands of additional victims. As with many other occupational exposures, asbestos takes a long time to do its damage—20 to 40 years after exposure in many cases.

The cost of a lengthy disease and disability—and ultimately of death—to the workers and their families is crippling. Private costs for a worker who develops an asbestos-related disease is well over $100,000, and the medical costs for many of the cancer victims is substantially higher. The long latency of the disease, the difficulties with statutes of limitations, proof of causation and other barriers, as well as the pitifully low benefits of many State systems, has made the workers' compensation system largely ineffective in dealing with the consequences of this industrial disaster.

The now well documented record of the deadly nature of exposure to asbestos and the inability of asbestos victims to receive assistance from the compensation system has led to the filing of claims against manufacturers for restitution.

We are now confronted with a judicial, financial, and social problem of incredible dimensions because neither the administrative nor judicial systems are capable of handling the volume of pending and prospective claims, nor are some of the product manufacturers likely able to financially handle the present and future claims for compensation at a level that will assure fair benefits for the victims. A brief review of the current situation with the personal injury claims process is in order.

The thousands of claims against Johns-Manville led to its filing for bankruptcy in 1982 and the subsequent creation in 1986 of the Manville Trust to provide compensation for the existing and future asbestos victims. This Trust was to provide approximately $2.5 billion to claimants over a 25-year period. However, the Manville Trust has returned to court to declare it has run out of money. Having spent $974 million to settle the first 22,386 asbestos claims, the trust is now without adequate funds to compensate the remaining claims, estimated at well over 100,000, thus demonstrating that this extraordinary effort to assist the Manville Corp. meet its obligations to asbestos victims while remaining a viable business has failed. Not incidentally, of the $974 million that Manville has spent so far, $389 million or 40 percent has been spent on attorneys' fees.

Yet, Manville victims may soon be forced to take smaller settlements on their claims. The average settlement against the world's former largest asbestos manufacturer under the trust was approximately $40,000. Even with a new infusion of over a half billion dollars, the trust will now likely have to pay less per claim, or prioritize claims, in order to pay even a fraction of the pending suits. This does not seem to me a fulfillment of the victims needs promised by the initial Manville bankruptcy reorganization plan.

Over and apart from Manville, in the last 5 years the United States has witnessed a true epidemic of asbestos litigation as the disease has struck more and more victims. Yet, many workers exposed to asbestos have seen little in the way of relief because the more than 100,000 claims filed in the Federal and State courts have created a nightmare for our judicial system that has found itself unable to handle the crush of cases under the present tort system. The litigation explosion has created problems for the Federal and State court systems of this country. This legal logjam that has effectively blocked the resolution of nearly 100,000 asbestos-related personal-injury cases has not escaped the notice of judges and legal scholars. Various methods of handling the crush of cases have been tried during recent years, including extensive use of special masters, mass settlement procedures, expedited calendars, and various other devices. All appear to have largely been unsuccessful. This summer matters appear to have come to a head with respect to the cases pending in the courts.

During July and August of this year, a group of 10 Federal judges created an ad hoc national coordinating committee to deal with those asbestos cases pending in the Federal courts through a multicourt cooperative effort.

On August 10, 1990, these judges approved an order which attempted to consolidate asbestos cases pending in different district courts, and certify them as national class actions in which the court would apply and declare Federal common law. The written findings that accompanied the judges' order are noteworthy:

Many districts are highly impacted with this litigation, and the various case management techniques utilized by the federal courts over the last ten years have proved to be ineffective. The transaction costs are unacceptable. Thousands of claimants die before they can get their cases resolved. Trials have become repetitive, with the same issues and the same products being litigated time after time. The asbestos litigation has become the classic example of civil cases that cost too much and take too long.

However, some legal experts questioned whether an informal group of judges had the authority to take such action—particularly in combining Federal court cases with those filed in State courts and then only applying Federal common law. The judicial action was challenged in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, which reversed part of the plan stating that it was "unable to find any congressional authority for an ad hoc national coordinating committee to issue orders as an article III court."

This action of the court of appeals was not the final word however.

On September 27, 1990, Chief Justice William Rehnquist appointed a six judge Ad Hoc Committee on Asbestos Litigation of the U.S. Judicial conference to address the complex issues involved with asbestos litigation. Consequently, the situation in the Federal judiciary remains in turmoil. The recent experience with agent orange and the Dalkon Shield give us a realistic sense of the likely results—years of motions and appeals challenging these efforts; more delay for asbestos victims.

Injured asbestos workers will bear the brunt of this delay, for although they are the plaintiffs in these suits, they are the true victims of the current state of asbestos litigation. These plaintiffs already face enormous delays in receiving compensation. Frequently, injured workers die before their suits reach trial or are settled. Many leave widows and dependent families who suffer true economic hardships before the extended process of disability or death claims are completed by settlement or verdict. Under the current Manville plan, many claimants will not receive payment for another 20 years from now, having had their last exposure to asbestos 25 years ago—almost a half century delay. Right now no Manville Trust payments are being made and settlements may have to be suspended soon. It will likely take at least 2 years for payments to resume even on claims already settled.

Moreover, legal fees are consuming huge amounts of any awards that plaintiffs do receive because these claims must be processed in an adversary proceeding. Most plaintiffs' attorneys in asbestos cases take one-third of their clients ultimate awards. Studies, like one done by the Rand Corp., indicate that as much as 65 percent of the total awards intended for asbestos victims goes to transactions costs, which in plain English means fees to plaintiffs' lawyers, defense lawyers, experts, and administrative personnel.

Injured asbestos workers who pursue their claims in the civil justice system face other obstacles as well. First, asbestos litigation is spread widely among a large number of Federal and State courts. Accordingly, an asbestos claim is truly a role of the dice—plaintiffs in different jurisdictions receive often vastly differing awards. Second, because of strict rules governing the statute of limitations in most jurisdictions, many exposed workers have no choice but to file lawsuits simply to preserve their claims, even though they have no manifest signs of disease, or impairment. These suits, prematurely compelled by the perverse incentives of State limitations statutes, compound the crowding in the courts, thus further delaying compensation to plaintiffs who are seriously ill.

There is also the question of where the money will come from to compensate these victims. Asbestos litigation is taxing the resources of the companies that must pay claims or defend against these suits, thus far costing asbestos defendants several billion dollars. Under some estimations of average tort claim payments extrapolated to hundreds of thousands of future claims, would total additional tens of billions of dollars. Other companies besides Manville have sought protection of the bankruptcy courts as a result of their liability to asbestos victims. Documented evidence of asbestos manufacturers' culpability led to thousands of claims for punitive damages, thereby increasing the costs of litigation substantially. Some of these companies have made efforts to deal with this problem creatively, attempting everything from establishing claims facilities, attempting alternative dispute resolution, and in some cases wholesale corporate reorganization. It is clear that these efforts are simply not sufficient, nor are they all appropriate.

I believe that we have a dilemma in dealing with industry's liability and responsibility for this social disaster. Clearly some of these companies are responsible for the terrible suffering of these asbestos victims and their families; it is unclear to that economic destruction of these businesses will serve anyone's interests. Particularly in this period of economic downturn, we must find a comprehensive solution to the asbestos problem in order to help American companies move forward, thereby protecting their current employees from losing their jobs, while at the same time providing just and timely restitution to victims of asbestos disease. What form that resolution will take is not clear at this time. That the manufacturers will have the resources to bear the entire cost of compensating victims seems unlikely to me. What other sources can be brought to bear, including some level of Federal contribution or employer funding, is still to be explored.

During the years, Congress has attempted to resolve the asbestos compensation problem without success. In the 1980's the Subcommittee on Labor Standards held numerous hearings on the problem in an attempt to build the record for congressional intervention. In 1985, I introduced the Federal Occupational Disease Compensation Act, and in concert with the subcommittee chairman. Mr. MURPHY, engaged in an extensive effort with representatives of industry and labor to reach a legislated solution that would deal with asbestos as well as victims of other toxic exposures. We were not successful in that effort, but I believe that we were successful in identifying the issues of benefit levels, funding sources, administrative procedures and medical standards that are the framework for many of the subsequent discussions about alternative ways of handling the compensation problems for asbestos victims.

Earlier this year, the Congress established a radiation exposure compensation trust fund for individuals who lived in affected areas of Nevada, Utah, and Arizona, as well as uranimum miners whose health was put at risk while serving our national security interests.

By establishing this fund, the Congress remedied the inequity of sovereign immunity when it comes to people who have been harmed as result of action by the U.S. Government. This principle might be extended in parallel fashion to the asbestos workers who worked in Government shipyards during World War II when the United States took over both the asbestos industry and the shipyards. These workers also had their health put at risk to serve our national security interests.

An April 1988 GAO report No. HRD 88-53 cited that by the end of fiscal year 1987 there were 2,901 cases with 91,186 claimants and $13.6 billion in claims against the U.S. Government. An earlier GAO report No. GGD 85-80 cited that by the end of fiscal year 1984 there were 2,744 cases with 88,726 claimants and $25.4 billion in claims against the U.S. Government. When the Manville claims were dismissed in August 1987, the dollar volume of these claims dropped by 46 percent, a percentage similar to their share of the asbestos industry.

In the 99th Congress, I introduced H.R. 3090 to provide for the compensation of individuals who are disabled as a result of occupational exposure to toxic substances and to regularize the fair, adequate, and equitable compensation of certain occupational disease victims. This legislation also recognized the equity of and neec for a Federal contribution to the fund established in this legislation to compensation workers who also served our national security interests during World War II.

I have followed with interest the efforts of the Committee for Equitable Compensation [CEC], a group of former manufacturers of asbestos and asbestos containing products that has spent 3 years of effort to develop a comprehensive administrative system to compensate asbestos victims. The CEC has consulted with the labor movement and with other representatives of the individuals who have contracted asbestos-related diseases. Other efforts to create an alternative to the present litigation-based claims may also be under discussion. It is encouraging that progress toward a consensus on the elements of a comprehensive solution to the asbestos problem may be possible. We should also recognize that asbestos, while clearly the most significant of toxic substances, is not the only substance that has crippled workers. Whatever the comprehensive solution, it will likely be a model of how to deal with the ever growing number of victims of occupational disease in our industrial world.

It is also clear that Congress must take a more aggressive interest in the various activities now underway to deal with the problems of asbestos victims. The continued breakdown of the asbestos litigation process in the courts confirms my judgment that a comprehensive solution to the asbestos problem is required, and it is not clear to me that the courts will be able to resolve this situation without congressional assistance of some kind.

Mr. Speaker, we need to seize this momentum, and give the highest priority to the asbestos issue in the new year. A real opportunity exists for action that will avoid the disaster toward which we are now heading—a paralyzed judicial system, thousands of victims without compensation for years, and an ongoing threat to the viable manufacturing enterprises that must continue to generate income for compensating victims, as well as a real opportunity to provide jobs and to boost American competitiveness in the world.

THE ABA AND ASSAULT WEAPONS

HON. JOHN D. DINGELL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, in the May 1990 issue of the American Bar Association Journal, ABA President L. Stanley Chauvin, Jr., wrote an editorial entitled, "Time to Assault Weapons," in which he states without qualification that, "* * * the sole purpose for the supply and demand for these [assault] weapons is the destruction of human life." Mr. Chauvin also asserts that the second amendment to the U.S. Constitution does not protect the individual right to keep and bear arms. Unfortunately, Mr. Chauvin, in the text of his editorial, exhibits a limited knowledge of what a so-called assault weapon actually is, and how the second amendment has been, or should be, interpreted.

A Fairfax, VA, attorney, George S. Knight, who is a recognized expert on firearms and the history of regulating firearms, responded to the article with a letter in June to the editor expressing sound criticism of Mr. Chauvin's use of data and general line-of-reasoning. Regrettably, the American Bar Association Journal refused to print his letter—which I believe raises pertinent and well-reasoned criticisms of Mr. Chauvin's editorial.

Since the content of the ABA Journal article—and particularly Mr. Knight's letter to the editor—are relevant to debate on legislation to be considered by this body, I insert the materials for the edification of my colleagues.

The article and letter follow.

ALEXANDRIA, VA, June 7, 1990.

The Editor of the American Bar Association Journal.

DEAR SIR: The "message" re: assault weapons of the President of the ABA L.S. Chauvin in the May 1990 Journal only serves to show that he sadly failed to do his homework on the meaning of the second amendment to the Constitution which reads as follows:

"A well-regulated militia, being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of the people to keep and bear arms, shall not be infringed."

First of all, the president says federal laws on guns did not exist until the 1930's. While not too important, actually the first federal laws were in 1927 on the mailing of handguns.

Secondly, he concludes that the second amendment, "* * * does not confer an individual right" since it refers only to the militia. A directly opposite conclusion is taken in a report of the Subcommittee on the Constitution of the Committee on the Judiciary United States Senate, 97th Congress, page 11, after considering U.S. v. Miller (307 U.S. 177) and states "the second amendment right to keep and bear arms therefore, is a right of the individual citizen to privately possess and carry in a peaceful manner firearms and similar arms." (See also Handbook, "That Every Man be Armed the Evolution for Constitutional Right", p. 155 et seq and Hardy "Origins and Development of the Second Amendment", page 90 et seq. See also Kopel writing for Cato Policy No. 109 of July 11, 1988 entitled "Trust the People: The Case Against Gun Control". The last three citations, after much scholarly research by the authors, refute the conclusion that the second amendment only applies to the militia and emphatically state that the language confers an individual right on all citizens.

Thirdly, it is interesting to note the terminology used by Pres. Chauvin. He refers to "these people killing weapons * * *" (Here goes the anti-gunner blaming the intangible pieces of metal making up a gun.) The Florida legislature recently convened a commission to assess the extent of the problem, if any, of semi-automatic firearms.

"Survey results for 1989 confirmed what firearms owners nationwide already know—that there is no dramatic increase in the degree of involvement of semi-automatic firearms in crime. Instead, only 17 of the listed firearms were found in 1989, out of more than 7,552 reported crimes involving firearms. This meager 0.9225% is hardly the 'alarming' number that the anti-gun crowd has proclaimed." (American Hunter magazine 1990, page 48)

Referring again to the Senate subcommittee report of the Judiciary (supra) page 7, the following observation on the second amendment taken from William Rawles "View of the Constitution" published in 1825, states:

"The prohibition is general. No clause in the Constitution could by a rule of construction be conceived to give to Congress a power to disarm the people. Such a flagitious attempt could only be made under some general pretense by state legislature. But if in blind pursuit of inordinate power, either should attempt it, this amendment may be appealed to as a restraint on both."

Rawles was a contemporary of the Constitution's drafters and corresponded with Thomas Jefferson who shared the same ideas. (idem)

Lastly, Mr. Chauvin states that "as lawyers, we must counteract the propaganda and disinformation that is being used by the gun lobby based on the second amendment." In all respect to Mr. Chauvin, I leave it to the reader as to who is spreading "propaganda and disinformation."

These shoot-from-the-hips inaccuracies of President Chauvin only reflect a long standing position of the officers of the ABA and is the main reason why I along with numerous friends gave up membership in the association.

The timing of this ABA writing coincides (good planning) with a big push in Congress to enact restrictive gun legislation of the type espoused by President Chauvin. One could well conclude that the gun grabbers are acting in concert with the ABA to emasculate the second amendment.

I would like to give the ABAJ a first amendment challenge to publish my documented views in opposition to your learned president.

Kindest regards.

GEORGE S. KNIGHT,
Attorney at Law.

TIME TO ASSAULT ASSAULT WEAPONS

(By L. Stanley Chauvin, Jr.

The time has long since come to regulate the manufacture, sale and use of assault weapons. We must face the fact that the sole purpose for the supply and demand for these weapons is the destruction of human life.

Why these weapons have stayed with us this long can only be attributed to blind acceptance of a Second Amendment rationale that has no basis. Those opposing regulation of assault weapons commonly wave as their banner the language of the Second Amendment:

A well-regulated Militia, being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of the people to keep and bear arms, shall not be infringed.

Actually, federal laws on guns did not exist until the 1930s. Before then, however, the U.S. Supreme Court had several occasions to review state regulation of firearms in the context of the Second Amendment. A review of these cases reveals the courts have uniformly held that the Second Amendment relates merely, solely, totally and only to the unhampered regulation of a state militia [1] It does not confer an individual right.

If the framers of the Constitution had intended the arms language to be a personal right, we might rhetorically ask why they did not list it with the others in the First Amendment. the answer is simple: The framers did not want it there, and did not intend for it to be there.

In 1968, Congress enacted the Gun Control Act requiring that imported firearms be suitable for "sporting purposes." Then, the weapon of choice for criminals was the "Saturday Night Special." Today, it is the assault weapon. Last year the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (ATF) banned 43 types of imported semi-automatic assault rifles because they had no generally recognized sporting purpose.

This was a step in the right direction, but not enough. The ban on assault rifles excluded automatic pistols, which are now commonplace crime weapons. These pistols represent a loophole in the law.

There is another loophole. The domestic manufacturing and sale of assault rifles has not been regulated. These people-killing weapons are easier to buy in some places than it is to get a driver's license or a marriage certificate.

We know that an assault gun is 20 times more likely to be used in crime than a conventional firearm. We know that as recently as two years ago, the use of assault weapons in crime jumped 78 percent, and, sadly enough, "we know that two-thirds of assault guns traced to crime are produced domestically.

Drug sweeps in Mexico, the Philippines, Jamaica, South and Central America have turned up weapons originally purchased in the United States. Last year an ATF study found that 87 percent of the weapons seized from drug traffickers in Colombia over an 18-month period were U.S.-made. In addition, the number of semi-automatic weapons traced to criminal activity in the United States increased by 57 percent between 1986 and 1987.

At the federal level today we have important opportunities to improve the assault weapon situation. Two bills, H.R. 1190 and S. 747, the Anti-Drug, Assault Weapons Limitation Act, would ban the future manufacture and importation of the most commonly used semi-automatic assault weapons. Current owners would keep their guns. The legislation would apply only to specifically named semi-automatic assault weapons, which comprise only a tiny fraction of all firearms currently in circulation. Both bills exclude hunting firearms.

Another bill, H.R. 2225, would ban the possession, sale and export of any U.S.-made semi-automatic weapon that has no "sporting purpose" as determined by ATF. H.R. 2225 also would provide mandatory minimum prison sentences for use of assault weapons in commission of a crime.

I have remarked to friends from Wisconsin to Louisiana, let's face it, if the hunter uses an Uzi to kill a rabbit, you have to feel for the rabbit.

Reasonable regulation of firearms is both constitutionally permissible and increasingly necessary so that other fundamental, constitutional rights may be enjoyed.

As lawyers, we must counteract the propaganda and disinformation that is being used by the gun lobby based on the Second Amendment. And we need to do it now.

Today, not tomorrow, we must insist on a correct reading of the Second Amendment. Today, not tomorrow, we must demand reasonable laws on assault weapons for the safety of us all.

REGARDING SYNAR AMENDMENT GRAZING FEE AMENDMENT TO H.R. 5769—INTERIOR APPROPRIATIONS FOR FISCAL YEAR 1991

HON. JOHN J. RHODES III

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, among the many misrepresentations and misstatement of facts expressed by our colleague, Representative MIKE SYNAR on the floor of the House on October 15, 1990, was a factually incorrect citation of grazing fees charged on State lands in Arizona.

In support of Mr. SYNAR's amendment to increase by 500 percent the grazing fees charged for livestock grazing permits on Federal public lands, Congressman SYNAR said the fee charged for grazing leases on State lands in Arizona is $5.99 per animal unit month [AUM]. That is what has become know as a factoid. A factoid is an assertion, regardless of its truth, that becomes fact simply because is often repeated. Many of Congressman SYNAR's allegations about public land grazing fees are factoids.

I want to insert in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the following October 17, 1990, memorandum from the Arizona State Land Commissioner, Mr. M.J. Hassell, and an October 17, 1990 letter to the Arizona Congressional Delegation from the Arizona Cattlemen's Association. Both documents affirm that the 1990 grazing fee for State lands in Arizona is $1.39 per AUM. The fact is, the highest grazing fee for State lands in Arizona since 1950 was $1.43 per AUM, and that occurred in 1982 and 1989.

I appreciate this opportunity to set the record straight, based on facts rather that factoids.

ARIZONA STATE LAND DEPARTMENT,

MEMORANDUM

Phoenix, AZ, October 17, 1990.

To: Sandy Naughton, Executive Secretary, Arizona Cattlegrowers.
From: M.J. Hassell, Land Commissioner.
Subject: Arizona State Grazing Fees.

According to the information you gave me in our phone conversation of this date, Congressman Synar has stated that the State of Arizona charges $5.99 per animal unit month for grazing leases on State Trust lands. This is emphatically not true. For your information, the last 10 years of grazing fees charged by the State of Arizona are listed below:

1990	$1.3965
1989	1.4345
1988	1.1875
1987	.6555
1986	.7315
1985	1.0450
1984	1.0545
1983	1.0735

ARIZONA CATTLEMEN'S ASSOCIATION,

October 17, 1990.

Memo to: Arizona Congressional Delegation.
From: Sandy Naughton, Executive Vice President.
Subject: Grazing Fee Statement by Congressman Mike Synar (D-Okla).

Through information acquired from the National Cattlemen's Association we are of the understanding that Congressman Mike Synar of Oklahoma made a statement on the floor of the House regarding Western states grazing fees.

According to the Congressional Record of October 15, 1990, Congressman Synar stated "I would direct those Members to look to their own States because as we look at the States and what they charge, as average on their public grazing in their lands, we find" and continues to quote state grazing fees for many of the western states, Congressman Synar states that Arizona pays "$5.99". In all actuality, Arizona's cattle ranchers pay an Arizona State Lands grazing fee of $1.3965 (rounded to $1.40).

To further solidify this I have attached a memo, FAXed to the Arizona Cattle Growers' Association, from Gene Hassel, Director, Arizona State Land Department.

On behalf of the Arizona Cattlemen's Association, I urge you to correct this statement by publically informing your fellow members of Congress of the facts.

Thank you for your consideration of our request and if you need further information on this please contact me immediately.

GENERAL MIGUEL MAZA MARQUEZ, A HERO IN COLOMBIA'S WAR ON DRUGS

HON. WM. S. BROOMFIELD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, there will never be victory in the war on drugs unless there are brave soldiers to carry out that battle. In the bloody war against drug trafficking in Colombia, Gen. Miguel Maza Marquez is a hero in their historic struggle against the drug lords and the narcoterrorism that they have been conducting in that country.

In the past few years, thousands of Colombians have died in drug related violence. In their campaign against the Colombian Government's strong counternarcotics policy, the drug cartels and their hired guns have murdered soldiers, policemen, government officials, journalists and ordinary citizens. In the past year alone, over 500 Colombians have been killed in the terrible drug-related violence in that country.

General Maza is leading the charge against the Colombian drug trafficking organizations and can take credit for many of the successes against those groups. Already, the Medellin cartel has been badly weakened by the disruption of its distribution networks. Many of its leaders have been killed or jailed. As the Cali cartel began to take over some of the Medellin cartel's drug trade, a bloody feud erupted between the two groups.

The General has paid a high price for his relentless pursuit of Pablo Escobar, the leader of the Medellin cartel, and his energetic commitment to the war on drugs. He has survived numerous assassination attempts, including a cartel-backed dynamite attack on his office building last year that left 65 people dead and 600 wounded.

Despite continuing threats, General Maza continues his struggle to rid Colombia of some of the world's most infamous drug cartels. I salute this braveman for his commitment and for his successes. While he and his fellow Colombians are paying a high price in the bloody war against the traffickers, we in America must do our part by ending our demand for cocaine and other illicit substances.

I recommend the following Wall Street Journal article to my colleagues in the Congress.

[From the Wall Street Journal, Oct. 2, 1990]

IS A TOUGH TARGET—OTHER PASSENGERS FLEE PLANE WHEN THE GENERAL BOARDS; A $1.9 MILLION "CONTRACT"

(By Jose de Cordoba)

BOGOTA, COLOMBIA.—When Gen. Miguel Maza Marquez boarded a flight to his coastal hometown of Santa Marta not long ago, 17 fellow passengers abandoned the airplane and the pilot refused to take off. On a second flight, the flight engineer balked.

The reason for the skittishness: The general is the good guy, head of Colombia's equivalent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation—and No. 1 on the Medellin drug cartel's hit list. Few care to be nearby when somebody tries again to collect the cartel's $1.9 million bounty for killing him; too many bystanders already have perished in attempts on his life.

"It's traumatizing," says Gen. Maza Marquez, a distant cousin of Nobel Prize winning novelist Gabriel Garcia Marquez. "But it's part of the struggle."

ONE ON ONE

The struggle between Colombia's government and drug lords in some ways has become a personal war between Gen. Maza Marquez and two of the most violent bosses of the cartel.

The general has survived three assassination attempts in the past year and a half. He has outlined one of his chief antagonists, Jose Rodriguez Gacha, a former emerald smuggler known as "the Mexican," who was killed in a police ambush last December. The general's other main foe, Pablo Escobar, the beefy former car thief and hired gun who now leads the cartel, is at large.

Few people doubt that this mano a mano (literally, "hand to hand") is to the death. "Escobar and the Mexican swore that they would finish me off," Gen. Maza Marquez says, pointing through the inchthick bullet-proof window of his fortified office to a debris-filled bomb crater, evidence of one assassination attempt. "But luck has been on my side."

Drug dealers, according to reports the general says he has received, now are trying to recruit a "human bomb," a pilot with a terminal illness willing to crash an explosive-crammed plane into the Departamento Administrativo de Seguridad (DAS, the Administrative Department of Security) that houses the general's office.

"With a price on my head of one billion pesos, anything can happen," the general says, holding in his hand a letter from Mr. Escobar threatening to exterminate the general's family should any harm come to Mr. Escobar's brother, who the general had accused of working for the drug lord. "But I always see the positive side—I'm alive."

More than 500 people have died in Colombia's drug war in the past year. Gen. Maza Marquez, 51, a short, serene, powerfully built but pot-bellied policeman, has been lucky to survive. Sixty-five people died and more than 600 were wounded last December when cartel hit men exploded an estimated 1,200 pounds of dynamite just outside the stark cement high-rise that houses the DAS. "It was like an atomic bomb," says the general.

A few months later, police found about 1,500 pounds of dynamite set to explode in a truck near his Bogota apartment. Last year, he also eluded a bomb in a parked car that blew up as he drove by on the way to work, killing seven bystanders and wounding 50 other people, including the general's bodyguards.

For the past two months drug-war violence has waned here under a unilateral truce declared by the cartel. But there are signs that the truce could be ending. Two weeks ago, a spokesman for the "Extraditables," as the cartel signs itself, announced that it had kidnapped eight people, including Marine Montoya de Perez, the sister of former President Virgilio Barco's chief of staff; Diana Turbay, the daughter of another former president, and Francisco Santos, a scion of Colombia's most important newspaper family. Colombians believe the cartel is holding them prisoner to force the government to extend to them the same kind of olive branch it has shown the country's leftist guerrillas.

If the general is hated by the cartel's "narcos," he is also detested by many Colombian armed forces officers. The narcos and some in the military had forged an alliance to fight a "dirty" war against a common foe, the guerrillas. Gen. Maza Marquez exposed the alliance.

"Maza has dedicated himself to persuading the army and helping subversives," fumes a retired general, sitting in a book-lined study decorated with busts of Napoleon and Simon Bolivar. "The armed forces have been hit hard, and he is hated."

Others think the general saved his country from an unholy tyranny. "At the time, the army was allied to the mafia," says Carlos Ossa, the former head of Colombia's agrarian reform institute. "If Gen. Maza Marquez hadn't denounced the connections between the military and the narcos, we would be kneeling today in front of the mafia. We wouldn't have a democracy today."

In the mid-1980s, the narcos bought up hundreds of thousands of acres in Colombia's countryside and became some of the country's biggest landlords. Their presence in rural Colombia brought them face to face with the guerrillas, who for years had engaged in the kidnapping and extortion of landowners. The narcos refused to negotiate with the guerrillas and entered into a pact, sweetened by money, with the military. The result was the birth of paramilitary groups of killers financed by narcos and trained by military officers as well as Israeli and British mercenaries.

A FIGHT TO WALK

These groups waged a war of extermination against leftist guerrillas and their real or alleged sympathizers. In 1988 more than 600 people, most of them campesinos, or country folk, died in 82 massacres of more than four people each. As a result of the DAS investigation Mr. Escobar, Mr. Rodriguez Gacha, three military officers, a police lieutenant and 11 civilians were indicted for one of the massacres.

Shortly afterward came an assassination attempt against Gen. Maza Marquez.

The general walks with a slight limp—the result of an automobile accident that left him in a wheelchair for two years. Doctors said he would never walk again, and one told the general that he felt pity for him. That, the general couldn't tolerate. "I went home and tried to get up," he says. "Friday and Saturday my legs wouldn't work. On Sunday, I began to take small steps. My life," he adds, "is full of miracles."

On his office wall hangs a large metal crucifix, and on his desk sits a copy of the New Testament. "Pablo Escobar says I an a religious fanatic," he says, fingering the book. "I have entrusted myself to that current which no one sees, but which moves us all—the Divine Child," he says.

Did Jesus Christ save the general's life? "I have no other answer," he responds. But he does have a lot of security. After President Cesar Gaviria, he is the most closely guarded man in Colombia. He lives a rigidly circumscribed life, with travel from his high-rise apartment largely confined to the presidential palace and his office. "I don't go anywhere," he says.

Neighbors wish he would leave. In a letter published in Bogota newspapers after police found the 1,500 pounds of dynamite, they petitioned him to leave, saying his presence endangered a nearby school.

UNWINDING AT LUNCH

Son of an accountant, Gen. Maza Marquez trained to become a professional policeman, having entering the police academy in 1957. In his dual position as a police general and as head of the DAS, he earns salaries totaling about $20,000 a year. As serene as he appears, the general suffers from high blood pressure that a doctor checks every day. Friends are still astonished by his composure. "He is totally calm," says Ramiro de la Espriella, a close friend and columnist for El Espectador, a newspaper whose offices were heavily damaged by a narco bomb last year. "And very firm in his convictions," Mr. de la Espriella adds.

To unwind, Gen. Maza Marquez is host to one or two lunches a month at his office bunker for about a dozen of his friends from Colombia's coast. The food is Caribbean—turtle, red snapper, coconut rice. The drink is Old Parr, a Scotch. On a typical day, the guests include four Supreme Court justices. They spend hours dissecting the events of the day and listening to romantic ballads.

The general's kinsman, novelist Garcia Marquez, has attended two of these affairs. During one, the general says, Mr. Garcia Marquez congratulated him on surviving.

Acquaintances say the general is a product of his birthplace, the mystical and superstitious part of coastal Colombia that Mr. Garcia Marquez has celebrated in his novels. Some credit the general with a sixth sense. "He would say, 'It feels like bombs are going to explode today,'" says Monica de Grieff, a former justice minister. "And they would explode."

With his vast store of dossiers and inside information Gen. Maza Marquez is as feared by some Colombians as much as J. Edgar Hoover was by some Americans. A politician being interviewed in his Bogota home says, "Maza has both my lines tapped. He knows you are here." Told of such talk, the general laughs. "Hoover?" he says, "What is true is that I am a very well-informed Colombian."

American officials with anti-narcotics experience have nothing but praise for him. "I have an enormous amount of respect for the guy," says one.

As the general waits for his deadly duel with Mr. Escobar to resume, he draws some comfort from reports that Mr. Rodriguez Gacha—"the Mexican"—in his last, hunted days, cursed his name. "The Mexican died a lonely man," the general says with satisfaction. As for the future, he is optimistic. "Come see me when you return to Colombia," he tells a visitor. "I should be alive." Then he disappears behind the heavy bullet-proof metal doors of his office.

FORT SUMTER

HON. JOHN M. SPRATT, JR.

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, Shaw Air Force Base, SC, is the headquarters of the 9th Air Force, the Air Force component of Central Command. Shaw is home to the 363d Tactical Fighter Wing and the 507th Tactical Air Control Wing. Both have large deployments in the Persian Gulf.

Those deployed there have named their base Fort Sumter. Staff Sgt. Detroit Whiteside, a member of the 363d Tactical Fighter Wing's public affairs staff, sent the following story to the Sumter Item this week. I offer it for entry in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, because I found it a readable, firsthand account that many others may find informative, as I did.

[From the Sumter (SC) Item, Oct. 11, 1990]

VIRUS, BOREDOM INITIAL ENEMIES OF FORT SUMTER

(Staff Sgt. Detroit Whiteside, a member of the 363rd Tactical Fighter Wing's public affairs staff, sent the following story from "Fort Sumter," the tent headquarters of Shaw's Operation Desert Shield forces in Saudi Arabia. The first Shaw report cleared through military channels for publication, it will appear in this week's edition of The Spirit, the base newspaper.)

(By Staff Sgt. Detroit Whiteside)

The 363rd Tactical Fighter Wing has been practicing for this type of deployment for years. Now, at long last, here we are, Operation Desert Shield '90.

The arrival of the 363rd here did not go off without a hitch. Upon disembarking from the DC-10, the lives of the men and women of the 363rd were turned inside out.

Most service members will tell you that the possibility of armed conflict is always a thought in the back of their mind. But the United States has been a superpower at relative peace for more than 15 years while other countries played catch-up. Most of the men and women who came, many at a moment's notice, have no comparable experience upon which to rely.

The arrival of the 363rd here was not announced. The hosts had no facilities ready for the arrival of troops. The first night, members of the 363rd slept on the dirty, grimy floor of an aircraft hangar—well, they slept as well as one can sleep in a 100-plus-degree sardine can.

They slept as well as they could, wondering what Saddam Hussein's next move would be, how long they would be here—and how many of the long faces that surrounded them now would surround them on the journey home.

The following morning was different. The sardine can was now closer to 120 degrees, but the troops were somewhat rested. Now the real work began. The first order of business was survival. The troops set up Tent City. As more than 20 people had fainted from heat exhaustion, the 363rd learned its first lession in the desert: Stay out of the heat! At least between noon and 5 p.m.

Meals Ready to Eat and water were plentiful. And inside of a week, the tent city was ready for boarders, complete with showers, latrines and a field kitchen. The kitchen provided welcome relief from the dreaded MREs by providing two hot meals a day, in addition to a special Friday meal from downtown every week.

Everyone was busy at their respective jobs, although in make-shift office spaces. But there was still a great obstacle to overcome—boredom!

Most people worked 12-hour shifts (or more), readying for Saddam Hussein's next move. Another tent city went under immediate construction, and taped movies were the rage in Shaw's tent city.

Those who weren't watching the movies were writing letters home. Letters did go out every few days, but initially there was no address for incoming mail. With advent of an address, morale took a gigantic leap upward, both here and at home.

Finally established, the units here are a cohesive, effective military machine whose purpose is clear. The men and women here understand the crisis, and there has been no question as to whether or not the action of this military machine is right or wrong. There were, however, questions as to whether or not this machine had the support of those at home.

This tent city has received thousands of letters and post cards, full of love and "Kool-Aid." The letters touch the hearts of all who read them and drove from those airmen any doubt of support at home.

The "Kool-Aid" helps quench that thirst for a "taste" of home. Only one large problem seemed to infiltrate the camp: diarrhea. But Tent City survived the viral onslaught and the troops are back in action.

Still, no one knows how long they will be here. Most are anxious to return to home soil and their loved ones. But all understand the necessity of their presence here.

WHO'S AFRAID OF INDUSTRIAL POLICY

HON. RICHARD T. SCHULZE

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. SCHULZE. Mr. Speaker, Prof. Chalmers Johnson, of the Univerisity of California's Gruaduate School of International Relations and Pacific Studies at San Diego, has recently written an extremely perceptive and important article on Japan's industrial policy and how it has given that nation a tremendous advantage over the United States and other Western economies.

Professor Johnson also notes how Japan is doing what it takes to win in today's unforgiving global economy, while the United States just sits idly by and watches.

This article deserves the attention of all those who follow the tortuous course of United States-Japan trade and economic relations, and for that reason, I request that it be inserted into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

[From the New York Times, Sept. 16, 1990]

WHO'S AFRAID OF INDUSTRIAL POLICY?

(By Chalmers Johnson)

It is not news that the United States and Japan are on a collision course. In fact, a book entitled "Nichi-bei Shototsu e no Michi," which is roughly translated as "The Japanese-American Collision Course," is a best seller in Tokyo. What is news is that intellectual vested interests stand in the way of clearly recognizing the differences between the two counries and prevent either side from taking appropriate measures to change course.

On the one hand, professional neo-classical economists and an array of lobbyists, apologists, and public-relations specialists claim that the Japanese economy is just like any other capitalist economy. Although they usually do not read a word of Japanese and have made no empirical study of the Japanese economy, they claim that the Japanese just get up earlier, work harder, and save and invest more than their competitors. This school is often known as the "chrysanthemum club."

On the other hand, scholars of the Japanese state bureaucracy—myself included—some American trade negotiators and many American manufacturers who have competed successfully everywhere else except Japan argue that the Japanese economy is different from that described in American economic models. It is what we term a "capitalist developmental state." This school has been dubbed the "revisionists" because its members are attemping to revise orthodox American policy by calling for specific trade measures tailor-made for Japan.

This latter group is beginning to achieve a small measure of success, as seen, for example, in the Bush Administration's Structural Impediments Initiative to open the Japanese market. However, any success by this group is proving extremely painful to the devotees of Adam Smith.

Everyone agrees that many factors have contributed to the collision course between the United States aand Japan and that to single out any one of them as central is a source of error. Both sides stipulate that the United States must soon resume financing its own government, provide incentives for its people to save instead of consume, reorient its engineering from military to commercial products and get serious about educating its labor force. But there is one cause of the trade deficit that the classical economists cannot acknowledge, because it tends to undercut everything they have stood for and might even require that some of them give back their Nobel prizes in economics. That is Japan's industrial policy.

Industrial policy is to English-speaking economists something akin to sin. It means governmental affirmative action on behalf of domestic industry to foster the orderly retreat of declining industries and to build the high-value-added industries of the future. It works on the supply side and takes as its criterion the number of truly valuable jobs held by a nation's workers. It favors computer chips over potato chips.

The Japanese are past masters at industrial policy. The most important command post within their economic general staff, the Ministry of International Trade and Industry, is called the Industrial Policy Bureau.

The prime tools of industrial policy are export incentives, trade barriers to protect the home market, low-cost credit, pro-business environmental and educational policies and unorthodox accounting practices. For private companies going into government-approved industries, there are other incentives, like foreign commercial intelligence services, nationalistic patent policies and a host of other forms of economic covert action. Public subsidies are not very important.

Western economists do not like industrial policy because it interferes with their mathematical models. And in Japan, economic policy is made not by economists but by highly nationalistic state bureaucrats trained at the University of Tokyo Law School.

American politicians do not like industrial policy because it draws attention to one of the most important asymmetries between Japan and the United States: the effectiveness of the Japanese Government in economic affairs as compared with the blundering of Washington. Needless to say, Japanese leaders are not about to draw attention to industrial policy; it is more effective if their competitors do not know what is going on. The Japanese Government thus engages in extensive disinformation on this subject aimed especially at people who do not read Japanese.

Today's challenge goes well beyond the old shibboleths of level playing fields, competitiveness and protectionism. In fact, industrial policy is the antidote to protectionism of important but weak industries like machine tools and robotics.

The idea of a level playing field means that people should play by the same rules. But since the Japanese play by different rules, and since we seem to have had little success in agreeing on what a new set of common rules might look like, we must learn to match rather than imitate them.

The idea currently popular in some American business schools is that American companies lack "competitiveness." Actually, American companies are merely the products of—and are responding to—the short-term incentives and signals sent out by the American political and financial systems. Until these are changed there is no such thing as a company-level solution to the problem of competitiveness.

Japan differs almost completely from the United States in its history of industrialization, the role of the state in it, and the place of economic affairs in national security. Japan is not, however, unique. It is similar to that other great late developer, Germany. Both began intentionally to catch up with the original beneficiaries of the industrial revolution at about the same time, 1868 for Japan and 1870 for Germany. Both have experimented for more than a century with corporate forms of social goal-setting, while retaining the efficiencies of the market. The challenge for American national and corporate economic policy is to recognize this country's difference from Japan and to begin to formulate strategies for managing them. It is also the indispensable first step toward avoiding another national collision.

DOCTOR'S WORK THE BEST MEDICINE

HON. ROBERT H. MICHEL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, often it is those people who receive little public attention, who embody true heroism. Dr. Maude Sanders, Peoria's first black woman doctor, is one of those people. During the last 48 years, she has served the Peoria community with thoughtfulness, caring and dedication, overcoming obstacles that would have deterred others. Dr. Sanders has treated those less fortunate, often without recompense and has taught us all to care more deeply about others. Although she is retiring, her presence will still be felt in our community. I join with Major Jim Maloof and the Peoria community in congratulating Dr. Sanders for her strength, perseverance and her commendable career, and extend to her my best wishes as she enters yet another chapter in her remarkable life.

At this point in the RECORD, I wish to insert "Doctor's Work The Best Medicine" which appeared in the Peoria Journal Star on October 14, 1990.

[From the Peoria (IL) Journal Star, Oct. 14, 1990]

DOCTOR'S WORK THE BEST MEDICINE—PEORIA'S FIRST BLACK WOMAN DOCTOR FOUGHT PREJUDICE TO WIN RESPECT

(By Dean Olsen)

Maude Sanders saw the best and worst in people as Peoria's first black woman doctor.

The best came in the form of friendships with patients, office staff, other doctors and residents of the community.

The worst came in the prejudices she faced in the 1940s and still sees today.

The work, the frustrations, the intricacies of medicine—they consumed her for those 48 years in Peoria. Now, at age 79, after retiring and closing her South Side office last week, she doesn't know how to react without a daily dose of the medical profession's stresses and pleasures.

"I have mixed feelings about it," she said, smiling. "I sometimes feel there's nothing else."

Most of her clients were black. Most of them were poor. She and they faced prejudice together.

Peoria's three hospitals were segregated when she arrived here in 1942, she said, and she often had problems getting her patients admitted because hospitals allotted only a certain number of beds for blacks.

"We resented it," said said. "We fought it for years. They were reluctant to put whites next to blacks. I had patients die before they could get in. They may have died anyway, but they would have been more comfortable."

As a result, she did many procedures in her office that would have been accomplished more easily in a hospital.

In the beginning of her career, she also had problems getting companies to accept the statements she wrote for her patients to certify that they were ill. When her patients obtained statements from white doctors, the notes would be accepted with no questions, she said.

As a matter of personal policy, she never has attended meetings of the Peoria Medical Society. Soon after she arrived in Peoria, she tried to attend meetings but was barred from the Jefferson Hotel, where the society met. She said she was kept out by hotel officials because she was black. She never has forgotten the experience.

Individual doctors, however, have treated her well, she said.

Dr. Irving Favus, a retired physician now acting as a consultant for Methodist Medical Center, is a contemporary of Sanders.

"She was well-respected in the medical community," he said. "She worked long, hard hours. She really took care of the needy and the poor in the city more than anybody else."

Sanders, now a widow living in rural Spring Bay, has had a variety of well-known patients and delivered thousands of babies, among them John Stenson, now a Peoria police captain, and Christopher Duncan, a Peoria County board member and former Peoria police sergeant.

She also cared for Pam Miller, a prominent operator of houses of prostitution in Peoria in the 1960s.

Sanders grew up in New Orleans, where she was born in 1911, the youngest of 10 children. Her father was a carpenter; her mother was a housekeeper and took in laundry at home.

The family was poor, but her father was a good manager of money and the family was self-sufficient, she said. She remembers the family using a huge garden to make sure there was enough food for meals.

Prejudice toward blacks was everywhere, and blacks attended segregated schools and colleges. She was an above-average student but didn't consider medicine as a career when she was young. Being black and a woman, "the odds were really so great that it never really occurred to me," she said. "We really had no role models. The only role models we had were our parents."

The options for women in the working world were extremely limited then. She tried one of the standards—teaching. She attended college and taught for a year in a rural Louisiana school, but left when she was frustrated by the ignorance of the students.

About that time, she divorced the man she had married a year earlier, and took a job in a tailor shop, using the sewing skills she developed as a girl. It was one of her sisters, Naomi, who encouraged her to return to college and pursue medicine. Naomi, now dead, became the wife of Romeo B. Garrett, professor emeritus at Bradley University.

Sanders, who has a keen sense of humor, chuckled and said, "I was interested in the sick," whether they were human or not. From her childhood she remembers putting a splint on a dog's broken leg and nursing a chicken back to health after it swallowed a fishing hook.

She was one of only two women in Meharry College School of Medicine's class of 1939 in Nashville, Tenn. When the women graduated from the black college, they had a hard time finding internships because most programs wouldn't take women.

They both eventually found internships at City Hospital, an all-black hospital in St. Louis. It was the first time the hospital accepted women in internships.

"They really wanted to make it hard for both of us," she said of the hospital officials. "I had no problem being black at a segregated school or institution, but being a woman. . . . I've learned a lot about the male ego."

She wanted an internship in surgery, but the only one available was in urology, so she took it. She said many men on the staff delighted in the embarrassment she felt having to examine men's genitals and treat patients with venereal diseases. But she developed a technique to help male patients and herself avoid embarrassment: she made eye contact with the men only briefly.

Sanders came to Peoria in 1942 by chance. She knew of a black doctor in Peoria who had recently moved to Cairo because his practice wasn't successful. He discouraged her from locating here.

"At that time, the black population in Peoria was small," she said. "The financial situation for blacks was very bad. He advised me not to come here, but I felt like I had to start somewhere."

She opened her first private practice in family medicine at 407½ SW Adams St. above an auto parts store. She later would meet and marry Peoria real estate agent LaVerne Caldwell, with whom she raised an adopted daughter. Caldwell died in 1984.

Sanders often accepted Medicaid patients who wouldn't be accepted by other doctors because Medicaid didn't pay enough. Her income hasn't been as healthy as some doctors' as a result, but she has earned a comfortable living, she said.

Blacks still have unequal access to health care, she believes, because of financial constraints, but she doesn't know any easy answers. Their struggles will continue, just as her struggles continued for 48 years, she said.

But the frustration didn't keep her from enjoying the work and cherishing the memories.

In retirement, Sanders will tend her flower garden, sew, read, and remember.

"I have a lot of friends," she said.

DR. SANDERS DAY WILL BE WEDNESDAY

Wednesday will be Maude Sanders' day—literally.

Sanders, 79, Peoria's first black woman doctor who retired recently, will be honored during a reception at Methodist Medical Center that will include Mayor Jim Maloof, Methodist Vice President Roger Monroe said.

Maloof is expected to issue a proclamation declaring Oct. 17 "Maude Sanders Day" in Peoria, Monroe said. The mayor will join doctors, hospital administrators, community dignitaries and former patients in honoring Sanders for 48 years of service to the community.

"She's been a legend," Monroe said. "She's an institution, and a really nice gal."

The reception, which is open to the public, will be from 1 to 3 p.m. Wednesday in Methodist's board room.

CHILDREN'S TELEVISION ACT OF 1990

HON. EDWARD J. MARKEY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, during the 14 years that I have served in Congress, the status of children's television has been a recurring issue of concern. Advocates for children assert, and many studies confirm, that deregulation of children's television has caused an overall increase in the commercialization of children's television and a decline in educational and informational programming for children. For these reasons I am very pleased that after 4 years of hard work by numerous groups including the national television networks, the National Association of Broadcasters, the Association of Independent Television Stations, numerous public interest groups and, in particular, Action for Children's Television, children's television legislation has become law. H.R. 1677, the Children's Television Act of 1990 reinstates commercial time guidelines during children's programming and provides congressional recognition for the first time that broadcasters have a responsibility to provide programming that serves the real needs of children.

Early this month, world leaders met at the United Nations to discuss the plight of children around the world. The World Summit for Children was an opportunity to discuss the hardships faced by the world's young people and to offer hope and encouragement for their future. In the wake of this important summit for children, it is important and appropriate that the Congress take meaningful steps to harness and utilize the potential of television as an educational tool.

The Children's Television Act of 1990 will provide broadcasters and children's program producers the necessary incentives to educate our Nation's children creatively, rather than to exploit them economically. Television offers a uniquely appropriate medium to assist our Nation's schools and teachers in improving the scholastic achievement of our children. It clearly has been demonstrated that television, used properly, can challenge a child's imagination and intellect, while also providing entertainment.

Recently, two Boston area broadcast stations won awards for creative efforts that used television to educate children about the world in which they live. Earlier this month the National Association of Broadcasters announced the winners of the Service to Children's Television awards, which pay tribute to local television stations for exceptional achievement in children's programming and outreach activities. WCVB-TV Boston received a Best of the Best Award this year for "A Likely Story," judged the best regularly scheduled program. WCVB-TV's winning program introduces children to adventures through a "Magic Book." Children are encouraged to use their own imagination through this program that provides exotic locations, storytellers, singers, and puppet performers.

WHDH-TV, Boston also was honored by the National Association of Broadcasters Children's Television Committee as a winner of a Best of The Best Award for the best public service campaign. "The Ready to Go!" Kids Campaign for Human Rights was a program created in conjunction with Amnesty International. Boston area youth adopted an 18-year-old Yugoslavian student who was jailed after a demonstration over school curriculum. After these children and others wrote 3,500 letters to the Yugoslavian Government urging her release, the young woman was freed.

We must help children create dreams, and we must empower them with the ability and the means to fulfill them. The commitment to the education of our children demonstrated by WCVB-TV and WHDH-TV, Boston, is laudable. I extend my sincere congratulations to both stations, as well as to all the recipients of the "Service to Children's Television" awards, for their commitment to the next generation of American leaders. The children of Boston historically have been well served by Boston area broadcasters. The enactment into law of the Children's Television Act of 1990 will help to ensure that all of America's children are equally well served by their local television stations.

HOW MUCH ABUSE CAN THE CONSTITUTION TAKE?

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, President Bush's decision to face down Iraqi aggression against Kuwait has won the wholehearted support of the United Nations. The United States Congress and the American people, too, have rightfully supported the President's decision to say no to the Iraqi dictator Saddam Hussein. I expected no less. The American people traditionally rally behind the flag and the President when it comes to defending our interest overseas.

But how much better would it have been—and how much more secure would the American people and Congress be in our decision to support the President—if he had come to us with a full explanation of his actions? And would we all not feel a lot more comfortable if the President had taken the trouble to get the Congress' approval before shipping off more than 200,000 of our young people to wait on the sands of Saudi Arabia for a war that hardly anyone wants?

In my view, and that of a growing number of Americans, the use of force must be avoided. A diplomatic solution must be found.

Now that our troops are there, I understand the President is trying to forestall the fire storm of protests from Congress that would probably be unleashed if he chose to take unilateral military action in the gulf. According to reports in the press, the President has been briefing selected Members of Congress on the possible use of force after the Congress adjourns for elections.

The President is correct in his anticipation of a congressional outcry; I for one would protest loud if the Chief Executive opted to initiate another military adventure while no one was minding the store. That is why I have joined with other Members of Congress in asking speaker THOMAS FOLEY to immediately reconvene the House in the event of the outbreak of conflict during the election recess. With thousands of young lives at stake, responsible Government demands Congress' constitutional checks and balances.

The President has twice spirited American military men and women thousands of miles from our shores; each time without the benefit of official prior notification of Congress. Last December during the Christmas holidays, we invaded Panama; and the last August, during the summer vacation, our troops were dispatched to the Persian Gulf. Neither time did the President officially inform the Congress of his full intentions or sought its approval, as required under the War Powers Act.

The War Powers Act of 1974 requires a president who commits U.S. forces to imminent hostility to inform Congress of his actions and get congressional approval within 60 days. In the case of the Persian Gulf, congressional notification would be required this month since our deployment of troops to the Persian Gulf began in August. But if the President repeats his performance in the Panama invasion, we in the Congress would not be made privy to impending war in the Persian Gulf—much less asked for approval. I had not the slightest inkling that 25,000 American troops had landed in Panama until I heard about it on CNN. The President has yet to consult or to inform the Congress officially under War Powers.

My concern about the War Powers Act is far from academic. Following the calamity of Vietnam, the law represents our only protection against unilateral, and potentially disastrous military adventures by the executive branch. The War Powers Act was put in place by the Congress to prevent another tragedy of the kind witnessed in Vietnam.

The law is meant, not to put unreasonable restraints on the President, but to ensure that the entire nation—through the Congress—is informed and consulted first in the event of dire action in the national interest. It was meant to prevent the ruinous political fracturing of the Nation such as occurred over Vietnam, by making sure the Congress—and thus the people—were fully behind the actions of the Commander in Chief.

Sadly, since its passage, the War Powers Act has been ignored by every president who could have used it to his advantage. Instead of abiding by the law to rally official congressional approval for controversial actions, they dodged; each time leaving our foreign policy open to charges of domestic as well as international lawlessness. So far, President Bush seems to be continuing in that tradition.

Such was the case in Nicaragua, where the CIA mined the harbor of Managua in support of the Contras who were then at war with the government. The World Court judged that action to be in violation of international law. Because the War Powers Act was not adhered to in that case, we will never know whether Congress might have advised against that secret action, and thus saved the United States the embarrassment of being branded an international outlaw.

Likewise, the Congress was not consulted in the bombing of Libya, an action that was politically popular but illegal because it violated our own restrictions against covert acts of war by the CIA. That was followed by the equally popular invasion of Grenada, an adventure which cost American lives and was clearly illegal because Congress never gave its approval for that blatant act of war.

And most recently Panama. The greatest deployment of American troops and military hardware since Vietnam and before the Persian Gulf, the Panama invasion cost at least 23 American lives and thousands of Panamanian casualties. Twenty-three lives are twenty-three too many. But that is a small figure compared to the deaths that will result from a clash in the desert, where 24 Americans have already been lost in accidents. The United Nations and the Organization of American States condemned our invasion of Panama as illegal. But it too will go down in the books as something less than war because Congress was never consulted and never approved.

There is no arguing the fact that each of these adventures made the American people feel good, and so they were popular politically and in the polls. But what did they do for our moral and legal standards, for the Constitution that is the sole and strongest protector of our Democracy? I dare say they weakened them, and brought us closer to that place where we have no moral ground to stand on and no Constitution to protect us.

What good does it do us as a nation to break our own laws while claiming to defend the sovereignty of Kuwait? How do we support American standards of justice and morality if, in defending the rest of the world, we offend the very Constitution that protects us at home?

After all, how much abuse can the Constitution take?

ETHICS IN FOREIGN LOBBYING ACT

HON. FRANK J. GUARINI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. GUARINI. Mr. Speaker, every year foreign nationals spend hundreds of millions of dollars on lawyers, lobbyists, and consultants to press their interests in Washington, yet we have no way to track and analyze the flow of money into our political system.

The Ethics in Foreign Lobbying Act which I am introducing today will remedy this situation by establishing a clearinghouse for information on foreign lobbying activities. Moreover, it will ensure that foreign-controlled corporations and trade associations do not have undue influence in the Federal elections process.

The legislation has three important components:

First, it establishes a clearinghouse, within the Federal Elections Commission, for the collection and disclosure of information regarding the lobbying activities of foreign nationals, foreign-controlled corporations, and individuals representing foreign principals;

Second, it amends the Federal Elections Campaign Act of 1971 to prohibit contributions from political action committees controlled by corporations that are at least 50 percent owned by persons other than U.S. citizens; and

Third, it bans trade associations which derive more than 50 percent of their budgets from foreign-owned corporations from making political contributions.

In establishing this clearinghouse, we are creating a greatly needed central point for collecting information regarding foreign lobbying activities. Most of the information we are seeking is already being collected by the Department of Justice, the Bureau of Economic Analysis, Federal Election Commission, the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate. However, it is housed in a myraid of Federal agencies and offices. Moreover, the information is not available in a form that allows it to be easily analyzed. A clearinghouse for the collection and disclosure of foreign lobbying information is critical to monitoring and tracking the flow of foreign funds into the political process.

In amending the Federal Elections Campaign Act, we are updating and clarifying our current campaign laws. Since 1975, the Federal Election Commission has sought guidance and clarification from the Congress regarding the participation of foreign nationals in the Federal elections process. The current law is open to conflicting interpretations that have led to the establishment of PAC's by a Panamanian pharmaceutical company, a Japanese business association in California and a Philippine sugar company owned by a close friend of Ferdinand Marcos.

This is clearly contrary to the intent of the Congress when it prohibited the participation of foreign nationals in the election process. However, due to the ambiguity of our current laws, foreign-controlled corporations or trade associations can legally solicit voluntary contributions from their membership or employees for political purposes. The principle restriction on their solicitation is that they can only solicit funds from U.S. citizens and only U.S. citizens can operate the PAC's.

It would be extremely naive to believe that in a corporation where more than 50 percent of the ownership is comprised of non-U.S. citizens or in a trade association where more than 50 percent of the operating fund is derived from foreign-controlled corporations, that there does not exist the clear potential for influence and subtle coercion from non-U.S. citizens regarding the disposition of funds used in American elections.

This legislation will put an end to undue foreign influence and coercion. It will make it clear that subsidiaries of foreign corporations whose foreign ownership exceeds 50 percent, and trade associations which derive more than 50 percent of their operating budgets from foreign-controlled corporations are not welcome to participate in the campaign process.

Campaign reform is vital to maintaining the integrity of our political process. Establishing a clearinghouse to monitor foreign lobbying efforts and banning contributions from foreign-controlled corporations and trade associations are integral parts of that reform. For these reasons, I strongly urge my colleagues to support the Ethics in Foreign Lobbying Act.

KINGWOOD PRINCIPAL DIANE LAZARINE HONORED

HON. JACK FIELDS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, Diane Lazarine, principal of the Woodland Hills Elementary School in Kingwood, TX, was in Washington today to receive the Department of Education's 1990 Distinguished Principals Award. Diane is one of just 60 elementary and middle school principals to be honored by the Department of Education.

While the selection process varies from State to State, the Department of Education provides general criteria that the States use to select recipients of the award.

The award recognizes outstanding public and private elementary and middle school principals with at least 5 years experience whose commitment to excellence in education is superior. The award was conceived in 1984 by the National Association of Elementary School Principals as a means of recognizing outstanding principals whose performance and dedication were exceptional.

Diane is fully deserving of the recognition which has been accorded her, and I congratulate her on winning this award.

Mr. Speaker, in this time when more and more Americans are coming to understand this importance of quality schools, it is important for all of us to remember that quality schools are impossible without dedicated, highly motivated and enthusiastic school principals. While individual classroom teachers are the front line in the effort to educate our children, it's all too easy to forget that teachers themselves need guidance and reinforcement—and that's where our principals can really make a difference in determining the quality of an individual school.

Diane has made Woodland Hills Elementary School a place where teachers and students are equally enthusiastic, in which learning is fun and in which classroom teachers are challenged to find new and innovative ways to impart knowledge to their students. Her leadership promises to have a positive influence on thousands of students for many years to come, and for that Diane deserves our thanks.

Mr. Speaker, I know that you join with me in wishing Diane Lazarine, this year's other 59 winners of the National Distinguished Principals Award, and all our Nation's principals the very best now and in the future.

INTERNATIONAL CREDIT UNION DAY

HON. BUD SHUSTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to, at this time, address the House with reference to Letterkenny Federal Credit Union.

Letterkenny Army Depot is the largest employer in Franklin County, PA, its growth has meant a great deal to the economic health of the Chambersburg, PA, area and the depot has played a part in America's victory in the cold war. While this facility has supported the country since World War II, it was not until 1965 that employees at the facility banded together to support themselves and their own futures by successfully establishing a credit union at the depot.

In the midsixties, the 15 founders of the credit union contributed the $40 necessary to get their charter from the Bureau of Federal Credit Unions. On January 4, 1965, charter No. 16574 was granted to establish Letterkenny Federal Credit Union. The newly formed credit union boasted 32 members and assets of $3,317 and a potential membership of about 5,000 including employees of the depot, major item data agency and the post restraurant.

After 1 month, membership in the credit union had grown to 477 with assets of $17,463. By June of the same year the credit union membership had grown to over 1,000. Much of this phenomenal growth was handled by volunteers dedicated to the development of the credit union and embodying the spirit of the credit union movement, "not for profit, not for charity, but for service."

It was at the suggestion of members the Letterkenny Federal Credit Union that the Cumberland Chapter of Credit Unions was established to promote credit union development in the beautiful Cumberland Valley. Letterkenny Federal Credit Union began the 1970's with $1 million in deposits and a dream of $5 million by 1975, they surpassed that goal by $1 million and have continued to grow ever since.

Letterkenny Federal Credit Union has always put the customer first. They began their service by offering only interest bearing savings accounts and signature loans. Over the years they added share-draft checking, auto loans and first mortgages. They have moved from a single cubical and an Army field safe to a multibranch credit union with automatic teller machines and credit card services. This credit union has grown over the past 25 years from a handful of members to well over 30,000, all of this has been possible because a small group of volunteers banded together to improve the effectiveness, morale, stability, and efficiency of the depot personnel.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to attend a gathering with Letterkenny Federal Credit Union today, in celebration of International Credit Union Day, but my congressional duties keep me here in Washington. I would like to, at this time, thank not only past and present credit union employees but also all of the other enterprising souls who have worked diligently to improve the economic stability of Pennsylvania's Ninth Congressional District.

TRIBUTE TO DR. VINCENT E. REED

HON. JULIAN C. DIXON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I join the Los Angeles Chapter of the West Virginia State College Alumni Association in paying special tribute to the outstanding accomplishments of Dr. Vincent E. Reed. This is a well-deserved commendation for an individual who has dedicated his talent and commitment to educational excellence and community service.

An innovative and productive educator and administrator, Vincent Reed's selfless dedication to educational achievement enabled him to build a long and illustrious career. In 1956, he began his career with the District of Columbia Public School System and served as a teacher, assistant director of the Manpower Development Training Program, assistant principal of Dunbar High School, assistant principal and principal of Woodrow Wilson High School, assistant superintendent of personnel, and executive assistant superintendent in charge of all secondary schools. Because of his superior organizational and administrative skills, he was called upon to organize and head the first Security Office for the D.C. school system and the newly created Office of State Administration where he served as associate superintendent. In 1976, Dr. Reed was appointed Superintendent of the D.C. public school system.

Vincent is a versatile, competent, and well respected administrator who has continuously demonstrated his unflagging commitment toward improving the quality of education in this country. These qualities were particularly recognized in March 1981 when Dr. Reed was appointed by President Reagan to serve as assistant secretary of Elementary and Secondary Education. In 1982, he joined the Washington Post as vice president for communications where he has continued his involvement in community service and charitable events.

Born in St. Louis, MO, Vincent was educated in the St. Louis public schools, Iowa University, West Virginia State College, Howard University, Wharton School of Finance and Commerce of the University of Pennsylvania, Virginia State College, and the University of Massachusetts.

Vincent Reed's genuine commitment and dedication to educational achievement have not gone unnoticed. He has received many public service and education awards. Among the awards and commendations he has received for his distinguished contributions are the honorary degrees of doctor of public administration by Southeastern University, doctor of humanities by West Virginia State College, doctor of humane letters by Georgetown University, doctor of humane letters by Strayer College, doctor of laws by the University of the District of Columbia, and doctor of humane letters by Harris-Stowe University. To complement his outstanding achievements, he has published articles on educational topics, is an accomplished public speaker, and serves on the board of trustees of a number of colleges and universities. He is affiliated with many education and community service organizations and is also listed in Who's Who in America.

Dr. Vincent Reed is a living example that diligence and a commitment to excellence can indeed be rewarding. He is a man well respected and admired in the District of Columbia and around the Nation. He has accomplished a remarkable career of public service and is truly deserving of the honor bestowed on him by the West Virginia State College Alumni Association of Los Angeles. I salute his distinguished contributions and wish him continued success in his future endeavors.

UNITED STATES-MEXICO BORDER HEALTH AND ENVIRONMENT ACT

HON. MORRIS K. UDALL

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 5363, the United States-Mexico Border Health and Environment Act. This legislation, introduced by Representative RON COLEMAN, would establish an organizational unit within the State Department to plan, develop, finance, and implement programs that address health and environmental problems along the border of the United States and Mexico.

The environmental health concerns along the United States-Mexico border are not new to me or the Second Congressional District of Arizona, and unfortunately the problem continues to worsen. Earlier this month Santa Cruz County passed a resolution declaring a state of emergency in their county due to raw sewage contamination of the Nogales Wash that flows across the border from Nogales, Sonora, Mexico into the city of Nogales, AZ.

The situation in Nogales is serious. The Arizona Department of Environmental Quality has been monitoring the water quality by testing for fecal coliform on a routine basis. The results this summer reached alarmingly high levels. As an example, a water sample taken from the Nogales Wash on August 15 showed a fecal coliform count of greater than 1,600,000 (CFU/100ml). Arizona's limit of fecal coliform is 4,000 (CFU/100ml).

Across-the-border sanitation problems are currently within the jurisdiction of the International Boundary Water Commission [IBWC]. They are well aware of the situation in Nogales and, in fact, will be meeting with me next week in that regard.

Nonetheless, Mr. COLEMAN'S legislation is of critical importance to further address the personal and public health hazards related to these squalid environmental conditions. A recent article in the Journal of American Medical Association had this to say:

The American Medical Association finds the environmental health problems of the U.S.-Mexico border to be of major magnitude; the American Medical Association advises Congress that a permanent U.S.-Mexico border environmental health commission is essential for the necessary concerted actions to deal with this major threat to the health of both nations.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 5363 would accomplish this task. It would establish a commission to be headed by a coordinator appointed by the President. Additionally, the bill would call for the Secretary of State to negotiate with Mexico so that they would appoint a coordinator with the same responsibilities. In this way we could develop joint solutions to the various environmental and subsequent health problems that exist along the border. I urge my colleagues to join me in support of this legislation.

TRIBUTE TO BETTY HAUPT

HON. JOHN P. MURTHA

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, I was very sorry to learn that last Tuesday, October 9, Mrs. Betty Haupt of Somerset, PA, passed away. She was a remarkable and dedicated person who took great pride in her community.

Approximately 35 years ago, Betty and her late husband, Dr. Earl Haupt, bought a log cabin, maple sugar camp, and building and moved these nearby their property to serve as a museum. Mrs. Haupt devoted her life to encouraging broad public participation in the historical and cultural heritage of Somerset County.

Mrs. Haupt served as program director of the Somerset Historical Center for several years. She and her late husband donated land and artifacts to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to develop this center. Betty worked for the center on a volunteer basis and sometimes worked up to 80 hours a week volunteering her time for the center.

Betty spent a good portion of her time working with both old and young to stimulate their interest in the history of our region. She received honors for her work with educational programs and designed a course "Teaching Local History in the Classroom." Mrs. Haupt founded Mountain Craft Days 10 years ago which has become a major Somerset County attraction.

Betty has been very active over the last several years with America's Industrial Heritage Commission—our nine county commission which focuses on the development and interpretation of the iron, steel, coal, and transportation themes within our region. She was the Somerset County representative and served on the cultural resources and tourism and marketing committees of the Industrial Heritage Project. She was also the head of the Somerset County Industrial Heritage Committee, Somerset County's local committee which identifies important Somerset County projects for the regional commission.

Mrs. Haupt was involved with the State heritage parks program which highlights regions of the State with exemplary cultural, historic, and recreational resources. She also served as a technical advisor for many small groups within the region giving them guidance and direction.

Mrs. Haupt also served on the Somerset County Chamber of Commerce, was the chairperson of the Somerset County Tourism Committee, was active with the Somerset County Planning Commission, a representative for Somerset Council on the Travel Council of Southern Alleghenies Commission, and director of education for the Historical and Geneological Society of Somerset County.

In 1974, Betty received the Outstanding Person of the Year Award presented by the Somerset County Chamber of Commerce. In 1980, she was given a Public Service Award by the Somerset County Grange. She also received the Southern Alleghenies Planning and Development Commission Travel Award in 1987.

As you can see, Betty's accomplishments and determination was endless. Betty will be dearly missed by all of us who had the pleasure to know and work with her. Her integrity and leadership was in the highest tradition of public service. Her commitment and sincerity was commendable. Our area will never be the same without her.

HONORING THE 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE WILLIAMSTOWN, MA, LIONS CLUB

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to one of the finest chapters in the world of Lions International. I am very pleased and proud to announce that on October 20 the Williamstown Lions Club of Williamstown, MA, will celebrate the 50th anniversary of its charter.

Throughout its five decades, the Williamtown Lions Club has established a history of good will. This chapter has continued to provide very important services to its community through their time and generosity. The services are not only needed but, I daresay, they are vital to the northwestern corner of Massachusetts. The Williamstown Lions Club provides services to the young and the old, to the sick and the poor, and does so indiscriminately.

I believe that the Lions Club can potentially walk hand-in-hand with someone right through life. It can be said that the Lions Club of Williamstown can help guide a youngster through his or her formative years and then help that same person enjoy the golden years of life, or in some cases, make those years pass more peaceably.

Mr. Speaker, there are many examples that I could expound upon to you and to my colleagues here on the House floor but let me give you just a few. The Williamstown Lions have sponsored youth basketball and Little Leagues. Recently, the Lions have initiated programs in the schools dealing with drug abuse. They have donated their time to YMCA camps and since 1940 they have sponsored a July 4th celebration. Most importantly, the Williamstown Lions have been charitable benefactors of eye research, leaders in the eye donor program and charitable to local people in need of eye care.

Mr. Speaker, the Williamstown Lions Club has gone above and beyond the call of duty. Their civicmindedness has been nothing short of outstanding. I want to take this opportunity to salute the past and present members of the Lions Club for their half-century of service and fraternity. I wish the Williamstown Lions Club many more years of continued success.

THE 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF ST. CONRAD'S SOCIETY OF WILKES-BARRE, PA

HON. PAUL E. KANJORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the St. Conrad's Society on its 100th anniversary.

It was in a wooden, German Catholic Church in November 1890 that 29 men joined together and founded St. Konrad's Verein, named in honor of St. Conrad of Bavaria. Years later the name would be angloized to Saint Conrad's Y.M. Society and the society would relocate to the opposite side of the street to its present location.

The society was and is very active in the community. Members participate in a variety of activities, represent the society in an array of competitions and every year join together at many social events.

However, more importantly, the members of the St. Conrad's Society really show their community spirit in times of need. In 1972, after the Agnes flood devastated the Wilkes-Barre community, the society banded together. They came to the aid of their friends and neighbors, helping to clean up and restore the area.

In addition, the society participates in a priority project it developed which contributes financial support to God's Special Children, children who receive religious education instructions at nearby St. Nicholas Church.

Mr. Speaker, it is easy to see why the St. Conrad's Society has been around for 100 years, and with the continuation of the community spirit and traditional sense of neighborliness, I am sure it will be around for at least 100 more.

SAFETY OF IMPORTED MEAT

HON. BYRON L. DORGAN

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to join Representative PAT

WILLIAMS in introducing legislation tightening the inspection system for imported meat and poultry. The bill will require that U.S. personnel inspect meat and poultry products offered for import into the United States. It will ensure the integrity of and consumer confidence in the U.S. food supply.

This action has been made necessary by the apparent determination of the USDA to abandon food safety laws and its responsibility to the public in its zeal for the Free Trade Agreement. The USDA says that the current statute allows the Secretary to designate responsibility of inspection to anyone, including a foreign government. It maintains that U.S. inspectors aren't necessary to assure the safety and wholesomeness of imported meat.

The USDA is ready to allow meat under the regulatory jurisdiction of a foreign government to enter any State in the United States without reinspection. Currently, the USDA doesn't even allow meat products inspected by State agencies to cross State lines without Federal inspection.

Surely it was Congress' intent when it enacted the Federal Meat Inspection Act [FMIA] that imported meat undergo Federal inspection. Historically, the U.S. regulatory system has provided uniform inspections for United States and imported products, protecting the health and welfare of U.S. consumers, and assuring a level playing field among competitors. The meat inspectors are trained by the U.S. Government and work for it. They answer to the American public. But the USDA has decided that because of a loophole in the FMIA, it can change all that.

Border inspections are not detrimental to trade. On the contrary, they give American consumers confidence in their food supply and thereby benefit producers. They provide a critical backup when the inspection system of a trading partner fails, as happened recently when a single shipment of contaminated Canadian meat was refused three times by United States inspectors. Without our inspection requirements, this meat would have contaminated our food supply.

We need to make sure that the integrity of the U.S. meat supply remains intact. I urge my colleagues to reaffirm their commitment to safe food supplies and support this legislation.

RELIEF OF MARCELINO SERNA

HON. RONALD D. COLEMAN

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation for the relief of Mr. Marcelino Serna of El Paso, TX. My bill would make Mr. Serna eligible for the award from the Army of the Congressional Medal of Honor by stipulating that the regulation which says that a nomination for that award must be filed within 2 years of the acts "above and beyond the call of duty" should be waived in this case. In my judgment, Mr. Serna deserves that medal just as surely as anyone who has ever been so honored.

Marcelino Serna served in the U.S. Army from 1917 to 1919. He was born in Chihuahua City, in the Mexican state of Chihuahua, in 1896. He is now 94 years old and has held U.S. citizenship since 1924. Seventy-one years ago, Mr. Serna was awarded the Army's second highest award for valor in combat, the Distinguished Service Cross. He was decorated with the highest military medals of Italy and France. The descriptions of his exploits on the battlefields of Belgium and France read like casebooks of heroism. In recovering from wounds suffered toward the end of the war, he was personally decorated by Gen. John "Black Jack" Pershing.

Some have speculated that Mr. Serna was not award the Medal of Honor either because he was a buck private for most of the war, because he was not a citizen of this country at the time, or because he could not speak English well. I hope that none of these reasons was ever given by anyone in a position of authority in these matters. They are insulting and they have no basis in law.

This bill, once enacted, would begin to right a wrong—and to correct an oversight. I urge the committee of jurisdiction to take up the legislation as rapidly as possible so that the Army may look at the merits of this case.

AN INTERESTING AND PROMISING RECYCLING INITIATIVE

HON. FRANK HORTON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to call attention to an interesting and promising recycling initiative undertaken by the Green Bay Packaging Co., the Xerox Corp., and IBM. These three companies have developed a practical use for recycled waste office paper.

The product is called Eco-White and it is used in the manufacturing of cardboard boxes. At the request of Xerox and IBM, the Green Bay Packaging Co. developed a process to convert used office paper into the white linerboard material used as the outer surface layer of corrugated shipping containers.

American companies throw away an estimated 4.5 million tons of office waste paper each year. Eco-White could put a substantial dent in that figure. It draws its supplies from a market which has only been minimally tapped since only 5 percent of offices in this country are currently involved in recycling programs. One hurdle preventing more firms from participating is the lack of demand for recycled fibers. Eco-White will create that demand.

Furthermore, the repulping process used to turn copier paper into Eco-White is better for the environment. By avoiding de-inking, the process saves 25 percent of energy and water use and results in a 200-percent reduction in solid waste.

Perhaps the most important aspect of the Eco-White process is that it is private-sector driven. Eco-White is an example of what can be accomplished by the private sector when left to find their own solutions to a burgeoning problem.

I would like to salute the three corporations responsible for this product: Xerox, IBM, and the Green Bay Packaging Co. By working together to address the solid waste problem which confronts not just them, but all Americans, these three have performed a valuable public service.

It is not surprising that two of these companies, Xerox and IBM, are winners of the Malcolm Baldridge Quality Award. Both firms needed to demonstrate an exceptional commitment to quality in order to win this distinguish award. With the development of Eco-White, it is apparent that both are as committed to public service and the environment as they are to quality.

BETTY T. EGAN

HON. BILL RICHARDSON

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, on the occasion of National Business Women's Week, I would like my colleagues to join me in congratulating Betty T. Egan, who was recently chosen Santa Fe Business Woman of the Year by the Capital City Business and Professional Women.

Widowed as a young mother, she followed her dream of life in the West to Santa Fe, where she founded Rancho Encantado in Tesuque north of the city. It has grown into one of the major resorts in the Southwest

Mrs. Eagan was the first woman fire chief in the country as head of the Tesuque Volunteer Fire Department. A grandmother for many years, she is credited with fostering the growth and continued educational excellence at Tesuque Elementary School.

She is an active member of the American Red Cross, and is one of only two women to serve on the American Hotel and Motel Association resort committee. She has become a familiar figure in the Santa Fe community, and is an inspiration to many of our young businesswomen and working mothers.

Mr. Speaker, as we salute working women this week, I suggest to my colleagues that Betty Egan is a superior example of success and grace in adversity.

DAWN GOERING A SUPERWOMAN

HON. SHERWOOD L. BOEHLERT

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Speaker, ask the average person what his image of a hero is and you would probably get a pretty typical response: "Faster than a speeding bullet, more powerful than a locomotive, able to leap tall buildings in a single bound."

Mrs. Dawn Goering of Rome, NY is such a woman. Energy and enthusiasm faster than a speeding bullet; a desire to succeed more powerful than a locomotive; and through her enthusiasm and teachings, she lifts those around her higher than the tallest building. Sure she's a superwoman, and what's more amazing is Mrs. Goering has multiple sclerosis.

Recently, Dawn Goering was featured in Airman magazine's special issue featuring the "Unsung Heroes" of family members and personnel in the Air Force. Dawn is the wife of Col. Robert G. Goering, who is stationed at Griffiss Air Force Base, located in an area of Central New York I am proud to represent.

Diagnosed with multiple sclerosis in 1987, Mrs. Goering refused to allow a debilitating disease to stop her from doing what she loves—teaching. Today, as a literacy volunteer she continues to work to improve her community. A tireless volunteer for noble causes, she often can be found visiting local nursing homes, or helping out at blood drives at the base. Her body may be weakening, yet her spirit can never be broken.

Multiple sclerosis afflicts more than a quarter-million Americans, mostly women starting in their 20s and 30s. While rarely life-threatening and not contagious, it is debilitating. Slurred speech, blurred or double vision and muscle weakness are a few of the symptoms. On top of Dawn Goering's hectic schedule of community service, she exercises each morning and undergoes physical therapy each week to slow the disease's effects.

We can all learn a lot from Dawn Goering. She has overcome obstacles in her way not just for herself, but for the good of everyone she touches. Mrs. Goering said it best, "I concentrate on what I can do, not what I can't," she added, "I must admit, though, I wish I could remember what it feels like to run."

Keep up the great work Dawn Goering. I don't think you have forgotten how to run. How else could you have gotten so far ahead of all of us.

AUTHORIZING THE CAHUILLA BAND OF INDIANS TO LEASE LANDS FOR UP TO 99 YEARS

HON. ALFRED A. (AL) McCANDLESS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. McCANDLESS. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation which will allow the Cahuilla Band of Indians in my district to lease the land held in their trust for up to 99 years. This is an important step in allowing the Cahuillas to exercise a greater degree of self-determination for the benefit of their members and future generations.

At the present time, Indian lands may be leased with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, for public, religious, educational, recreational, residential or business purposes. Unfortunately, for the Cahuillas, the length of leases may extend only 25 years, with an option to renew for an additional 25 years, again with the approval of the Secretary, Even with the option of a 50-year lease, the Cahuillas are precluded from obtaining the most favorable terms of financing and thus are at a disadvantage in fully benefitting from development possibilities.

The Cahuilla Band of Mission Indians are located in Southrwestern Riverside County. Their net acreage is a little over 18,000 acres. Congress has already allowed nearly 30 other tribes to have the option of leasing their land up to the 99 year limit. This is a natural progression and evolution for tribes which desire increases self-sufficiency that results from the ability to obtain better financing terms.

In the words of the Cahuillas, "in order for the Tribe and its members to achieve the highest and best use of their land and the maximum economic return, financing of long-term, large scale commercial development will require leases of approximately 65 years."

The expansion of home and communities in Riverside County has exploded in recent years. In anticipation of the need to plan their future, the Cahuilla Indians have organized workshops and meetings with neighboring Indian tribes and the Bureau of Indian Affairs. These activities have been going on for the past 2 years in preparation for a comprehensive development plan. Such a development plan is now in the process of being formulated as is an overall economic development plan for the Cahuilla Band of Mission Indians. I am convinced that this tribe is well prepared to grapple with the complex issue of expanding the use of their lands.

I am proud, Mr. Speaker to introduce this bill on behalf for Cahuillas. The extension of the terms of leasing these tribal lands in vitally important and well deserved by the Cahuilla Indians.

SAN BERNARD ELECTRIC COOPERATIVE ACHIEVES A RECORD OF 1 MILLION HOURS WORKED WITHOUT LOST TIME BECAUSE OF INJURIES

HON. GREG LAUGHLIN

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. LAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride that I recognize the employees of the San Bernard Electric Cooperative, incorporated in Bellville, TX, for setting a record they worked 5 years to achieve. From November 6, 1985, to September 30, 1990, these fine people have worked more than 1 million hours without lost time because of injuries.

This impressive achievement reflects the commitment these people have to the safety of their peers and the reputation of the cooperative. The team spirit the cooperative's employees have in their daily work is exemplary and enviable to all who strive to maintain a successful working relationship between business operators and the consumers they service.

The San Bernard Electric Cooperative employees have worked harmoniously for many years servicing the residents of Austin, CO, Lavaca, Waller, and parts of Grimes and Montgomery Counties. I am extremely proud to recognize the commitment to safety these people have pledged to each other and the cooperative, and I am especially proud of the fact that they are residents of the 14th District of Texas.

TRIBUTE TO CAROL RESCHKE

HON. DENNIS M. HERTEL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, October 18, 1990

Mr. HERTEL. Mr. Speaker, it is with great esteen that I rise today to honor Carol Reschke who, on October 25, will be recognized as the distinguished citizen of the year of Troy, MI.

Carol is receiving this honor on account of her exemplary spirit of voluntarism. She is currently a member of the board of directors of the Boy's and Girl's Club of Troy. Some years ago, Carol served as president of this organization. In addition, Carol was previously the president of the Michigan Child Study Association and she now serves as the president of the local chapter.

Not only is Carol a committed volunteer, but she is also a strong member of her church, a loving mother, and a responsible employee. She is parishioner of St. Anastasia and chair of the Mission Commission. This group is responsible for choosing the activities and projects with which St. Anastasia's will be involved.

Carol and her husband, Ernest Reschke, are the parents of five children, Chip, Jayne, Matt, Susan, and Beth. Her children are all grown up now, but that does not stop them from being a big part of their mother's life. Carol is as devoted to her family now as she was when they were all little children.

Carol is employed by the Evergreen Counseling Center in Birmingham, MI. She aptly fulfills the duties of the office manager for this organization. There is no doubt that Carol is as good a worker as she is a volunteer and a mother.

Carol Reschke has served the Troy community for a long time and now it is time to thank her. The honor bestowed on her, Troy's Distinguished Citizen of the Year for 1990, is greatly deserved. My dear colleagues, I ask you to join me in extending sincere congratulations and gratitude, to a person who has given so much to so many.
